Wentworth, in the interim, has discovered the smugglers, and is badly worsted in an encounter with Davis, whom he recognizes as the murderer of the cashier. The two officers arrive at the spot shortly after the struggle, and Davis opens fire on them. They mortally wound him and he is carried into the cabin, where they arrest Wentworth. Davis, after confessing that he killed the cashier, and that Wentworth is innocent, dies. Wentworth is taken back to the post and is cleared of the crime in presence of the chief and his brother. He is then restored to his former position in the Minneapolis bank.

Warner Back From Long Trip

President of Warner's Feature Film Company Takes Optimistic View of Feature Film Market—Believes in American Feature.

MR. A. WARNER, president of the Warner Feature Film Company, has just returned to New York City, after an extended trip to the Coast. On the way he visited some twenty of the largest cities of this country and made, in passing, a careful study of the market conditions in so far as the feature film is concerned. Mr. Warner's long experience in the motion picture business enables him to understand the signs and portents and to form a safe opinion of conditions as they are presented. Knowing Mr. Warner to be in close touch with his market, the Moving Picture World is pleased to give space to his very intelligent, though optimistic, views upon the "feature" situation:

"At the outset I wish to state that, while I believe in features, and while I believe that they have done more than any other agency to raise the price of admission from 5 to 10 cents, I nevertheless contend that the market is yet undeveloped. It has taken the American manufacturer a long time to convince exhibitors that American-made features are what they want, and that they are the equal, if not the superior, of foreign productions in two and three reels.

Mr. A. Warner.

"Perhaps there is no other word one might cull from the inspired advertising of film producers that is more abused than this same term, 'feature.' A motion picture in two or three reels may or may not be a feature production. Indeed, in the majority of cases that term is a misnomer. There are so-called features that do not deserve more than a single reel, and there are also some, I regret to state, that should never have been produced at all. Why? you ask. Simply because an ordinary story has been padded and made to extend over 3,000 feet of film. But the true feature has 'punch.' It expresses originality. It teems with exciting situations. It over-awes spectators with its massiveness. It embodies the unusual, the spectacular and the thrilling incidents that lift it above the ordinary single-reel production and entitle it to the name of 'feature.'

"During my visits in twenty American cities I found the demand for features of the best quality on a par with the supply. That would seem to indicate that in a very short time the market will be overcrowded. But such is not the case. The explanation of that statement is this: The exhibitor of today has developed a keen sense of criticism, and after catering to his audiences he is in the best position to know just what pictures they want, and also what productions are going to bring him the money. He will not accept for showing any production that does not come up to his requirements. By the simple process of elimination, about two-thirds of the so-called features on the market are turned down by him as unworthy. And then for every new feature that is produced there must be at least a score or so of exhibitors who have just discovered that they must run features in connection with their regular shows or sit back and see the crowds go into their competitor's house.

"My trip convinces me of two very important things, namely: that American features, made in America by American actors and actresses, now have the call over those made abroad; and, secondly, that the future demand for features (applying the term to those productions that deserve it) is going to surprise and force the manufacturers into a field of endeavor that they have hitherto regarded with very little consideration. I confidently expect to see every first-class motion picture theater in the country using at least one feature in its daily program within the next two or three years, and I think that my statement will not be disputed when I make the assertion that it is due to the feature production that the exhibitor with the small house is winning out against the opposition of exhibitors with larger houses."

While in Los Angeles, Cal., Mr. Warner opened a branch office in that city, with Sam Barnett as manager. In Denver arrangements for another branch were completed, with J. C. Butts in charge. The branch at Kansas City, Mo., has been moved to Suite 413 and 414 of the Gloyd Building, the change being made necessary by the growth of the business, which required larger quarters.

George W. Smiley has gone to Washington, D. C., to take charge of a branch office just opened in the Plaza Theater Building, that city.

Mr. Warner was accompanied on his "grand tour" by his delightful wife, and both enjoyed the trip immensely, Mrs. Warner returning greatly improved in health.

BRAVES FLOODS TO GET FILMS.

During the recent Ohio floods, Warner's Features shipped one of its feature pictures to Cleveland, but it failed to arrive on time. Inquiries revealed that the pictures were tied up in a wreck somewhere along the line near Akron. As the picture had been released for a three days' run at the Alhambra Theater, Fostoria, it was almost imperative that a delivery should be made if possible. Accordingly, Manager Charnas, of the Warner's Cleveland office, dispatched Sam Wheeler, one of the trusted employes of the office, to recover the picture. Nine hours were consumed in getting from Cleveland to Akron. Then came the task of locating the wrecked train which was carrying the films. The trip had to be made on foot over roads otherwise impassable. Along the way Wheeler passed the wrecks of houses and barns, uprooted trees, fallen telegraph poles and tangles of wires, finally locating the train three miles and a half from Akron. It took him another hour to extricate the express package containing the films, and then he managed to struggle back to Akron. It was 6 o'clock of the following day that Wheeler staggered into the Cleveland office, in a state of exhaustion, but the films were in good condition and were soon on their way to the Alhambra Theater.

Wheeler's comment is "that he does not want to go through such an experience again."

SELIG TO FILM HOYT'S COMEDIES.

The Selig Polyscope Company has secured the exclusive picture rights for the comedies of the late Charles H. Hoyt. Among these are "A Bunch of Keys," "A Rag Baby," "A Texas Steer," "A Milk-White Flag," "A Runaway Colt," "A Temperance Town," "A Trip to Chinatown," "A Tin Soldier," "A Contented Woman," "A Black Sheep," "A Day and a Night," "A Dog in the Manger," "A Brass Monkey" and "A Midnight Bell." The first of the series to be released will be "A Midnight Bell," in two reels. This was perhaps Hoyt's favorite farce. No expense has been spared in making the initial production elaborate and true to life. It will be released early in May.

KINETOGRAPH COMPANY QUITS BUSINESS.

Rumors to the effect that the Kinetograph Company had decided to quit the exchange business have been confirmed. It is understood that the General Film Company will acquire such portion of the retiring company's stock of film and fixtures as it needs and that the company will retire from business permanently.

The Kinetograph Company began business about January 1, 1913, being organized by J. J. Kennedy, of the Biograph Company, and P. L. Waters, formerly general manager of the General Film Company. It had established distributing offices in New York, Atlanta, Ga., and New Orleans, La.

"The Battle For Freedom" (Kalem)

Interesting War Picture Based on Incidents of the Strife Between Boer and Briton.

By George Blaisdell.

IN this two-part picture, produced under the direction of George Melford, the Kalem company gives us what it says is a "historically correct portrayal" of events in the Boer War. Well it may be. Mr. Melford was himself in the South African campaign, being enrolled in the Canadian contingent. Assisting and advising him in the production was Colonel C. Rhys Pryce, another participant in the same war. Aiding these two were the officers of the California troops who took part in the near battle. It is said for Mr. Melford that no attempt was made so to stage the battle as to create purely a spectacle, but that the underlying motive was to reproduce the tactics and the methods of the contending Boers and Britons. The result should be of much interest to the military man. The layman will unquestionably say the spectacle is here anyway. If any observer should be concerned as to the amount of powder used in making the battle scenes, it may be stated that 7,000 rounds of ammunition were consumed. Besides the small arms and the Gatling gun there were field pieces. It was in discharging one of the latter that an explosion occurred in which three men were hurt. The gun carriage was damaged. The film shows the explosion, but the only genuine carnage of the battle is considerately concealed from the eye of the watcher. One of the noticeable features of the picture is the manner in which the British officers expose themselves to the enemy's fire. If it was a belief at that time that it was cowardly for an officer to accept the cover he insisted his men should take, the belief was before the conclusion of the war rudely shattered. The Boer War, by the way, served to shatter many British military traditions. It may also be said in passing that other nations lost no time in profiting from the things then learned and unlearned by Tommy Atkins.

Scene from "A Battle for Freedom" (Kalem).

The story is of the family. There is no love-making. A father and little daughter leave England for Kimberley to recoup the family fortune. Remaining behind are a son and his grandfather. Going across country, all of the emigrants, with the exception of Ellen, the daughter, meet death through a scarcity of water. The little girl is found by a party of Boers and given over to the care of Piet and Katrina Joubert. Twenty years later the British troops enter the Transvaal. The war is on. Ellen, along with the Boer women, shoulders a rifle. Charles, her brother, is an officer in the British army. It is he who receives the surrender of the Boers when their ammunition has given out. Ellen lays down her rifle. When told to throw in also her cartridge belt she angrily unbuckles it. With it comes the locket that leads to the identification.

Just a word as to the acting of the principals, for it is of the best. There is not a trace of melodrama, although there are situations which might be described as snares. William H. West and Jane Wolfe portray Piet and Katrina Joubert. They will win all hearts. So, too, will Marin Sais, as Ellen. She makes special appeal in the surrender scene and in that following the identification. It is in the latter where real heart interest is created. Ellen is torn by conflicting emotions. On one side is a blood relative, a brother, and back in England a grandfather. On the other is the man and woman who for twenty years have shielded her. Katrina's sorrow is deep. She is losing a daughter. It is a situation that will thrill.

Carlyle Blackwell plays Charles, the brother; what work falls to him is handled intelligently and in restrained manner. Colonel Pryce, Knute Rahmn and Ed Clisbee are also in the cast. There are many soldiers in the battle scenes, which cover large fields. Especial attention is paid to locations. The fighting is done in a hilly country. Adding to the realism of the conflict are many exploding shells and mines.

HERRICK BOOSTING COL. JONES.

Howard Herrick, who has been the press representative of the London and New York company of "The Pink Lady," has been transferred by Messrs. Klaw and Erlanger to the management of Buffalo Jones, who is now at the Garrick Theater, Philadelphia, with his marvelous motion pictures of "Lassoing Wild Animals in Africa and America."

Two years ago Mr. Herrick successfully handled the publicity for the Kinemacolor pictures of the corporation in Chicago, when he was one of the first to get real publicity for pictures. He has started a big publicity campaign for Buffalo Jones with a page layout in the Philadelphia Public Ledger and with more space in the dramatic departments of the newspapers there than was obtained for the big dramatic and musical attractions in opposition.

Mr. Herrick was engaged in newspaper work until about twelve years ago. Since that time he has been manager and press representative for such stars and attractions as "The Clansman," Bertha Kalich, Virginia Harned, "The Shepherd King," Marie Dressler and Ernst von Possart.

TONY O'SULLIVAN IN CALIFORNIA.

When Tony O'Sullivan left New York last fall to go to Los Angeles, to direct pictures for the Biograph company, he did so with the express understanding that he would send us at regular intervals probationary reports of his conduct. These reports have been coming in from time to time, and as they are all indorsed by Mrs. Tony, we have reason to believe that he is leading the "sample life." When he returns this summer we expect to gaze upon the beneficial results of sunshine and soft stuff.

AMERICAN INAUGURATES NEW ADVERTISING POLICY.

Feeling that some answer must be made to the incessant call for new and novel methods of advertising by exhibitor and exchange, the American Film Manufacturing Company is inaugurating several ideas which should help considerably. In addition to a splendid line of lithos of Jack Kerrigan, Pauline Bush and Jack Richardson, several hundred daily newspapers are now carrying "Flying A" notes and cuts of players. Exchanges and exhibitors can aid themselves by getting after their local papers and inducing them to start picture sections. A complete publicity service is now at their disposal. The American invites both exchange and theater to take advantage of the opportunity for their own sake, inasmuch as a daily, thus advocating pictures, is quite likely to prove a friend in need when glory-hunting politicians turn toward the picture theater.

'An Accidental Alibi" (Edison)

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A WELL constructed photodrama, clearly set forth and offering a number of delightful novelties in the presentation. There are no rules for writing plays of any kind, and I doubt if the successful author can deeply analyze his own methods, but an experienced critic quickly recognizes the presence or absence of certain requisites to success in a play, and one of the first of these, insight into principles and methods of dramatic construction, is manifested throughout "An Accidental Alibi." Craftsmanship is visible from beginning to end.

Scene from "An Accidental Alibi" (Edison).

The introduction is startling and so pleasing that it comes in the combined nature of a surprise and a relief. As old as natural selection, it is decidedly unconventional from a theatrical point of view—the producers have gone to nature instead of the stage for a mode of presenting a young man and a young woman whose course of love is not to be a smooth one. There would be no play if father gave his consent. He not only refuses it but drives the lusty suitor from the house on the pretext that drinking habits make the alliance impossible. First result more drink. In a moment of bitter resistance, the rejected lover imbibes and threatens to get even with the man who stands between him and the realization of his fondest hopes.

Scene from "An Accidental Alibi" (Edison).

The story proceeds along familiar lines. The father is thrown from his horse and killed in a lonely spot and an accumulation of circumstances point to the discarded lover as his murderer. The young man has in truth been away for a day in search of some occupation which would enable him to get relief from disappointment and mental distress. He comes upon the dead body of the girl's father when returning home and runs away in a panic, realizing that suspicion may be fastened on him, but this act completes the chain of circumstantial evidence against him, and his case is a hopeless one under examination before a magistrate.

The alibi is indicated, somewhat relieving the complexity of the situation for the audience, but there is a stretching forward of expectation to determine how such evidence can be utilized in court. The lover has been accidentally taken by the motion-picture camera without knowing it on the day that his supposed victim was killed. His sweetheart, induced to seek mental relief in a picture show, sees her lover—this is the best view of an interior exhibition of the kind I have yet seen—and immediately communicates with his attorney.

On the day of trial, when the court is convened with imposing solemnity, a projector is introduced, the room darkened, and a picture thrown on the wall that was taken the day the girl's father met with accidental death. These are all peculiar and admirable effects for photoplay purposes, and the conclusion is in perfect harmony with the staccato opening. Though the drama deals with chance and coincidence, it runs along plausibly to a delightful and original version of the happy ending, a variation much needed in these days of endless repetition. Aside from these bright features, the play is to be commended as a convincing example of well-directed ingenuity.

TALKING PICTURES POPULAR.

"The Edison Kinetophone was installed in six theaters in New York and Chicago on February 17th, and since that date installation has been made in practically every city of size in the United States. It must be admitted that greater headway has already been made for the Kinetophone during this brief time than was ever accomplished by the numerous previous attempts at talking pictures," said General Manager Waddell of the American Talking Picture Company, the other day. "Of course the name of Edison has much to do with this ready acceptance by the various theaters, as they were confident Edison would not market an article that was not practical. That this judgment was good is evidenced by the record-breaking attendance and the enthusiastic comments of the press. Marked improvement is noted week by week in subject and production. A practical knowledge of the requirements of the theaters could be gained only by experience, and the studio staff have learned more in the past few weeks than could have been learned in another year's work in the laboratory.

"The talking pictures may never take the place of the pantomime pictures, but will undoubtedly prove an admirable adjunct. It belongs to the motion picture theater, where it will serve to enliven that otherwise quiet entertainment. It is only a matter of time—and a very short time at that—before we will have colored talking, and perhaps stereoscopic motion pictures."

FORD STERLING USING VAUDEVILLE STUNTS.

The experience gained by Ford Sterling, one of the leading comedians of the Keystone Film Company, while working in vaudeville has stood him in good stead since his advent in silent drama. Many funny situations which used to set his audiences in roars have been utilized in the pictures, with great effect. Mr. Sterling is a past master in the art of facial expression and make-up, and his impersonations of German, Hebrew and Irish characters on the screen leaves little to be desired and marks the true artist. Although comic in their nature, they are true to life in the last detail in expression, make-up and costume. Mr. Sterling has set a new mark for this sort of work and got entirely away from the old style and conventional character types formerly presented on the screen and accepted as the real thing by picture audiences.

EXPERTS VIEW OIL PICTURE.

J. C. Baxter and R. J. Connors, two Chicago mining engineers, hearing that the American Film Manufacturing Company was soon to release a two-reel entitled "Oil On Troubled Waters," asked and were given permission to see the operation of oil wells in the ocean. Throughout the subject runs an industrial vein, and the American's producer took advantage of his opportunities by producing not only a delightful story, but a highly interesting industrial as well. Messrs. Baxter and Connors were particularly interested in a 25-horsepower engine which, operating through an eccentric cam, operates the entire forest of oil wells, the cam transmitting power to the wells by means of cables and triangles. This operation is clearly shown in the picture. The story was made at Summerland, Cal., the only region in the world where oil is taken from the ocean's bottom.

"Les Miserables"

Twelve-Reel Adaptation from Victor Hugo's Novel.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

I ONCE attempted to read "Les Miserables" in English and stuck to it until I was nearly two-thirds through. I subsequently attempted the same feat in French, but had to give up after the first few rounds. I went the full limit when I saw the "visualization," twelve rounds of twenty minutes each, a stretch of over three hours, and I am here to tell the tale. I suppose the big photodrama will be exhibited in sections, but that is a matter which I am loath to deal until it has been given a trial.

I have been puzzling myself for many years about Victor Hugo, bored at times, as I was by "Les Miserables," yet conscious of his genius. He tried to press too much into the novel—it was by turns historical, dramatic, philosophical and even realistic at odd moments, but a veritable nightmare, ranging from the sublime to the ridiculous. Where he was at his best my hopes flew high, only to come down with a bump when his exaggerations became tedious. I do not know of a nobler outcast than Jean Valjean. His early defects of character were only those of primitive man and weighed as mere dust against the splendid qualities kindled in his heart by a redeeming act of kindness. The grave defect in Hugo's prose epic was that, having aroused tremendous interest in the central figure, he wandered away to tell the story of less vital and less fascinating characters. It is for the sake of following the fortunes of Jean Valjean that readers stand for much that would kill another story, and this same fault is visible, though less so, in the pictured presentation.

Scenes from "Les Miserables" (Eclectic).

Admirable selection of type in the pictured story is partly responsible for high interest, but it is what Jean typifies that holds us in this photodrama. He is the victim of conditions that still exist, a sacrificial victim of the law, condemned to hard labor in prison for stealing a loaf of bread—a judge in this city sent a poor man up for thirty years because he stole two stick pins but a short time ago—and every mother's son of us finds such injustice revolting. When Jean escaped from prison, he was treated just as ex-convicts are treated now, refused an opportunity to earn a living and driven back to crime by that desire to live which is responsible for our boasted evolution. This is brought out strongly on the screen.

The old priest who transforms Jean by Christ-like magnanimity at the turning point represents a thin rivulet of enlightened equity that has kept pace with our muddy stream of progress. The acting in the picture play at this point rises to its highest point. All that passes in the mind of Jean is set forth in masterly fashion. His inner struggle before starting out as an agent of civilization is one of the finest things in the photodrama.

The portrayal of this scene between the kindly but fearless old priest Myriel and the hunted Valjean, transformed into a wild animal at bay, is superb and will grip every audience that sees it in a way that no printed page can ever accomplish.

Scenes from "Les Miserables" (Eclectic).

There are other fine things in this big photoplay; some artistic double exposures, picturesque interiors of striking fidelity, admirably chosen exteriors of decided educational merit, and other well-chosen types, notably that of irreconcilable Thenardier, the villain who keeps growing more villainous until he is the comical quintessence of all that is low in human nature. Greedy Thernardier, inexorable Javert, the police hound who serves the Law faithfully until death, and grand Jean stand out from the others, cameos of rare value, holding attention whenever shown on the screen.

The fine conception and unwavering grasp of detail of Hugo's masterpiece displayed by every member of the cast is delightful throughout the whole twelve reels. One's interest never fails for a moment. In fact this is one of the things that stamp this great picture play a masterpiece throughout. The Valjean of M. Krauss dominates by its majestic strength, while the Javert of M. Etievant, and the work of all the supporting cast will, unless we are much mistaken, reveal the greatness of this immortal story to hundreds of thousands. The contrasts of human kindness and cruelty, of brute force and gentleness, of depravity and innocence, of hope and despair as conceived by Hugo are portrayed by the artists in a way that fulfills the highest expectations.

There is not room in the limitations of a critical review to give more than a suggestion of the story, but the pictures clarified much that had been obscure in both English and French versions of the novel, and I think they helped to make me understand that great lyric poet, clever playwright, keen satirist, gifted orator, rampant politician and novelist who was better than his work. In the lofty and resolute figure of Jean Valjean was something of the personality of the gifted author. Far above his performance was the man. Friend of the weak, miserable, downcast and suffering, Jean incorporated the unconquerable spirit and generous heart of Victor Hugo, whose laurel laden brow,

"Made for the morning, droops not in the night;
 Praised and beloved, that none
 Of all thy great things done
Flies higher than thy most equal spirit's flight."

This picture has been passed by the National Board of Censorship, being highly complimented by the examining members of the board. A complete synopsis will be found on page 422 of this issue of the Moving Picture World.

"Through the Test of Fire."

A Three-Reel Thriller, Well Acted and Photographed by the Great Northern Company.

Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman.

FOR those exhibitors who are looking for dramas full of the red blood of life this picture surely should make a red-letter day at their houses. It is some time since we have looked at a picture in which so many things have happened, even in a three-reel subject. A strenuous life is a mild term in describing the life led by the principal characters of the story during the few weeks or months of their early married life. An itemized list of the punches and thrills that abound in the story would read somewhat as follows: One runaway, one factory strike, one factory explosion, one sudden death, one knock-out, one fire, one turn-out of fire apparatus, two rescues, one accidental death.

It may seem from the foregoing items that all these incidents are dragged in by the hair for the mere sake of producing thrills, but that is not the case. They are introduced logically, in accordance with a progression of events brought about by conflicting circumstances established at the beginning of the story. The two principal characters are a young countess and the son of a money lender. These two young persons are married against their own wishes for reasons of convenience to their own fathers, and this naturally brings about a condition of unrest on both sides of the house. The scenes are enacted with the usual skill of these well-known Danish players. The photography is that for which Great Northern pictures are noted—which, of course, is as good as there is anywhere.

Scene from "Through the Test of Fire" (Great Northern).

The part of the countess is enacted by Miss Ebba Thompsen. She is a stunningly beautiful creature who acts and rides superbly. She is queen-like in every gesture, and it is indeed a treat to watch her work, even though she were appearing in the weakest kind of a play. We confess to falling completely under her spell while this picture was on, and are now one of the probable countless throng who are on their figurative knees, ready to do her slightest bidding and hoping she will make some kind of a bid. The part of the money lender's son is played by Mr. V. Psilander, the Great Northern's regular leading man, who is one of those finished European actors that always excite our admiration over here. He is much on the Arthur Johnson type—in fact, if he would allow his hair to grow down from his temples to the lobes of his ears he might be mistaken for "li'l' Artha." This is supposed to be a compliment to the Danish actor in a comparative way. Mr. Psilander is said to be one of the highest paid motion picture actors in Europe.

The character parts are well acted, though obviously made up. It does not seem that the directors of any particular company pay enough attention to the jarring effect of bald wigs that leave a shadow across the forehead, or of mustaches that seem to come from the property room, instead of being the handiwork of an actor who is skilled in the art of make-up. In this case these faults are not bad, but are noticeable.

The character of Jack, the strike leader, seemed rather too surly to agree consistently with some of his heroic acts. This part might have been more true to nature had Jack been portrayed as a man of cool and determined character where his labor troubles were involved, which would have blended more nicely with his acts of sacrifice. It is rather difficult to believe that a man can be a socialistic firebrand and a volunteer sufferer at the same time. These criticisms are not meant to imply that the picture is below standard, but simply to call the attention of the director to certain points that might have made a good play better.

"The Dead Alive" (Gaumont.)

HERE is a strong picture, filled with good situations and finely acted. There are many fine settings; especially is this true of the ballroom scene, the occasion being the celebration of the betrothal of the daughter of the woman who suffered so much at the hands of a scoundrelly first husband. The story is clearly told. There are no dull moments. Perhaps the most highly dramatic situation is that of the inquisition in the office of the police superintendent.

The story opens in a low lodging house in the City of Mexico. Jean Danglade, a Frenchman, who twenty years before had deserted his wife and daughter in France, and who now is wanted by the United States authorities, substitutes on the body of a man who has just died papers bearing the name of Danglade. Word reaches his wife, who marries her partner, M. Renaud. Not long after Mme. Renaud is discovered by Danglade, who asks for an interview. She goes to the address named. There Danglade demands and receives money and all the jewelry she carries. After the departure of Mme. Renaud, Danglade is killed by his companions when he refuses to share with them the spoils. In the meantime M. Renaud had found Danglade's note. He demanded of his wife an explanation, got it, and absolved her from blame. It is an interesting situation and will closely hold attention.

A ball given in celebration of the betrothal of Jane Danglade is held at the Renaud home. Word comes of the finding of the body of the blackmailer and also of the discovery of papers bearing the name of Mme. Renaud. As the dancing goes on the woman is questioned by the police and then arrested. At the same time another and a different sort of dance is in progress. It is in a dive; the participants number among them the men who killed Danglade. There is a quarrel and the police enter. All are taken to the station. On searching the prisoners the property of Mme. Renaud is found. The other prisoner is brought from her cell. All this time the dance at the Renauds is in progress, and it goes merrily on, in ignorance of the trouble of the mistress of the house. A woman arrested with the thieves clears up the situation, and Mme. Renaud is released and hurries home to her waiting husband. It is a happy meeting for the two. The daughter, her fiance and the guests continue the dance, in ignorance of the tragedy so narrowly averted.

MRS. HAL WILSON INJURED.

Mrs. Hal Wilson, playing in Vitagraph's "The Circus Come to Town," fell through a skylight and sustained a broken rib. One of the animals in the scene—a rather savage golden babboon—jumped at Mrs. Wilson, causing her to fall from a window in which she was standing. In spite of the pain from which she was suffering, Mrs. Wilson pluckily finished the scene.

The Moving Picture Educator

EDUCATIONAL TEMPERANCE—A CRITICAL REVIEW.

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

THE temperance cause is greatly benefited, and the sale and use of alcohol receives a moral and scientific blow which will certainly cause a decline in the use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage, when the value of the lessons taught by the Union feature film, "An Accursed Inheritance," from the studio of the Paris Eclair, is shown, as it is sure to be in all parts of the educational world. This review is not in the general sense of dealing with the merits or demerits of the picture from any technical or literary standpoint, but solely as to its educational aspect, and the effects it will have on the world at large.

In previous pictures of this class the evil effects of alcohol have been shown upon the immediate users, or their children of the next degree; in the present picture the same evil effects are traced to the third generation as resulting from the over-indulgence by the first generation, and with the second generation observers of strict temperance. It will not be surprising if another picture is at length produced, showing the "visiting of the sins of the father upon the children to the third and fourth generations." Such is evidently the intention of the builders of this subject, in giving to the world these varied versions of what they so wisely call "The Poison of Humanity." They certainly succeed in showing that the poisonous taint insidiously works its weakening influences in the system of the descendents of excessive users of alcoholic beverages.

"An Accursed Inheritance" begins with a father giving his son of but a few years old, wine to drink on the occasion of his infant brother's christening. The family doctor, who is present, protests, as does also the child's mother. The father attempts to justify himself by boasting of his own freedom from any of the evils which they predict.

In a few years' time the now grown boy becomes a vicious leader of other boys, and takes a number of them into a wine cellar, where they steal wine, and are ultimately found in a drunken stupor; of course they are arrested, but as the father was a customer of the wine seller the boy is taken direct to his home, where one of the saddest pictures possible is shown of a drunken boy who is such by his father's example and precept. The younger boy is trained by the mother to abstemiousness and is attentive to his studies and makes great progress, while the older brother is listless and indolent; such is the effect upon the mind dulled by the inherited evil tendencies.

This picture suggests a reason for the backward condition of many children in the schools today. There can be little doubt that they are to be pitied in that, without any fault of their own, they are retarded in their powers, backward in their education and with a tendency to evil which is the first step towards that which ultimately becomes criminal.

When grown to manhood the two brothers are wide contrasts — the older one a tramp, and perhaps worse; the younger one a prosperous medical doctor. At the wedding of the doctor the wandering brother enters, and his behavior is so riotous that his father, disgusted and angry, becomes apoplectic in his rage and dies. Again circumstances bring the brothers together, and the young wife of the doctor suggests that they give him a home and try to reform him. In the main they are successful, and, free from the cause of his ruin, he rapidly becomes a respected man. A girl is born to the happy couple, and of course, "according to custom," the christening must be attended by the "drinking the health" of the child, in champagne. This revives the old taste with the unfortunate older brother, in a frenzy which they cannot subdue. The young wife, in her weakness of health, collapses, and the shock is so great that she dies.

The drunkard again becomes a wanderer; years roll on; the baby girl is now a young lady; she is engaged to be married; the old family doctor protests that she is subject to the "accursed inheritance"; a council of doctors decide that, as she herself was not a drinker, neither her father, she was too far removed from the cause of danger, the old doctor still, however, dissenting.

While driving out alone the young lady is stopped by a tramp, who steals her chatelaine; she arrives home in an hysterical condition. The authorities cause a round-up of all tramps, so that she may recognize the guilty one; of course he turns out to be her father's brother. The shock is so great that the young lady becomes very ill, and it is now apparent that her system is not equal to the strain, inherited weakness shows the nervous inability to recuperate, and she dies a victim to the "poison of humanity," which proved to be an "accursed inheritance."

The Place of Religious Ceremonies in This Picture.

It is a sad truth, which is perhaps more conspicuous than the producers of this picture supposed, that the time at which each particular evil was wrought was at a religious ceremony. The first evil was wrought at a christening. The first tragedy, the death of the old father, happened at a wedding; the second tragedy, the death of the young wife and mother, was at another christening; the third tragedy, the death of the young prospective bride, was in connection with the preparation for the wedding festivities. Does not this film accomplish more than was originally intended? As a secondary lesson, does it not reveal the evil results of the use of wines and such drinks at social-religious festivals? And, again, does it not strike a blow at the foolish custom of supposing that good wishes can only be made with the accompaniment of "humanity's poison"? Truly, this picture will be one of power along these lines in schools and churches; refined in its treatment of a brutal power, it is a social, moral, religious and scientific lesson of present and permanent value and will, without doubt, be received as such by every one to whom it can be used beneficially. The exhibitor anywhere and everywhere will fail in his own opportunities if, when he gets this picture, he does not call the attention of the proper authorities to its value.

The Educational Picture.

By the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, S. T. B.

Pathe's "Locust."

EXHIBITORS, especially those in the great agricultural districts of the West and Northwest will find a good drawing card in Pathe's release of April 11th, entitled "The Locust." This insect is not to-day the scourge that it was to farmers twenty-five years ago when it ravaged whole States and Territories, as its free breeding places have been restricted to certain parts of British Columbia, but it still does considerable damage from time to time in restricted areas and a knowledge of its development and habits is not only interesting, but valuable to all agriculturists.

What the Educators Want.

We have just received the following letter from the Rev. Brother Gerald, S. M., principal of SS. Peter and Paul High School, St. Louis, Mo., which speaks for itself and is well worth the attention of all manufacturers, exchanges and exhibitors.

> I am sincerely grateful for your several lists of educational pictures and photoplays found in recent issues of The Moving Picture World. I have heard the remark again and again from church workers, ministers, Catholic priests, teachers, etc.: "If we only had a list of good educational and religious pictures, we would bring pressure upon those who have machines to use them; and we would then try to install machines ourselves."
> So I say your work is the move in the right direction regarding moving pictures.
> Being principal of a parish school and high school in these parts, and being the proud possessor of a Power's 6A machine, and noticing your offer in the April 12 issue, to furnish special lists to particular exhibitors, I make bold to request such a list of both licensed and independent films, that refer especially to character formation in children and that emphasize the virtues of love, kindness, politeness, unselfishness, etc. Such a list I am positive would be welcome by many besides myself.
> Again would I be imposing upon your time and good will to furnish a list of reels that exhibit nothing but the cleanest kind of humor and comedy. The above lists need not mention only late releases, but even such as are four to six months old.

We have already sent Brother Gerald the list he desires and if we hear from enough others to warrant it we shall be glad to publish the list in some future issue of the World. Just now we wish to emphasize the point that if the manufacturers will provide the goods and make them accessible they need not fear the problem of a demand. The demand, as we have said over and over again, is already in existence ready to spring into active being wherever it can be supplied. Brother Gerald, as we have reason to know, is only one of hundreds already working and the number is increasing every day.

Educational Releases, March 21 to 29.

We give below the continuation of the list of educational pictures and photoplays suitable for religious and educational work which embraces the releases up to and including Saturday, March 29th. Hereafter we shall continue them as nearly as possible by weeks, and also include in the list for the first and second week of the month the list of the feature releases for the month preceding.

FULLER TO HAVE STUDIO.

Charles L. Fuller, of Fuller's Feature Film Exchange, 472 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., announces that his company is building a studio for the manufacture of commercial and educational pictures. He also announces that his company has secured a contract from two South American republics to make pictures of different parts of those countries, the pictures to be distributed gratis among educational institutions. Mr. Fuller's cameramen are already on their way to South America to take up this work.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

SERGEANT Jeremiah J. O'Connor, of the Chicago film censor board, has been in hot water with newspaper critics ever since he went outside of his special province and had a painting, entitled "September Morn," removed from a shop window because it showed the form divine in the nude. The Sergeant has a pretty broad back and a large stock of Irish good nature, so that he has borne up well under the peppering onslaught. Now he has been hit hard in a place that hurts; for, if there is any man who takes pride in his work and strains himself to the utmost to do it well and honestly, that man is Sergeant O'Connor. In charge of the censorship of films in Chicago, the Sergeant has had a hard row to hoe. What with women's societies pestering him about laxity in the discharge of his duties, and soreheads kicking because of the cutouts insisted upon in various films, and of the total rejection of others, it would seem as if his cup were already full; but not so. Along came "The Miracle" for review, and Sergeant O'Connor gave it a resounding whack with his censorial shillelah. This action evoked the following editorial from the Chicago Tribune, under the satirical heading, "Our Budding Censorship."

"Max Reinhardt is, perhaps, the greatest living man of the theater.

"Maurice Maeterlinck is one of the greatest living writers.

"'The Miracle' is Reinhardt's most tremendous attempt to revive in beauty the art of pantomime. It is based on the Belgian poet's reverent and lovely dramatization of the legend of Sister Beatrice.

"Two thousand people take part in the performance. Two hundred thousand dollars were spent on the performance before the first ticket was sold. 'The Miracle' ran through the winter in London to what were probably the largest audiences that have ever attended any theatrical representation in modern times. Critics and clergymen praised it. The jealous British censor approved it. It was only when its scenes were reproduced in moving picture films, and thus encountered the acute moral sense of Chicago's censor, Police Sergeant O'Connor, that it was discovered to be offensive to morals and met an official ban.

"The incident is more interesting than that of 'September Morn.' The work of art then involved was unimportant if innocuous. Our censor now challenges the work of two very great men. With a wave of his masterful hand he overrules two men of genius, the judgement of two world capitals, and the applause of hundreds of thousands of people in Germany and in England.

"It might be suggested to him who is responsible for Sergeant O'Connor's activities that the spectacle of a policeman enthroned in the high seat of judgment in the fourth city of the world is rather remarkable. As was pointed out at the time of the 'September Morn' episode, if we are to have censorship in these matters, and within bounds censorship is desirable, a somewhat more enlightened tribunal is needed."

In all justice to Sergeant O'Connor, it must be conceded that he has been appointed not as an art censor but as a moral censor. He is a victim of conditions. Children of tender years and minors flock to our picture theaters. What would be perfectly proper for adults to view would, in many cases, be very improper for them. Censorship in Chicago, unfortunately for noble pictures like "The Miracle," is conducted from the viewpoint of minors and not from that of adults. Since there are no special programs as yet for children and minors, and that they are permitted to visit moving picture theaters at all times, there is no other course open to the Chicago censor than to protect them from certain presentations. Otherwise he would be overwhelmed by a flood of denunciation from all sides.

Milwaukee Exhibitors Liberal to Flood Sufferers.

I have been advised by Frank Cook, booking and publicity manager for the Saxe enterprises in Milwaukee, that the exhibitors of that city have contributed over $2,000 to the relief of the flood sufferers in Ohio and Indiana. "Every house in the city came nobly to the front," writes Mr. Cook.

I am indebted to Mr. Cook for data of the recent convention, in Milwaukee, of the exhibitors of Wisconsin, details of which are given in the proper department, in this issue. The sessions were conducted with zeal and enthusiasm. "It was the best ever, and our State and City League is going to be a big success," concludes Mr. Cook.

H. H. Hutchinson returned from his Honolulu trip April 3, and is well satisfied with what he accomplished. He is now at Santa Barbara, supervising the construction of his new studio and plant.

Charles W. Sheppard, representating Hugo Reisinger, manufacturer of "Electra" pink label carbons, called at the World office last week. He is traveling throughout the Middle West in the interests of his company.

The Twentieth Century Theater, on Prairie Ave., near 47th St., which was opened on April 2, is showing to fine business. It seats 1,000 people and admission is 10 cents. This theater has a fine electric sign along the entire front, which can be seen many blocks distant. The sign was constructed by the Consolidated Electric Sign Co.

Abe Warner, of Warner's Features, accompanied by his wife, stopped over in the city last week after an extended trip to the Pacific Coast. Mr. Warner found conditions very flourishing in every city in which his product is used. He promises several thrilling features in the near future.

Alfred C. Stange, manufacturer of curtain coating, pure silver and white, and Tiger Cement, has taken over the interests of the One Drop Oil Co., and of the Bull Dog Cement. Mr. Stange reports good business for his products. He wishes it known that his Tiger Cement will patch without scraping the film.

The Music Hall, Cincinnati, seating 3,600 people, was opened with exclusive picture programs, March 29, by the Empire Exhibition Co., of New York. Licensed feature films are chiefly used. The house was opened with the "Prisoner of Zenda." A fourteen-piece, selected orchestra is used to accompany the pictures, and high class vocal and instrumental numbers are introduced during the intervals. John Bunny, the well known Vitagraph comedian delivered his special monologue during the first week, and Francis X. Bushman gave lectures the second week. Both these gentlemen scored big hits. Miss Florence Turner, another big Vitagraph favorite, has been booked for the week of Monday, April 14, to appear in a comedy skit, of her own composing. The admission to the Music Hall is 25 cents for evenings and Sunday matinees. For other matinees the charge is 10 cents. A. N. Smallwood and J. T. Hennegan are the managers.

FRED MACE COMING EAST.

Fred Mace left Los Angeles last Sunday, headed in the general direction of New York City. He has completed his arrangements in Los Angeles for the making of a reel of split comedy, one Western and one Indian or straight drama weekly, establishing ample studio and laboratory facilities, and is coming on to close contracts for the disposal of his negatives. He will appear in all of the comedies himself.

He planned his departure to be in time for the Screen Club ball, and will represent the Photoplayers (of which he is president) at the function of the sister society.

S. S. HUTCHINSON HAS NARROW ESCAPE.

S. S. Hutchinson and R. D. Armstrong, who have just arrived back in America from the Hawaiian Islands, relate an interesting experience with water buffalo. In the rice fields on the islands water buffalo are used, as being the only animals who can travel through the heavy muck. R. D. Armstrong, camera operator, had his camera up and was making pictures, with Mr. Hutchinson directing beside him, when the foremost buffalo charged. There followed a thrilling series of dodges back and forth behind the camera until a native rescued them. Both were thoroughly exhausted from the strenuous exercise in the ankle-deep mud.

SENNETT MAKING "COMEDY-MELODRAMAS."

The Keystone Film Company, with Mack Sennett's master hand at the wheel, is presenting a new variety of film at the present time which marks a departure in the picture game. Mack calls them comedy-melodramas, and if we are to take the word of exhibitors throughout the country they are great. The stories have a well-defined plot filled with thrilling incidents and intense moments, while a light vein of comedy running all the way through the picture provides excellent relief and much laughter.

Doings at Los Angeles

Universal Activities—Inhumane Picture Men Fined—Interesting News Notes From the Western Film Center.

NOT satisfied to have earned for the Bison brand of films the reputation of being the most expensive, on the average, now being produced in this country, the Universal company is planning still bigger and more expensive productions to be released under this trademark. It is difficult to conceive how the present productions could be greatly amplified, and whatever the plans are, they are being jealously guarded, but it has leaked out that A. M. Kennedy, general manager of the Western department, is preparing for a totally new line of Bison pictures, to be started about July 1st.

Another of the Lincoln J. Carter melodramas, "Two Little Waifs," has just been filmed by the Universal company, and Director Montgomery and Mr. Carter are now at work on "The Indian's Secret."

Frank E. Woods, who went over to the Universal camp from the Kinemacolor company recently, to become an Imp director, is now making split-reel comedies. The members of his company are Harry Fisher, Lois Howard, John Francis, Vera Sisson, Edith Bostwick, Sylvia Ashton, Lee Morris and Doc. Vinard.

George Gebhardt resigned from the local Pathe company last week, to join the Universal forces as a director.

The Universal company now claims to have on its payroll the youngest regular motion picture actor in the business. He is Elwood Horn, aged seven months, son of the traffic manager of the concern.

The mess department is not the smallest nor least important of the many activities at the Universal ranch at Oak Crest. On a quiet day there are upwards of 100 mouths to be fed three times a day, and the record is nearly 4,000 meals in a day. For the purpose of supplying the department, a portion of the ranch has been set apart for a truck garden. Joe Engle took a party of guests to visit the ranch one day this week, and among the things served them were the following from the farm department: New potatoes, green peas, cucumbers and sliced tomatoes, fried chicken, asparagus, strawberries and cream.

The motion picture production of Maurice Maeterlinck's "Pelleas and Melisande," in which Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude are to play the name parts, is well under way and begins to look more than promising.

One of the results of the recent fire at the Universal offices in Hollywood was that Director M. H. Fahrney has devoted this week to reproducing half of his first two-reel feature, "The Last Roll Call." The "last roll" was not rescued by the firemen. Another picture which was lost in the fire, and is now being retaken, is "The Tarantula." There was one picture which, unfortunately, was not destroyed—unfortunately, because if it had burned the company might have recovered something on insurance. It is the last picture in which Edwin August appeared before he left the Universal to go with the Vitagraph company. It was a costly reel, in which an army of extra people had worked and much money was spent for properties and direction. It is all done except one little scene, but that little one is the most important in the entire play—so important, in fact, that until it is finished the whole production is worthless. In the scene the leading character, who is August, is required to walk straight up to the lens, and there do a bit of business which "ties" the story in the middle. August, by the way, was the author of the script. On the day he gave in his notice he spoke of a little business matter concerning which there was a misunderstanding. He was informed that it would have to be taken up with the New York office. Pending a reply from New York the missing scene is being postponed.

Film fans are to witness another impersonation of the late President Lincoln when the Bison three-reel feature, "The Toll of War," is released. It is now in process of production. Francis Ford is playing the part, in addition to directing the picture. One of the scenes shows the interior of Ford's Theater and the assassination.

To ride a galloping horse bareback alongside of a careening, rapidly-moving prairie schooner, slash an opening through the canvas with a hunting knife, tumble off the horse through the slit into the wagon, touch off six sticks of dynamite and jump out the back end just as the prairie schooner was blown to atoms, was the business Director McRae gave Charles Bartlett, one of the members of his Bison company, to do in "The Fighting Chaplain," which is being produced. Bartlett, regarding it as a mere incident of a motion picture actor's daily routine, played the part.

Fined for Inhumane Realism.

An attempt on the part of James Young Deer, director of the Western Pathe company, to outdo all other motion picture producers in realism landed three of his employes in the police court this week and cost them $60 in fines. Young Deer had in mind a thrilling scene wherein a cowboy was to ride his horse too close to the edge of a high precipice. The horse was to be dashed to pieces on the rocks below, and the rider was to save himself by jumping from the horse's back and catching the edge of the cliff. He had a horse which injured one eye several weeks ago, and on account of blood poisoning was practically useless. The cliff was selected, the camera was placed at a point where it commanded the sheer drop, and a rider was sent up with the horse to carry out the plan. Half dead though it was, the horse seemed to sense the conspiracy and refused to go near the edge. After a number of unsuccessful attempts it was concluded to "hog-tie" the animal—that is, to fasten his legs together so that a push would send it over. The horse was led to the edge of the cliff, but while its legs were being tied it began to scream like a human being and to struggle. A number of women living near the spot thought a child was being injured and ran out to investigate. They were witnesses to the act of pushing the horse over the cliff and complained to the authorities. The horse succeeded by its struggles in prolonging its miserable existence, for, instead of going over the place selected, it rolled and fell down a steep slope at one side and was merely injured, instead of being killed outright. Jim Kid, Milton Brown and George Champion were arrested and fined. The incident has done immense undeserved harm to the motion picture industry in this city, for the newspaper reports excited public sentiment, which, unfortunately, is not discriminating and is directed against all the producing companies. Those columns of the newspapers which are devoted to letters from readers have been filled with general condemnation of the motion picture producers.

News Briefs.

Fred Mace and a company of players, under his direction, began work at the new Hollywood studio this week. The company is to produce nothing but split-reel comedies, like those in which Mace used to appear with the Biograph company. Through what channel they will be released is not announced. Harry Revier is to have charge of the photography and the factory. All the prints are to be made in this city. A revolving stage 75 feet in diameter, with a device for raising it 20 feet above the ground, is now being installed.

Rollin Sturgeon, manager of the Vitagraph company's Western plant at Santa Monica, is now an exhibitor as well as a director and business executive. He recently purchased the Majestic, the leading motion picture theater of Santa Monica, as an investment. Plans for the new studio are progressing satisfactorily. A new company and a third director will begin operations within a week or two.

The Graphic Motion Picture Company, a new independent organization, began operations last Monday and finished the first 1,000 feet in three days. The studio is located at 200 East Avenue 55, where there is a big stage and necessary buildings, such as dressing rooms, prop rooms and scene dock. The location is only about half a mile from the Lubin studio, where Wilbert Melville's company is working.

Norval McGregor, formerly director for the Utah Motion Picture Company, is director for the new concern. George W. W. Myers is president of the company, E. F. Campbell is vice-president and also cameraman, A. E. Weymouth is secretary and treasurer, and George Ingalls, a motion picture man from Boston, is general manager. President Myers says the company will make single-reel comedies and dramas. The method of releasing the product is not disclosed.

David Belasco Griffith, of the Biograph company, has a new "assistant." All the actors were notified the other day that no more frivolous diversions such as tennis, handball and croquet will be tolerated around the studio. Heretofore the members of the company have made use of the athletic field on the grounds while they were out of scenes. Lionel Barrymore, denied his daily training routine, is rapidly descending into a rotund and placid middle-aged person. His second chin is thriving. The actors expectantly scan the callboard daily for new hints on deportment and fresh ideas about their rights and privileges, and this daily diversion accounts for the charming spirit of amity so much in evidence around the place.

Karl Coolidge, photoplay editor of the Keystone company, is figuring on changing a young woman's name next month. He is very sly and thinks he is keeping the approaching event a deep secret.

Joseph DeGrass has been appointed assistant manager of the Western Pathe company, succeeding Charles French.

Ernest Shipman has sold his interest in the Utah Motion Picture Company and the "One Hundred Years of Mormonism" feature and is flirting with another motion picture project.

Irene Hunt, former leading woman with the Lubin company of which Wilbert Melville is producer, returned to New York this week. Her left arm was broken at the wrist by a fall from a horse. It was not properly set, and as a result she will have to have it broken by a specialist and reset; hence her trip East.

Kathlyn Williams, Selig leading woman, who recently became Mrs. Robert Allen, bought a large tract of land near Los Angeles this week and will have a country place.

P. M. POWELL.

KINEMACOLOR NOTES.

William Fox has signed a contract with the Kinemacolor company, whereby the nature-colored pictures will be installed in all the theaters of the Fox circuit.

Aaron Jones, of the Chicago theatrical firm of Jones, Limick & Shafer, came to New York to secure the Kinemacolor service for the Willard and Wilson Theaters immediately. Later Kinemacolor will be installed in the other houses of their Chicago picture circuit.

In response to insistent demands from the mid-western territory for another distributing station of the film service department, the Kinemacolor company has opened a Chicago office in the Morton Building, on Dearborn Street, near Madison, under the management of J. L. Kempner, general representative.

S. S. HUTCHINSON BACK IN AMERICA.

Mr. S. S. Hutchinson and wife, who have been in Hawaii for some time, are again back in America. Mr. Hutchinson is visiting the producing center at Santa Barbara.

INDIAN WOMEN.

The writer had occasion recently to look up some points regarding the Indians, particularly the Iroquois, and was much surprised to find that the matrons controlled the ballot, even having the election of the chiefs in their hands. As a leader of his people and a really great statesman, the historical Hiawatha has had full credit. He, with Dekaniwida, consolidated several warring tribes and allotted to each the work best suited to them, and, cruel as their warfare was against the common enemy, among themselves they had a wonderful democracy, the only aristocracy being the mothers, who held the public property and outlined the policy of government. Our idea of the position of woman among the Indians has been so perverted by observations of superficial travelers that it is commonly believed the woman to have been the slave of a magnificent brute in the olden days, and the drudge of the modern decadent despot, but nowhere in the world's history has woman's position been nearer to that of man's, both in ancient and the present times. When one speaks slightingly of the Indian's treatment of his woman and children his attention should be called to the fact that in Germany, women, dressed in uniforms, clean the streets of many of the cities, and, with a cow or dog, are hitched to milk carts and plows, and even here in the land of the free and the home of the brave the great factories are filled with women and children who contribute a large proportion of the income of the family.

The Indian Players
Passion Play
HIAWATHA
in Four Parts
Direction of F.E. Moore

Mr. F. E. Moore, the producer of "Hiawatha," tells many interesting stories of the modern Indian father. A child is rarely punished by him, and in case of sickness the descendants of the people Hiawatha once led are devoted nurses. "It is no uncommon sight," he said, "to see a father walking patiently to and fro for hours with the little sufferer." Nor is romance dead among them, as is shown by the looks of affection exchanged by the actors of Hiawatha and Minnehaha in the wonderful picture-mask he is showing.

NEW OKLAHOMA COMPANY.

In this issue, the Blackstone Film & Amusement Company, of Muskogee, Okla., makes its first announcement. While the name of the company is new, the management are pioneers in the business. Mr. Jake Mitchell, manager, is well known in film circles, having been associated with the largest houses in the country for many years. Exhibitors and all people connected with the business can be assured of every attention at his hands.

New York League Benefit a Big Success.

Five Thousand New Yorkers in Spite of Rainstorm Attend the Largest Flood Benefit Held in New York.

ON SATURDAY EVENING, April 12, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Greater New York, again showed conclusively what it can do when it comes to doing things on a big scale. The league held a benefit that evening at the 69th Regiment Armory, 25th Street and Lexington Avenue, New York City, and the great hall was nearly filled, notwithstanding a downpour of rain. The armory will seat 6,000 people; 5,000 were in the audience. But even under the handicap of wet weather, the league, through its benefit, managed to raise the sum of $2,500 for the Ohio and Indiana flood sufferers, which is the largest amount raised at a public benefit that has come to notice. Even the large public benefit at the New York Hippodrome netted only $1,500; therefore, under the circumstances, the New York League came through with flying colors. There is no doubt that had the weather been better the proceeds would easily have reached $5,000.

The results of the benefit are still more worthy of note, by reason of the fact that the whole affair was conceived, arranged and carried out in the short space of one week. The admirable work of the committee of arrangements stands out prominently, and President Samuel H. Trigger, of the New York League, had requested us to publicly thank the committee on behalf of the league members and acknowledge the excellence of their work. The committee in charge of arrangements were: M. Needle, chairman; J. A. Koerpel, R. A. Mac Nabb, A. Bauernfreund, Rudolph Sanders, M. L. Fleischman, M. Blumenthal, Aaron Corn, Eugene Elmore, Louis Germaine, William Hilkmeier and William Brandt.

Promptly at 8 o'clock the exhibition began. Many members of the New York League were assembled in the foyer, acting as a reception committee and as ushers. All were clad in immaculate evening dress, and their appearance made it resemble a swell social function. Before the program began there was a fine concert by the New York Letter Carriers' Band, fifty strong; and what a band it was! Their services were given free and Mr. Trigger has also requested us to publicly thank the members of the Letter Carriers' Band, both for the valuable time given up by them and for the excellence of their work.

We often hear picture men, supposed to be generally wise to their business, say that people will not sit for more than two hours looking at pictures. That theory was positively exploded on this occasion, because the major portion of that vast audience of 5,000 people sat for five hours, from 8 p. m. until 1 a. m., looking at pictures, and probably would have sat there longer had there been any more pictures to run. Those who came surely got their money's worth and had a very pleasant evening. Disregarding the order of their appearance, the following photoplays, many of which have not yet been released, were shown; "Flood Scenes in Ohio," Universal; "Fred as a Soldier" and "Summer in the North," Great Northern; "Okoma," Gaumont; "The Lady Doctor," Solax; "The Prisoner of Zenda," (last reel) Famous Players; Pathe's Weekly No. 17; "War" (second reel), "101" Bison; "A Proposal by Proxy," Thanhouser; "Inauguration of Woodrow Wilson," Warner's Features; "Girls Will Be Boys," Crystal; "The Lost Memory" (two reels), Great Northern; "New York's Society Life and Underworld" (three reels), Exclusive Feature Film Company.

Between pictures the following artists and photoplay stars were introduced by Mr. Len Spencer. Doctor William Davis, by courtesy of William Fox; Little Audrey Barry, formerly of Pathe, in dances; Crane Wilbur, Pathe; Miss Edith Storey, Vitagraph; Edward O'Connor, Edison; Kenneth Casey, Vitagraph; Rogers Lytton, Vitagraph; Miss Alice Joyce, Kalem; Demetrius Mitzorias, Greek baritone, Thanhouser; David Thompson, Thanhouser, in songs accompanied by Mignon Anderson at piano; Harry Benham, Thanhouser, in songs; Helen Badgley, the Thanhouser Kidlet, recitation; King Baggot, Imp; Billy Quirk, Gem; Yale Boss, Edison; Newsboy Sextet, by courtesy of William Fox; Miss Mary Pickford, by courtesy of David Belasco. A company of Universal players appeared in a farce comedy scene, entitled, "How Moving Pictures Are Made: or a Studio Rehearsal." Director, Francis Powers, assisted by Hazel May Hall, Helen Powers, Charlotte Stanford, George Gerenier, Peter Burns, Charles Craig, William Sorrelle, H. Nielson, Arthur Peterman and Bert Phillips; incidental dance by Hazel May Hall. In the balcony were four booths occupied respectively by machines and operators furnished by the Nicholas Power Co., Standard Machine Co., Simplex Machine Co., and the Motiograph Co.

President Trigger desires THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD to extend the thanks of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to each and every one who helped to make the affair such a splendid success, especially to the many well known firms in the trade who came forward with large and substantial donations.

The flower girls—or flower ladies, as the case may be—helped to swell the proceeds by their energetic measures of pinning flowers on gentlemen's coats and then telling them that they owed something to the fund for the flowers. Among them the ladies raised an extra $100 for the fund in this way. Miss Jeanette Ehrenberg has the record of the largest sale, disposing of $20 worth by her individual efforts. She is the stenographer of the New York Exhibitors' League. The other ladies were Mrs. Robert L. MacNabb, Misses Lillian Ethyll, Grace Langill, Marie Smith, Emma Ehrenberg, Ruth Allen, Selma Bauer and Sydelle Fish. Miss Henrietta Bauренfreund and Miss Carey gathered in $100 between them selling photos, salad and ushering.

Benefit Briefs.

During his appearance on the platform, Edward O'Connor, of the Edison Company, drew forth a check for $100 from the Edison Company, which he was delegated to turn in to the general fund.

Len Spencer is the star "Master of Ceremonies" of New York and environs. His work in that capacity is so masterful that any Exhibitors' League racket without him would be minus a great deal of its charm and smoothness. At covering up a stage-wait he is probably without a peer. In dealing with awkward situations behind the footlights he is a genius.

Imagine that second reel of "War," by the "101" Bison Company, when accompanied by a brass band of fifty pieces. Try to imagine one of the most thrilling battle scenes ever produced being presented with the sound of ten trombones coming up the scale chromatically, with an equal number of clarinets, cornets, altos and bassos working strong on the "hurry" stuff in counter melody, and you will get an idea of the right way to put that picture on. Of all the punches and thrills of the evening, that was the knock-out.

And, speaking of bands, a blind man would have enjoyed himself that evening for no other reason than listening to the New York Letter Carriers' Band, one of the best trade bands in America. When it comes to playing for pictures, their leader seems to know just what to select.

Pearl White is doing some great work these days. She appeared in a Crystal picture, entitled, "Girls Will Be Boys," and scored a tremendous hit in the role of a street gamin. Anyone who thinks Pearl can play only pretty girl parts should see this picture. Her make-up as a tough bootblack boy was immense, and her facial expression was a scream.

Who says the public will not sit more than two hours looking at pictures? Whoever thinks so should have seen the crowd that stuck from 8 p. m. until 1 o'clock in the morning, and still willing to look at more if the supply had held out.

The parents of Kenneth Casey are making an excellent performer out of their extremely bright young son. His act was easily the star number of the evening. He did an excellent cornet solo to start with and the most sincere applause came from the members of the New York Letter Carriers' Band. He sings well and plays a violin with much ability and his stage technique is very professional. By the way, it is funny to hear a family by the name of Casey talking among themselves in German.

Judging from applause, King Baggot was the most popular individual photoplay star who appeared. Everyone in the immense throng seemed to know him, and appeared very glad to see him. He spoke some kind words to the audience and didn't fail to mention the Screen Club Ball, to be held at Terrace Garden on the 19th of April.

Carl Laemmle, Bill Swanson, Mark Dintenfass, and also Bill Wright, of the Kalem Company, can always be depended upon to show up at any patriotic gathering of the trade. They were on hand Saturday night in their old reliable way.

The girl who deserves more credit than any of those present, and the one who did the hardest work of any was Miss Alice Joyce, the popular leading lady of the Kalem Company. She autographed and sold $100 worth of her own photographs in the lobby. She surely is a patriotic young lady.

The Kalem Company was the leader of all the others in coming forward with assistance. At the first intimation that there was to be a benefit they came across with a good-sized check and an offer to send any of their players. They also supplied several hundred photographs of Miss Joyce, which she sold in the lobby. Other Kalemites were on the job all evening.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

GOOD publicity men and advertisement solicitors are among the most clever and interesting to be found in the various channels of business life. Sometimes they appear to us as shrewd operators of confidence schemes, and they are not accorded the credit they really deserve. Many of them have heart-breaking tasks in securing audiences and holding the attention of those they are trying to interest, even when the propositions they offer are good ones, and many weeks, sometimes months, are spent in framing the prospectus into plausible shape. For persistency the craft holds first prize. A battle of wits in the office of a motion picture manufacturer of this city a few days ago demonstrated this clearly. On one side was the manufacturer's manager. On the other were two men from the South. One of them was a publicity promoter, the other an advertising agency man. Announcing that they had one of the most gigantic schemes ever offered, they insisted upon seeing either one of the head officers of the company or somebody in charge with authority to make a deal. Becoming satisfied, they revealed their scheme. A big carnival is to be held in one of the Southern cities, and among the features is to be a pageant in which floats and other contrivances are to be incorporated to advertise the products of certain concerns of national and international reputation in such a clever manner that to cut them out of the film reproduction must destroy the entire picture. "The pageant itself," said the men, "will be so elaborate and unique that no exhibitor would think of rejecting it, and the cleverly interwoven advertising features will interest every corporation and company represented, inducing them to pay liberally for the advertising and drawing hundreds of thousands of people interested in the companies and their employes to see the pictures, thereby interesting the exhibitors on account of the prospects of greatly increased box office receipts. So, you see, we have everything down pat," said the advertising man.

The office manager smiled and said he believed considerable thought and time must have been expended on the scheme. From an advertising standpoint, he said, it looked fine. "I suppose you want to know what we will charge for making the pictures," he continued, but like a flash the answer was that the visitors wanted to know how much the company would pay for the privilege of taking them. "We supply everything up to that point. You get all the money you can from the concerns advertised. That is your end of it." The manager informed them that that battle had been fought out several years ago. Film exchanges will not pay for films issued for advertising purposes, nor will exhibitors show them in their houses. For almost an hour the matter was discussed, the visitors resourceful in suggestions. The immense returns would justify the film producer in expending a part of them to induce the exchange people and exhibitors to handle the film, which would result in the latter deriving benefit in two ways. "You forget that the people are to be considered in such matters—the people who pay admission to the theaters," said the manager. "They pay for amusement and entertainment and are prompt in expressing disapproval when they learn that they have paid to see an advertising device, no matter how clever it may be." Again one of the visitors came back, stating that educational films have become very popular; that the pageant showing the progress of the various parts of the country in civic, industrial and commercial lines would make the picture a particularly attractive one in the educational sense. Eventually the visitors departed with a determination to seek "some more enterprising manufacturer."

As an effort to bridge over any objection that might possibly be raised by either film renter, exhibitor or patron of the picture theaters the scheme reflected credit upon the promoters. But it was time wasted. The most skillfully produced picture of an advertising nature must fail of success if offered to the public with regular productions. The public is keen to discover the most clever interpolation, and never fail to call the attention of managers to them. Managers rightfully claim that they cannot be expected to pay the expenses of running their houses and give free advertising space to films that concerns have with ingenuity converted to their benefit. There is no better advertising avenue than the motion picture film when properly applied. But it must have an outlet of its own. A number of large concerns discovered this some time ago. There are several that have films made to demonstrate the process of manufacture and marketing of their products, and are exhibiting them at various industrial exhibitions, conventions and similar affairs. Many of the subjects are both interesting and educational and attract attention of the people for whom they are intended. In their legitimate lines such films are successful to the fullest degree.

A well-known advertising manager stated that one of the chief reasons for antagonism on the part of the public press against motion pictures a few years ago was the impression that they would soon make inroads upon the advertising revenue of the papers, magazines and other publications. The possibilities of motion pictures as a medium for advertising were fully realized, and there was no way in which they could be successfully attacked until the advertising features were interwoven with the stories. Then the publications got busy. The country press became especially active and the informant states that almost the first complaint registered against the foisting of advertisements in films was due to a country editor in Minnesota.

A theatrical manager who overheard the remarks said he remembered that a few years ago vaudeville people would work into their dialogues and monologues references of a complimentary character to certain commercial products, but the managers soon put a stop to it, and what applies to the stage is equally applicable to motion pictures. At times drop curtains bearing advertisements have been criticised, the manager said, but he considered it legitimate, as well as the advertising slides that are used in many of the picture houses so long as they do not usurp time that should be devoted to the regular program and are not made tedious. Advertisements on curtains, programs and slides are not paid for by the patrons of the theaters, and they have no license to object to them when they are proper in a moral sense. Commercialism has always been denounced when reflected either from the pulpit, stage or platform. The people are very sensitive in this respect.

"Yes," said an exhibitor, "I say amen to that. Free advertising by means of the pictures will not be tolerated. It is not a pecuniary matter, but one of principle. I take the same stand that I have taken against the newspapers. The best of us have been caught at times and when I fall for a newspaper "ad" I feel as sore as I do when some slick one has rung in something in a picture. What is more provoking than to be caught when you are reading the paper to your wife, your father or mother, or some poor invalid. After arousing their interest in a story of how a father and son became separated in some big battle of the Civil War you reach the bottom lines and suddenly stop, so chagrined that you are unable to utter a word. 'Read on, John, how did it come out?' asks the anxious listener. Putting yourself in the boob class you crawl out. 'Fifty years later father and son met again, when the son was canvassing Squeedonk in the interest of Bluffem's Pain Exterminer, a remedy that never fails to cure all distress,' etc."

Getting the eye is the great secret of successful advertising. Mr. Edwards, formerly with Miles Bros. film exchange for several years, is now owner of the Picture Theater Equipment Company, 21 East 14th Street. He caught the eye a few days ago with a setting of the interior of a miniature picture house in his display window. Screen, seats and all were complete, a projecting machine being operated by a motor. The watching throng became so great a policeman was obliged to ask Mr. Edwards to discontinue the exhibit. Being unable to get into booths a large percentage of picture house patrons fail to learn satisfactorily how the pictures are projected, and in this case a close view of the working apparatus excited the curiosity of a crowd the policeman was unable to handle.

ENTER "MISS" SCARDON.

Usually retiring and quiet—now bold and boisterous; usually polite and considerate—now rude and overbearing; usually of noble carriage and graceful step—now strutting proudly with his chest protruding out of all proportion—thus has Paul Scardon, of the Reliance, been suddenly transformed as if by a miracle—it's a girl and weighed nine pounds!!

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Airdome Advertising.

PRETTY soon the heat waves will strike and there will be a scramble for the open. The closed theater will find itself at a disadvantage and the man with the screen at one end of a vacant lot and a projection room at the other is in the ascendant. With all due respect to Mr. Richardson, it is more apt to be a projection booth than a projection room, for all features of most airdomes are scamped and scant. Too many managements go at the enterprise with the feeling that the open air entertainment is more or less a transient affair and no more money is sunk in the scheme than is absolutely necessary to provide projection facilities and some sort of seats.

All this is a mistake. There are plenty of localities where the investment of a thousand dollars additional will bring a return of several hundred per cent. on the season, with much of the investment available for the following year.

Here in New York City the exactions ofthe police and fire departments, some of which seem to be needlessly severe, discourage the management from heavy investments, but even at that there is no excuse for some of the makeshift inclosures that we see. We know of one typical airdome that we look down into daily as we pass it on the elevated train. The lot is perhaps two hundred feet square, of which about thirty by fifty feet are covered with board benches that lie exposed to the elements all winter. The seating space is floored with boards as the law provides, but absolutely no effort has been made to improve the appearance of the unoccupied space. In a few weeks a man will spend a day cleaning up the cans and other debris thrown into the lot through the winter from the adjoining flat buildings, but otherwise the lot remains as it was when it was all a part of the wilderness; the naked rocks crop up through the bare, hardbaked soil, as barren and uninviting as the desert. At one end stands a gaunt frame work faced with warped boards over which a linen screen will be stretched, but there is no shadow box, no protection from light of any sort save a six-inch board across the top that is supposed to be all-sufficient to protect the screen from the street lamps and the bright moonlight of the summer nights.

When the doors are opened a couple of boys will wander up and down the aisles with a constant cry of "Candies! Peanuts! Five a bag," and will come to a halt to make a sale just as the situation on the screen becomes critical. When the boy has achieved his exchange he will move on, but the story will have been spoiled.

The boards of the fence may be whitewashed, as this was not done last year, but that is about all that will be done in the way of "fixing up."

Be Attractive.

No very great sum would be required to turn this place into an inviting open air theater. The loose rocks could be made into a rockery, ferns and flowers could be introduced, the ground could be leveled and sodded and instead of having to make a fight for the nickels of his patrons the proprietor could sit in his box office and watch the dimes and even quarters roll in.

It does not take much money, but it does take brains to make an attractive airdome. A rockery need not cost $10 and yet it will be worth a hundred times that in the suggestion of coolness that it affords. Tap the water pipe and put in a small hose nozzle. Build a concrete basin. Even a galvanized washtub with an overflow pipe will do. Some Saturday afternoon get in half a dozen small boys and promise them tickets for the entire opening week if they will gather up the stones in the lot. They'll work like grownups if you pick the right sort of boys, and by night you'll have a fine pile of stones. Mask in the basin and pipe with these, adjust the nozzle so that some of the spray strikes the rocks and you'll have a tiny fountain that will splash musically. If you want to go to a little more expense set a large electric light back of the fountain with a sheet of glass to cover and an electric or clockwork motor to revolve a color wheel and you have an electric fountain that can figure in your advertisements or on the streets outside of your house. Meantime you are rid of the rocks and can grade the ground with greater ease.

Spend a few dollars to turf the vacant spaces, set out some flowers, gravel your walks or lay down cinders, give the place the suggestion if not the appearance of a park, and you'll be surprised to note the difference in the calibre of your patronage if you advertise the place right.

There is a growing tendency toward larger and better photoplay theaters and this finds its reflection in the airdome patronage. The man who is used to all the comforts of a regular theater does not want to spend his summer evenings in a vacant lot sitting on the rough edge of a plank seat. Women in their light summer dresses do not want to visit holes in the wall and soil their dainty garments on board seats that have not been touched since they came from the lumber yards a few years ago. You may not be able to provide a double set of crash coverings as one manager does, but you can keep your benches clean. You may even be able to give each adult patron a sheet of clean wrapping paper to sit upon. It's a small matter, but you'll have shown a willingness to provide what comforts you may and if the paper costs half a cent a sheet and you draw a ten cent patron, the profit is apparent.

Be Attentive.

Do things to show your patrons that you watch their comfort. It is human nature to want to be fussed over and if you are there with quiet courtesy to look to the wants of your audience, you'll have a proper sized audience to watch over.

Provide light drinks and confections, but do not thrust them on your uncomfortable guests. If you do not want to run a stand yourself rent out the privilege to someone who will look after things right. Perhaps some nearby confectioner will be willing to arrange for a stand or serve cream, ices and soda from the shop, employing small boy salesmen. If you permit smoking, reserve one side of the house or certain rows for the non-smokers and ladies with no men escorts. Keep room down front for the small kiddies; they'll see better and you'll have them where you can keep them in better order.

And this season cut out the use of your park as a flirtation walk. Keep the young men and women from congregating at the rear of the seats and paying more attention to each other than to the pictures. You may lose the trade of a few, but if you check these tendencies courteously and tactfully you'll lose very few, and the straight laced who regard with disapproval the actions of these half grown boys and girls will add materially to your receipts and you'll have the young people, as well. More than one airdome scheme has failed to succeed because a short sighted manager permitted young people to laugh and carry on until the more staid patrons remained at home, unwilling to have their entertainment spoiled by shrill laughter and senseless remarks. If you are dependent on the patronage of the young people exclusively you'll soon find your place in disrepute.

This does not mean to check every evidence of enjoyment. Encourage laughter and applause for the pictures. There is a difference between that and the "mashing" to which reference is made.

Keep your entrance bright and attractive and keep the crowds of small boys away. No one wants to push his way through a score of small boys and girls thronged about the entrance to listen to the music. Make it possible to enter without obstruction.

Use Plenty of Paper.

Use plenty of lithographs on the fence, but do not merely paste them up. Get moulding and make frames and give a solid foundation to paste on. Use good strong color combinations to gain effect, but not so strong as to detract from the colors on the posters. A white fence with light blue frames is effective, so is blue on gray. Red on a rich brown is quiet. Black and yellow, red on yellow and even purple on yellow will do, but the yellow must be of a shade that will not turn dirty looking after short exposure to the weather.

Keep your "coming" attractions clearly labeled, and as soon as possible state the date when the subject is expected. If you can arrange for movable boards you will serve the double purpose of being able to move the immediate offerings closest to the entrance and to take them in during thundershowers and overnight, protecting them from being washed off by the rain or defaced by the small boy.

Don't use whitewash on the walls, particularly about the entrance. This will rub off on to the clothing in the rush and the glaring white is hot and trying to the eye. If you cannot afford paint and must have recourse to whitewash, tint it a soft green or some other glare-absorbing color, but use paint if you can afford it.

Arranging the Screen.

Mask the screen. Curtain effects are not practicable nor are they in keeping, but the bare surface should be masked in. One effective way would be to erect a trellis perhaps three feet in front of the picture. Cut an opening three or four feet larger than the picture on the screen so placed that the audience can see the picture from any section of the seats. Bank in the lower part with box trees, or non-flowering plants and train creeping vines over the trellis. Ivy is excellent for this and will last from year to year instead of requiring to be renewed yearly. This will give you a frame of growing green, but you can improve on this. Build a shadow box between the trellis and the screen. Paint the inside black; a dead black, as well as that portion of the screen not covered by the picture, and even on the brightest moonlight night the picture will be clear and distinct and gain wonderfully in quality. Run the trellis well above the screen and to each side, as far to the side as you conveniently can. If you cannot run it very far over, build wings on either side. This is particularly important if your screen is at the end nearest your entrance. It will keep people from passing between the picture and the seated audience and shut off the distraction of the entering crowd, enabling those already in their seats to view the picture with the least possible annoyance from the late arrivals.

Seating Arrangements.

It is not expedient to install costly seats, but some sort of a back should be provided. Do not save a couple of dollars on the paint and get pigment that will peel and crack. Have the seats washed off each afternoon in time to be thoroughly dry before the doors are opened and advertise the fact. Have a big sign stating that "Our seats are thoroughly cleaned every day" and make the "every" large enough to be clearly read. Perhaps you can obtain a supply of the rush cushions that are used on porches. These you can supply to the elder patrons or rent out for a small sum. In the neighborhood airdome, if you can arrange for the service, offer to check cushions for the regular patrons. Provide shelves and let each patron who will bring a cushion to suit his or her fancy. Take these up after the performance and be ready to hand them out quickly when the patron comes. It is an adaptation of the private cut in the barber shop, but anything that serves to give the patron the idea of regularity of attendance will prove beneficial. Get out a little circular or send out postcards something like this:

> Our seats are comfortable, but we supply cushions for a moderate fee or you can bring your own around and we'll take care of it for you. Have your own cushion. No charge for the service and no tip to the attendants. We'll take good care of it for you and hold it for your especial use.

Last year one old gentleman kept at a certain airdome one of the inflated rubber rings and declared that he had vanquished his one objection to the open air show.

If you do not supply cushions, get the white or brown wrapping paper or even paper towels. These last are thick and inexpensive, selling at three rolls of one hundred each for a dollar. They would be cheaper still in quantities. You will have to do something to counteract the prejudice against the bare benches if you want to get the best trade and you can do it with paper and advertising.

New Business.

And keep well in mind the fact that the summer is the best time of all to get the new business. The theaters are closed, people do not want to go trolley riding or to the resorts every night, yet if they must stay in town they want to be amused. Get after the people who during the winter spend their money on the dramatic theaters and if you give the right sort of performance you'll hold them after the theaters open again. If you have refreshments put chairs and tables at the rear of the seats, perhaps on a slightly elevated platform. Serve ices and sodas there. If there is a restaurant close at hand arrange to serve sandwiches and cold cuts. It will cost you nothing save the hire of a boy to run between the restaurant and your place, and many men and women who are too hot and tired to eat the heavy dinner at six will appreciate a bite as they watch the pictures. There'll be plenty light enough to see, and yet, if you use a shadow box the picture will be brilliant.

Make your place so attractive and convenient that the business man will prefer the airdome to the roof garden. If you can, provide parking space for automobiles, but avoid the noisy automobile parties. Fight all forms of summer amusement not violently but tactfully. Get after the automobilist with some catchline like "Don't bump over dusty roads. Come to the Rex Airdome. Just as much breeze, greater comfort and splendid pictures. Try it once. You'll not regret it." For the man who seeks the roof-garden say, "Why go downtown. You can drop around the corner to the Rex Airdome. There's a bite to eat, light drinks and a splendid program. Save time, save discomfort. Save money."

Each class can be reached with some such appeal and if you keep the circulars going out you'll get them in.

Free Tickets.

Send well-printed invitations to a selected list of addresses, to people whom you know are not likely to come without solicitation. Tell them you'll appreciate it if they'll be your guest some evening. Meet such tickets at the door, see that the holders are well seated, are made acquainted with all the comforts provided and made to feel at home. All of this can be done nicely and without familiarity. Be courteous but not too effusive, and once they are seated do not bother them again unless you can remember their faces and greet them as they pass out with a courteous inquiry as to whether they enjoyed their visit. If you can learn of the men who stay at home while their families go to the country make a bid for them. They are liable to drop in several evenings a week and perhaps they'll bring the family around just before the season ends. If you have a winter house you'll find them there, for if you use the right sort of program, you'll make fans of the men and women you would least expect to get.

Be sparing with your ticket distribution. Do not get the tickets all over your locality. Make them something valued because not every man, woman and child has a pocket full. You have no matinees, so make the night houses represent as much money as possible.

Rain Protection.

If you can manage it, have awnings; not tiny strips of canvas but ample rain protection. It is best, unless the seating space is narrow, to have a ridge pole run down the center aisle and drop on either side. If the space is narrow and deep have but one cloth with the slant away from the direction in which rain is most likely to be expected and a straight drop on each side.

Whatever protection you have, have it planned to be brought into operation quickly. Have regular awning drills with each man trained to drop his cloth in the shortest possible time. One park has the awning so tricked that the cutting of a single rope drops the entire system. The regular rigging is used to raise the awning later, but there is just one movement to get the curtains down. It's the first few seconds that count. If a woman gets her dress spattered, she doesn't care how dry she may be kept after that; the damage has been done.

As part of the rain protection see that the ground is such that it drains quickly. If local regulations do not require board flooring, use cinders and so ditch the sides that the surface water from outside cannot be brought into the seating space. Give the people confidence in your ability to protect them from the weather and it may mean ten dollars or more each threatening night.

Do Your Very Best.

Don't get the idea that because you run only three or four months a year that any old thing will do for an airdome. If you have a regular theater you can make business for the long winter season. If you have no covered house you may be paving the way toward that end. If you have proven your ability to conduct an airdome properly, you'll find it much easier to get capital when you look for it for the erection of a regular theater. You may even build on that lot and put a roof-garden airdome on top for the next summer.

In advertising you must work quickly and effectively. Get into the game on the jump and get all there is in it. You cannot run a long campaign as you would with a winter house. You must strike quickly and sharply. Do not trust too much to the regulars. Lots of your regulars are away and you must get in those that are left and the stranger within your gates as well. Get after the man you haven't got and you'll have two where you had one. Put pepper in your catchlines and play up comfort, coolness, convenience and cleanliness. Here are some suggested catch lines that will suggest the rest of the appeal.

> Keep cool, we'll show you how.
> Bring your overcoat—you'll need it.
> Don't sweat—shiver. We can explain.
> Come to the North Pole—it's right around the corner.
> You don't need a fan. We'll supply the breeze.
> Go to the seashore if you can;
> If you can't, come to the Rex and cool off.
> Don't sit on the steps all evening.
> We know it's hot, but we know where it's cool.

Please Don't.

Please don't run into that "Is it hot enough for you?" style of advertising. Advertise the coolness; not the heat. Don't rub it in by such irritating suggestion. Speak of the comfort to be had, not the discomforts endured. You get the same effect indirectly, but you do not collect a herd of goats at the same time. A man will catch more quickly at the suggestion of cool spots than at the bald statement that it's hot.

Get away from the idea that only the cheap people can be coaxed into your place. Make it the sort of place that will appeal to those used to luxury and they will come, too, to swell the crowd. All work along this line will appeal to your present patrons and if you get after the men who think two dollars not much for a seat at the theater, you'll get the regular spenders. Save in the poorest localities the five cent show should be dropped for the summer. Charge ten cents and give at least a ten cent show. Build up with specials, play for extra attractions, but keep the price up. You can get it, and perhaps when you go under cover again in the winter you can still get the dime instead of the nickel.

In many localities you'll find that you can erect boxes at the sides of the regular seats and get twenty-five cents for seats as easily as you can ten. Lots of people would come if the prices were higher. They do not want to sit with the ten cent people. This is snobbish, but it's human nature and you're in the amusement business not to educate snobs but to cater to them if you can make it profitable without offending the other patrons. Try some sort of box scheme this summer and see how it works. In most places where it has been tried it works splendidly.

Photographs.

In the next few weeks we shall be particularly glad to receive photographs of airdomes that are out of the ordinary and airdome advertising of all sorts. Let's have your schemes and we'll pass along to you the schemes the other managers send in.

Has a Booklet.

Here is a letter from W. S. McLaren, of the Princess Theater, Chelsea, Michigan. He says:

> Inclosed you will find our first "booklet," which we have distributed from house to house and mailed to our country patrons. We trust that you will not call us too hard on our maiden effort, as it was gotten out in a hurry. We expect to issue them every two weeks, giving our Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday program, but not our Saturday program, as we do not get advance bookings on films except features. We are running only four nights each week now, on account of local conditions, our leading factory having failed.
> We note what you say in your last issue regarding "hanging a poster in the window of the corner grocery." We think we have a better one than that for small towns. We have two "A" boards, painted black, with a removable front (many fine wires drawn tight across, instead of glass, which hold poster in place), which we set out on principal corners about town, changing location of them each day. We tried putting posters in windows, but find that "A" board puts the poster "right in the person's eye" and is much better. We have a small snipe reading Princess—Tuesday, etc., which we fasten on poster and we find it's great advertising. We use three posters in front of theater and four in "A" boards on each feature.
> It might be of interest to you to know that we conducted a voting contest as to whether our patrons wanted the illustrated song continued. They voted it down 3 to 1, and voted for multiple reel pictures over single reels 4 to 1.

The booklet is small, even for its age, but it's a step in the right direction and we hope that the success of the scheme will lead to longer strides along the same path. Most managers know what an "A" board is, if they do not they can look at the letter and understand that the two sides of the "A" each carry a poster, the cross bar keeping the lower ends from stretching apart.

We think that most audiences would vote against the illustrated song if they were given opportunity and would vote for the multiple reel for the reason that the additional footage permits the story to be told intelligently and intelligibly.

The booklet gives the leader for each of three performances for two weeks, the back page being given to chatty paragraphs and humor, the most markedly humorous paragraph being to the effect that Maurice Costello has two children, a boy and a girl. The paragraph does not state whether Helen or Dolores is the boy. To induce a reading of the program a prize of ten tickets is offered the person sending in the longest list of misspelled words. A good catchline on the front is "keep me, and keep posted."

We think something more attractive than a line cut of a projection machine could be used on the front page in subsequent issues.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

The Dinner.

REMEMBER that it is not so long before May 31 comes along and you'll be sorry if before then you do not get a ticket to the third dinner of the photoplay writers, this time given under the auspices of the Inquest Club. It is not intended to send out invitations. This is a personal invitation to you. George Hennessy, Benjamin Barondess and the editor of this department are the committee. Requests for tickets may be addressed to either of the three.

When Sending to Edison.

When you send stories to the Edison Company send them to the Thomas A. Edison, Inc., 2826 Decatur Avenue, Bedford Park, New York City. If, for any particular reason you desire them sent to Bannister Merwin, they should be sent to England, but if you are sending them to Edison do not send them to Mr. Merwin, who is a regular contributor to the Edison product, but who is no more than a contributor, differing from you only in that he sells more of his product to that company.

It is the height of asininity to address your scripts to the editor or other official of any company unless you are personally acquainted with the individual addressed. Only the very young writers still suppose that to address the editor direct is to stand a better chance of quick action and profitable sale. If you still cling to this moth-eaten tradition, drop it. Address the Manuscript Department of the company and your story will receive precisely the same treatment as though it were addressed to Jones or Smith or Brown personally. We know one writer who persistently addressed the Reliance's office boy in the fond belief that he was getting on the inside with the editor.

And we may as well repeat what we have said before. Edison has no editor of photoplays. The system followed there is different from that obtaining in other studios.

And just remember that Bannister Merwin has been in England almost a year now. It is just as intelligent to send Edison scripts to him as it is to send them to President Wilson or Mrs. Pankhurst.

For Editors.

A Los Angeles correspondent makes a valuable suggestion to editors. He sends in a clipping of a Kinemacolor story that is very much like one he wrote himself and submitted to that company. He is willing to admit that it is quite likely that the editors had their own story in hand when his was submitted, but suggests that in such a case they add to the formal rejection sheet the statement that they are already working on a similar script.

We think that with the experienced Dougherty on the editorial desk there will be no Kinemacolor complaints, but the suggestion is one that all editors should study as it so frequently happens that a story is received very much like one already accepted. The story in question follows such obvious lines that it is in a class with at least fifty that we have examined ourselves, but that doesn't take the sting out of the discovery that it is too late and the word as to production already in hand will do much to create a better feeling.

If You Live in St. Louis.

If you live in St. Louis send in your name and address if you want to help form a circle. A practical photoplay writer wants to get in touch with his kind.

Regulating the Director.

We are glad to note a tendency to direct the activities of the director. It has been a long time coming, but presently we shall see the director lifted from his present dictatorial position and the man who carries the scripts around with him to "fix up" and turns them back a couple of months later, black, crumpled and utterly ruined for further service is going to find that the old order changeth.

Here is an extract from a letter from a well-known author:

> In the interest of photoplay writers, generally, let me ask you what chance you see for a more deliberate production of photoplays, and therefore better opportunity for the author to keep his finger on the interpretation of his work. The question is one that will have to be answered sooner or later if the writing of photoplays is to become an art.

And along the same lines comes this other comment from a man who proves that several times he has been blamed in criticism for matters that are entirely foreign to his script, the interpolations of the director who put the story on. He says in part:

> Producers do as well as they can; but no matter how carefully you may work out a script, they are bound to make changes unless you are there to argue the matter with them. In many cases I have been staying away from the picture theaters simply to avoid the heart-breaking experience of seeing something which is supposed to be my own. Of course changes are inevitable in production, but the changes should be in accordance with a correct interpretation of the story.

We think that we were the first to point out the proper relation of author, editor and producer and we are glad to see others coming to our way of thinking. In a recent issue our own Louis Reeves Harrison wrote in his forceful style of the evil, but at that he only scratched the surface.

Of course there are directors and directors, but the function of the director should be to realize the author's ideas. He should be contented with that function, for it is not often that he possesses the selective as well as the reproductive faculty. He is a producer, a realizer, but he is not and cannot well be, by the very nature of his work, a competent appraiser of the work of the others.

The argument is simple. The director is the stage manager. He looks for the dramatic points, he brings out the dramatic value of situation and incident. He seeks for this and for this alone. But below the situation and incident must lie the soul of the story, the literary quality, if you will, in contrast to the dramatic values. This the director, trained to expression through voice and motion, does not and cannot see. It does not follow that because he can put into vivid action the ideas of the author, that he can as surely reach the author's ideas. To argue that would be to argue that the man who builds a house is as competent to design one as the architect who gives him the plans. It may be that he can design a house, but in the very nature of things he is apt to go on designing the sort of houses he has built instead of looking for new ideas. That house he has erected is a thorough job. He will build another like it and so make as good a job. Meantime the architect studies and plans. He produces a structure as fine, as substantial, but wholly different. He has made a study of designing. He has done nothing else. It is his specialty. It is his work.

Story planning should be the work of the author; story building, the erecting of the plan into the substantial structure of the photoplay, is the work of the director, but between there comes the editor, a man specially trained to realize the work of the story planner and the story builder. He stands a middleman, controlling the practical ideas of the producer and the fancy of the writer, the connecting link between the dreamer and the realist. He can see the literary quality of the author and the dramatic practicability of the producer and if he knows his business he can so work that the best efforts of author and producer are united in the perfect production. He knows dramatic work and he knows the art of writing. He combines the two into a perfect whole, but he can do this only where he can control both the source and the outlet, when he can restrain the director or spur him on as the case may need. He has the literary sense of the writer tempered by the knowledge of studio needs. Given proper authority and himself well qualified, he can pass the story to the director in such a form that adherence to the script will produce a perfect play in competent hands.

But it so seldom that he has this authority that the studios where the system prevails may be counted upon the fingers of one hand. As a rule the director does precisely as he pleases with a script. If he is told to make a story, no matter how carefully the story may have been worked out for him, he twists and tortures it into precisely the same sort of story he made last time and the sort of story he will make next when this is done. He makes four of two and two, but he also makes four of six and three, of seven and nine, of whatever sum he is given. No matter what the script may be at the start, he reduces it to the dead level of his own imagination on the plea that he cannot produce what does not appeal to him and must be permitted to change the script until this appeal is created.

That this is wrong, that it is an injustice to author, editor and manufacturer alike is apparent to any thinking mind. It is unjust to the author because his creation is made commonplace, to the editor because his care is wasted and he is blamed for the faults of the producer, but most of all it is unjust to the manufacturer because the artistic value of his product is destroyed. No matter how good may be the stories that are purchased, the studio product of this week is the same as that of last week, of last month, perhaps of last year, and all because a man in the manufacturer's employ proclaims himself to be superior to all rules of business usage.

We think we can reply to our first correspondent that the dawning of a new day is at hand. Already we hear whispers of changes in the relations between the studio and the editorial office. To put it into the useful slang of the day, the manufacturer is "getting wise" to an abuse too long continued. He is learning that the creative, the selective and the producing faculties are seldom united in a single person and the day of the know-it-all director is drawing to the dusk. Once more the quaint philosophy of Lincoln is being realized. You cannot fool all of the people all of the time. The next six months will see great changes in studio affairs—changes for the better.

Writing and Selling.

You can write stories, but can you write stories that sell? If you can write stories that will sell, can you sell them? You say you can, but can you? Is it your fault that the last script came back, or is it due to the thick headedness of the editor who utterly fails to recognize true merit when he sees it?

We have been watching with interest the selling schemes of a recent addition to the ranks of those who get their stuff accepted. He found a new market and was paid pretty good money for a half-reel idea. Now instead of waiting until he conceived another idea as good, he started right in to write a half-reel comedy a day and shoot them over to the obliging editor as soon as they were written. The first story got back just one day ahead of the eighth, for by that time the editor was beginning to sit up and take notice, and in self-defense he sent the stuff right back. In self-defense, because, being a wise editor, he knew that he would get one poor script a day until something of that sort was done. The writer had found a new market and was proceeding to overwork it.

In the same way he sold a drama of a rather unusual character. There was a touch of mysticism that redeemed a commonplace foundation. The story sold promptly, but the next eleven did not. They all came back home, the first at the end of the week, the second the day after it was mailed.

Not discouraged, he tried another tack. A story with some trick work found favor. For the next ten days every idea that came to him was tortured into a trick play, until the editor called a halt and explained that he wanted a little variety to the subjects put out by his company.

A melodrama with plenty of drama and not very much crime was the next seller, and immediately the typewriter streamed gore. If the mild melodrama was a bit, a "powerful" one would probably be a better seller, and so the butchery began and continued until the second story written came back with a reminder that there was a Board of Censorship waiting for such stuff with an axe.

All of this sounds like a purely imaginary story, but it isn't. The young writer merely did with enthusiasm what hundreds of others do more temperately. He simply went ahead and spoiled four perfectly good markets, and he differed from the others only that he accomplished his ruination more quickly than the others because he works more rapidly.

Don't imagine that because you manage to land a story of a certain sort with an editor any story of the same general character will sell. And don't bombard any editor with a script a day unless the editor asks you to. Most editors have "bugs," and if you feed the bug you can land stuff with him, but even a "bug" can die from overfeeding. We made the pleasant discovery once that the editor of the Sunday section of one of the New York papers would take any story about an odd room. Before we gave up writing "Sunday stuff" we had written up about fifty odd rooms, but it took us three years to get rid of them, because we knew that if we gave him his choice of three or four rooms a week he would soon tire of them. We nursed it along, and just the other day he told us that he wished we could tell him about some more odd rooms we have seen. He didn't even realize that he had the "bug," and no one else seemed to see it, so we had a monopoly simply because we did not overwork it.

It's the same way with an editor or producer. Find out what he likes, if you can, and then do not overwork the discovery. Nurse it along, but when you get a really good editor, send him only your best work. Get him in the habit of thinking that it must be good if it comes from you. Now and then give him a story that he can reject, because he'll feel there is something wrong if he takes everything you send in. Let him send back one in four or five.

That comes, of course, after you've gotten in right, but the more important matter is getting in right. Look over the stories on the screen. Study the production of the companies through the printed synopses. Select the companies whose style of production comes closest to the story form you write best. Send all your good stuff along these lines to that studio first. Do not be in too much of a hurry to get in touch with the editor. Do not try to force his friendship, but be content if gradually he sits up and takes notice to the extent of adding a personal line or two to the printed form. Thank him briefly and not too profusely for his hint and show that you are appreciative by trying to follow his suggestions. Later on he will grow more friendly and you can change the tone of your letters to correspond, but if you are in too much of a hurry to "get next" you'll spoil your chances of a market there and get your stuff declined with distressing regularity.

When you do establish a friendship do not abuse it. Because he is friendly is no reason why you should ask him to read three or four stories a week or why you should expect him to keep buying all your stuff. Vary your product as much as is possible within the lines followed by the company. Show that you have more than one style of plot.

The nicer an editor is to you, the nicer you should be to him, but its the other way around with most writers, and the moment an editor shows a disposition to be nice to an author he is flooded with the accumulation of months or years of rejected scripts and all sorts of fantastic travesties of the ideas he really wants.

It doesn't pay to write only a single style of script because you have found an easy market for a couple of the sort. That is just the reason why the market will be hard. Stick to a general style, if you will, but do not overwork a good idea the moment you get it, do not bother your pet editor and do not lay all your eggs in one basket unless you are pretty certain that someone is not going to steal the basket from you some day.

There is as much in selling a play as in being able to write one. Sometimes there is more.

Well, Well, Well!

We are indebted to George W. Terwilliger for digging out of the New York Times this little gem of a wail from a correspondent of that paper. It runs:

> Frequently within the last two or three years literary friends of mine, including book and play writers, have complained to me, more or less good naturedly, of their poor luck in selling a photoplay to any of the purchasers of such material. I knew they were capable writers, successful in their own field, and I wondered a little that they had not landed, knowing that the film firms were demanding material constantly. During the past week I have been to see a few of the moving picture melodramas shown on Broadway, and now I know why they did not. I also know, and am willing to make affidavit to it, that any one who is capable of writing a photoplay is not capable of writing anything else, unless it is a check, which I understand some of them can do quite successfully.
> Nobody knows until he has had a night of moving picture melodrama what a photoplay manager and a photoplay writer can do with a 5-and-10-cent public. Then he doesn't know which of the three to be sorriest for.

The reason that "book and play writers" cannot sell their scripts is because they cannot write practical photoplays. If we wanted to disclose confidences we could tell this disgruntled person the names of half a dozen authors of distinction who market their wares under another name and a half hundred who would be only to glad to do so, if they could write producible stuff. Some photoplay writers, it is true, cannot write magazine stories, but most of them can and do not, because photoplay returns so much more money for the time invested. We gave up magazine work a year ago, because we could get as much for an hour's work at photoplay as we could for a story that would take us six or seven hours. We would like to see the correspondent's affidavit that people who can write plays cannot write stories. We know of a number of scrap books we could show him. It is more or less to laugh.

Has a "Plugger."

A correspondent writes that one of the Denver photoplay fakers employs a plugger who "drops in" whenever a prospect shows up and wants to know if the alleged sales bureau has sold any of his scripts lately. The head of the concern joyously responds that he sold all three for $75 eac', then generally collects a fee from the prospect. Some of these schools and sales bureaus are doing coarse work.

One of the Los Angeles exchanges is said to be running a school "on the side." It's funny that the supply of dupes lasts so long, but the "no literary ability required" is a tempting bait.

Cutting it Down.

Now comes a Chicago "college" to offer its course for $5, instead of the usual ten. The excuse is that the pupil will act as "agent" for the college. The agent does not have to promise to sell any courses. All that is required is that he tell his friends about it. The letter runs on:

> You will probably be surprised to learn from these letters how simple, how interesting, how enjoyable writing photoplays becomes after having finished OUR COURSE. And you will be more surprised to learn how easy our students have found it to dispose of their plays, when they made it known to the film companies that they were graduates of our college.

Just about the easiest way to get in bad with the film companies is to tell that you graduated from a course at a college.

Inquiries.

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of addresses to which photoplays may be sent will be mailed on receipt of a STAMPED AND ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

A. B. D.—Use No. 10 and No. 11 envelopes and twenty-pound paper. Your question will be more fully answered in this or an early photoplaywright department.

A. S. H.—Write the company for release date and final title. We do not find that title.

CYNTHIA—We do not place the Butler. Henry Walthall is the player you ask for in "Oil and Water." Miss Clair McDowell was the mother in "A Father's Lesson," and Miss Kathlyn Williams in "A Little Child Shall Lead Them." Wheeler Oakman was the cobbler's son in "The Flaming Forge."

CHAS. L.—Miss Marguerite Snow was the Forest Rose in Thanhouser of that title. She seems still to be with the company.

A. D.—Miss Margarita Fischer was the Frenchwoman in "The Great Ganton Mystery." The Answers Man has no opinion as to the merits of any player. Universal handles scripts promptly now unless they are held for consideration.

J. M. D.—If you have had stage experience you might apply in person to the studios for work as an extra, gradually working in. It's a slow process, at best. It does little or no good to write.

J. C.—Company not in market for outside scripts.

RUBENA—Miss Lillian Logan was the detective's sweetheart in "Ferrets."

CAMERA—Write the Crouse College of Fine Arts, Syracuse University, Syracuse, N. Y., for prospectus.

W. A. G.—It was Miss Mona Darkfeather. We have not seen that Puritan film. Universal records no such title as mentioned in your third question. Owen Moore is with Victor. How can we tell how long a company will last? Be reasonable, and do not express opinions; ask questions.

H. P. B.—The first named magazine has suspended. You may get back your script by addressing A. W. Thomas, in care of the Motion Picture Story Magazine. The second magazine you name has suspended. The editor is said to have left town very hurriedly for a distant state. There were others who lost a great deal more than a quarter.

C. M. S.—The character in "The Exposure of the Land Swindlers," was an extra, whose name is not known to the company.

NORMA—The Kay-Bee identifier is still under the weather. It is as well to send a very brief note in acknowledgment of a check. It is not necessary, but it would be a courtesy.

A. W. B.—See above.

RUBENA—Miss Lottie Pickford is not in pictures at present.

RICHARD ROE—Hector Dion was the father in "A Father's Lesson." In "The Higher Duty," the wife and nurse were, respectively, Miss Edna Payne and Miss Isabelle Lamon.

E. T.—We do not know who wrote "The Equine Hero." Probably it was written in the studio to fit the horse's tricks.

C. B.—Miss Mary Charleston was Marie in "The Hat." Edwin August is now with Vitagraph. Miss Florence Barker died some time ago. Miss Bernard is on the speaking stage.

HELENE—The correct title is "A Life in the Balance." Miss Francella Billington played Florette.

H. H. P.—If you sent a script addressed to Bannister Merwin, you deserve to lose it. Scripts sent to the Bronx studios will be read for speaking or silent plays as appears from the script. Vitagraph passes on scripts the day received. Those held for consideration must wait the convenience of the men higher up.

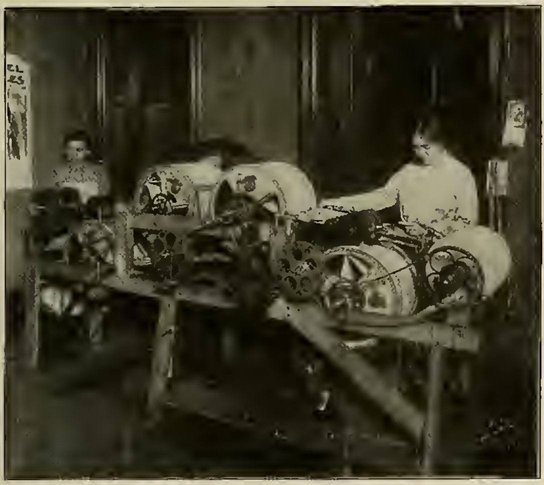
Film Renovator.

WE see illustrated herewith the machine made by the Rex Film Renovator Manufacturing Company. At this writing the editor has not had the opportunity of personally examining this device, but he is informed that the film is cleaned very thoroughly, without doing it any damage whatever. The first of these machines will be installed by the Lake Shore Film Company, Cleveland, Ohio, May 1st. It will be put on exhibition in the Motion Picture Exposition, New York. It is not claimed that the machine will make new films out of old, but its manufacturers do claim that 60-day films, after being treated, cannot be distinguished, except for any jumps caused by cut-outs, from 10-day stuff. Mr. R. D. Hanish, the patentee, has for a number of years made film renovating a study. When the film is treated it passes from the reel on the left on the front side of the machine to an idler and between rollers to the reel on the right. This process is designed for softening film, and it is allowed to stand on the second reel for 20 minutes to assist in the softening process. Old films which are very hard should stand for from 10 to 24 hours. After being thus treated it passes from the reel where the girl's hand is seen, at the left, over the drum located under the two upper drums, to the reel at the right, and it is during this passage the cleaning takes place. The two upper drums clean one side, and the two lower end drums the other. Three reels can pass through at one operation.



It is to be sincerely hoped that all the claims of the manufacturer of this device will be made good. A frequent, thorough cleaning of films would add very largely to the excellence of the show, since it would go a long way toward removing rain marks and kindred evils now present on all too many theater screens.

Operators, Take Particular Notice!

Letter from International President Shay.

Editor Projection Department.

Dear Sir and Brother.—The General Executive Board of International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees of the United States and Canada, affiliated with American Federation of Labor, has instructed me, as their Chief Executive Officer, to more thoroughly organize the men working at our craft. This organization, is, as you know, composed of over 300 separate and distinct locals, scattered in all parts of the United States and Canada, with a total membership of over 15,000 loyal men—men who have shown, and are daily showing, by their actions and speech, that they are the strongest of strong believers in real fundamental principles of organization—men who are fighting consistently and persistently for the progress of the movement, the betterment of the craft and the improvement of the conditions of organized labor in general. While we have made wonderful progress during the past twenty years, there are still certain cities of sufficient size and importance to warrant the organization of the men working at our craft, and we are very desirous of organizing these cities and towns within thirty to sixty days. We want the men who are working on the stages of theaters and in the operating rooms of moving picture theaters to enjoy the many benefits and the protection afforded by the I. A. T. S. E. We desire to improve the working and financial conditions of every man working as a stage mechanic or a moving picture operator. We want to place them in a position which will enable them to continually progress, and to secure permanent solidity and absolute protection. To this end I would ask that stage mechanics and moving picture operators in unorganized cities and towns forward to me, at their earliest convenience, the following information: (1) Your own name and address. (2) the names of each theater in your city, (3) the kind of a theater it is, (4) the names of employees working on the stage, or as operators, and (5) the age, experience and position occupied by each man; also (6) information as to whether he belongs to any union. I would like, (7) also, to have the name of the man most competent to organize a local union in your city, together with his street address.

Trusting you will set this matter forth in the Projection Department at your earliest convenience, and that operators in unorganized cities and towns will respond liberally, I am

Fraternally yours,
Charles C. Shay, International President I. A. T. S. E.

International President Shay.

The Editor of this department has met International President Shay upon several occasions, but these meetings have, until the last one, been of the most brief character. During an experience covering many years, in which I was in close touch with many labor leaders, I learned, and very thoroughly learned, the fact that the combination of real ability and genuine honesty in a labor leader was not the easiest thing in the world to find. I also was made thoroughly acquainted with the fact that, as a general proposition, labor leaders were more or less hard drinkers, though, in the very nature of things, there was considerable excuse to be found for this condition. It was therefore, with a great deal of interest that I observed our International President closely at our previous brief meetings, and the impression conveyed to my mind was wholly and entirely favorable. But I was not sure. Recently, however, I took dinner with President Shay at the Elks' Club, in New York City, and spent the evening there with him. It was just we two alone, and we spent the whole evening discussing the affairs of the International. I was more than pleased during this lengthy conference, to have my previous good opinion of Charles Shay thoroughly confirmed. I am now prepared to say, and stand by my statement, that Charles Shay is thoroughly honest; that he is a clean-cut gentleman who has the real interest of our International Union very much at heart. I want to say further that, with these facts in mind, well knowing the extreme difficulty of finding an able man (and I call Charles Shay a thoroughly able man), who is clean, honest and shrewd, to fill such a position as that of International President, I am prepared to earnestly advise his retention in that office, provided he will consent to again be a candidate. Brother Shay very rightly says that, laying aside the fact that Mrs. Shay strenuously objects to playing the part of grass-widow while he is wearing himself out chasing around over the country, enduring the many things such an official must endure, he can make more money, and make it far easier in private life.

I am speaking of this matter at this time because this conference I speak of occured very recently and the thing is very fresh in my memory; also for the reason that, as the time for our International Convention approaches and, in my judgment, the delegates from the various unions should be instructed absolutely as to whom to support for the office of president. Now, please do not run away with the idea that Brother Shay has in any manner prompted me to say these things. He most emphatically did not. I personally know, however, that in conventions it is a lamentable fact that the election of officers too often degenerates into a mere popularity contest, rather than the seeking of the man best qualified to fill the positions with honor and credit to the organization.

Let me say that it behooves the International to be very careful in its selection of officers at the next convention. The various theatrical interests have combined. They deny it, but it is nevertheless the fact. Unless I am sadly mistaken the International Union is going to be confronted with the fight of its life before very long, and it is going to take a man with a good stiff backbone and a large bunch of brains at the top of it to lead the I. A. T. S. E. through to victory.

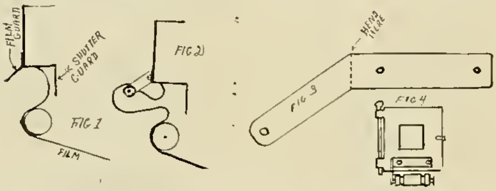
This I want to impress upon you as strongly as I can: the foregoing is but the setting forth of my own mind in these matters. I hold no brief for Charles Shay, or anyone else; but I do want to see him retained as the head of our organization because I am thoroughly convinced that he is eminently qualified to fill that important office in the best possible manner, and for the best interest of all concerned.

Now, before I close this matter, let me say a word on the "popularity contest" business in the election of officers. Time and again, in convention, I have been asked to vote for this man and that man, wholly and solely on the grounds that he was a "good fellow." Time and again I have seen officers elected, and International officers too, who had very little qualifications for the office, but were immensely popular with the delegates; in other words, were "good fellows" and, while it is true that this line of procedure is not followed quite so much nowadays, it is nevertheless the fact that it still prevails in altogether too many cases. There should be only one thing considered in the election of officers at the International Convention, and that one thing should be: is the man qualified by experience, knowledge, shrewdness, tactfulness and all those various qualities which go to make up the successful executive officer? Personally, I repeat, I would like to see the International President at least elected by semi-referendum, which can be done by the various unions instructing their delegates as to who they should support for International President and I strongly advise all unions to take that course, making the instructions ironclad.

Hands Brother Sargent a Bundle.

Mr. E. L. Cherry, Owosso, Mich., contributes the following:

I enclose rough sketch of a scheme that may help some operator who is having trouble with the lower loop of the Edison Exhibition model. This model is sent out with a plate or film guard fastened to the gate (Fig. 1), but this is seldom found on the machine after it has been in use any length of time. The piece shown in Fig. 3 is cut out of galvanized sheet iron. A nail will answer as a pin for the roller to turn on, and should be soldered to the bracket (Fig. 4). This double loop runs much smoother and quieter than the short loop, and will avoid a great amount of trouble, especially when running old film. The roller should be about 1¼ inches from gate.



Probably you have never heard of this burg, but it is on the map. There are three good houses here. Two of them use the Motiograph machine and Fort Wayne compensarc. I don't know what they have in the other house. There are about 18,000 people to draw from. They all run three reels and no song for 5 cents. Projection is mostly good. In the March 1st World, under heading "Bump, Zing, Zowie!" (page 886), Mr. Freeland expresses his sentiments on the matter of subjects. He criticises plots and perforations and blames the whole thing to over-production. The film makers may be exceeding the speed limit, but it seems there are others who are also going some. On page 673 of the February 15th issue Mr. Epes Winthrop Sargent states that he writes $50 scenarios in 50 minutes. He says that the "trained" photoplaywright should not require more than two hours to write a full-reel subject. "Trained" scenario writers will kindly take notice that the official time limit is now two hours per thousand feet of film. Mr. Sargent, under heading "The Fiction Writer Again," states there is no reason why the scenario should command as high a price as the story. He goes on to explain that the story must be written and re-written, etc., but the scenario can be ground out offhand in 50 minutes. He gives the general impression that the silent drama is a pretty crude affair and can never rise above its present level. Read the article; it will do your heart good. Probably Mr. Freeland will have a better opinion of the plots if he also reads Mr. Sargent's statements. Mr. Freeland says that not one subject in twenty is worthy of screen room. It is an unfortunate fact that the average person who patronizes the picture shows thinks about the same as Mr. Freeland does. They endure reel after reel of "hash," that they may enjoy a real photoplay—the one reel out of twenty that is almost worth while. And I think it is a safe bet that that one play was not written inside of Mr. Sargent's two-hour limit. I do not dispute Mr. Sargent's contention that the high-priced fiction writer cannot produce picture plays that are worth more than the work of the average photoplaywright. But I do say that there are reasons why the worth-while photoplay should command as high a price as the good fiction story.

Well, I guess this will hold brother Sargent for a minute. Now will you be good, Epes Winthrop, dern you? I have to apologize to brother Cherry. His letter somehow got mislaid. It was written in February, and I only discovered it a week ago, among a mass of other correspondence.

The Supper Hour.

Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

With regard to supper hour and union matters which a recent letter of Brooklyn speaks of, in which the statement is made that "it is all very well with a single man, but with a married man it is different." I want to remark that many single men are supporting mothers, sisters, or perhaps both, and have just as great responsibilities as the married men. I am the one who wrote the first letter, saying that all men ought to see that they get a supper hour. It is quite true there are many men who will work without it, and where one has a motor-driven machine it is a different story, too, since he can then wash his hands and eat without trouble. When I wrote I had only hand-driven machines in mind. But if all operators would demand the supper hour the thing would be very quickly settled, because if a manager finds that he cannot hold an operator without giving him a supper hour he will soon wake up and give a good man time enough to eat. I read Mr. Charles Smith's statement that wobbling of the revolving shutter will cause out-of-focus effect. I noticed this same thing myself. The picture is not really out of focus, but has a slight travel ghost which makes it appear so. One night I noticed all horizontal objects were slightly out of focus, while those which stood vertical were O. K. I asked the manager to step up to the screen and see in which direction the ghost was traveling. He did not believe there was one until he got up close to the screen and saw one was really traveling down from all but vertical objects. Between reels I moved the shutter slightly backwards and everything was O. K. Another thing which causes out-of-focus effect is if gears grind very much the jarring caused thereby has the effect of making the picture quiver across the aperture, the same as a drumhead quivers when it is beaten.

As to the shutter wobbling, I do not see that that would have the effect of causing either an out-of-focus appearance or travel ghost. If there is a slight travel ghost it has the effect of injuring the definition, true, but the remedy is to set the shutter. Operators would find it a distinct advantage to have a pair of opera glasses, so that they could closely examine their pictures for slight faults of this kind. I cannot agree that there is any more reason why a man running a motor-driven machine should not have a supper hour than his cranking brother. Most emphatically every operator, whether running a motor-driven or hand-power machine, should have time to eat, and not eat in an operating room, either.

Wants to Correspond.

Mr. George S. Dalrymple, proprietor Family Theater, Youngsville, Pa., writes:

As one of the readers of the department I feel I am due to thank you for the many benefits received. I also wish to congratulate you on the new Handbook. It certainly is a very thorough book on moving picture work, and one which every operator and manager should own. I wish some way could be found to persuade the operators or managers to study that book. If they would only do so, most certainly our films would be received in better condition and many other evils would be remedied. Your reply to "Several Operators," March 15th issue, is very good. I am in a small village and see things just the way you do. For the benefit of your readers let me say that small, wire paper clips, such as are used for holding papers together, will be found very useful in connecting films in the lower magazine when the film has been torn in two. I also have a very good method for making opaque announcement slides, the same requiring only one glass. If any of the brothers wish to correspond with me I will advise them how this is done.

For your kind words, neighbor Dalrymple, accept our thanks. As to the paper clips, the suggestion is a good one. The two ends can be lapped a couple of inches and instantly temporarily fastened by these little wire arrangements, so that the show can be resumed without much delay. The patch can be made afterward, of course.

Testing For Grounds.

Brooklyn, N. Y., orders a handbook and asks how to test for grounds in the rheostat or economizer. Brooklyn will find method of testing for ground described on page 106 of the Handbook.

He Loaned It.

Mr. J. L. Magers, manager Orpheum Theater, Blackwell, Okla., writes:

Enclosed find check for $2.50, for which please forward me a copy of your Handbook, as "I need thee every hour." The Handbook is a great help to any one in the business. I had one of the old books and loaned it to a friend; therefore I now have none. Please send the new one as soon as possible, and I will loan it—not.

The moral of the above is twofold: (a) Get a handbook. (b) Do not lend it. If the "other fellow" thinks enough of the book that he wants to study it, tell him to invest $2.50 and get one of his own.

Mr. Everett Wagner, Thomasville, N. C., writes:

Our current is a. c. I had a little trouble with my light, and the superintendent of the light plant asked me what kind of carbons I was using. I told him ⅝ cored carbons above and below. He says, "There is your trouble. You should use a half-inch hard below and let it take the lead—that is to say, let it out a little farther in front in the top carbons." I told him that was the d. c. set, but he contended that it was correct for a. c. He claims that perfect a. c. light can be had using ⅝ hard carbons above and below, but that is not the best. He also says he can put a perfectly good picture on an average size screen, using a. c. with a 30-ampere fuse.

The superintendent also said a good many other things, but what is the use consuming valuable space publishing such piffle as this? If the superintendent is better posted than some twenty thousand operators; if he knows more than all the authorities on projection combined, then he is wasting his time fooling with the superintendency of a light plant. Let him come here to New York and get $200 a week, instead of that much a month. Just let the superintendent talk as much as he wants to, brother Wagner, but you keep right on using cored carbons below and above with a. c. As to putting on a good a. c. picture of "average size," using 30-ampere fuses, why, that does not mean anything. What does the man mean by "average size," and does he mean feeding the arc through a transformer or through a rheostat? If the former, most certainly he can. If the latter, he most certainly cannot, and there you are. Talk is cheap, brother Wagner, but it takes real knowledge to put the right kind of projection on the screen. All the "talk" in the world will not do that.

Motiograph Machine.

Mr. H. D. McCain, Harrison, Idaho, asks if I consider a 1909 Model Motiograph capable of projecting as good a picture as the later models. If not, can I suggest any change in shutter, lens, etc., which might improve the picture? No; I do not consider it practical to do as uniformly good work with the old model machines as with the new Nor is it practical to so change the old model machine that the same work can be done. Many improvements have been made in the lamp, lamphouse, mechanism and stand, all of which, in one way or another, make for better work, since they not only enable the operator to handle his light better, but also reduce vibration and in general enable him to produce better results, although the intermittent movement, lens and shutter have been changed very little, if any.

Machine Chirps.

Canton, Pa., writes:

> I am annoyed by a "chirp," or rattle, which has developed in my Power's 6-A machine, and which I am unable to locate. The sound is very sharp and can be heard in all parts of the house, although it is not present when the machine is run without the film. I have tested every sprocket idler and every part that the film touches on its way through the machine, and everything seems to be O. K. Do you consider it a good plan to attach a color wheel to the cone of the stereopticon? Can you suggest a plan that will enable me to use the stereopticon as a flood light to cover the entire stage? I trust you can answer the above through our indispensable Projection Department.

As to that chirping machine of yours, I hardly know what to say, but would recommend that you set up the intermittent movement as per Instruction No. 39, page 281 of the handbook. If any operator has had a similar experience, let him set it forth. Certainly a color wheel can be attached in front of the stereopticon cone, but you cannot use a stereo for flood light unless one of the condensers be removed. Even then it would hardly be practical.

One-Armed Operator.

From Indianapolis, Ind., comes the following:

> I have a copy of your latest handbook and think it is great. Did you ever come across a one-armed operator? Well, allow me to introduce myself. I have only one hand—the left. Have been running a projection machine for five years, and giving satisfaction—or, at least, everybody says I am; also they say that I have the best a. c. light they have ever looked at. Am using a B. & H. transformer that has had four years' service, and I get a spot like a rectifier spot—perfectly round and bright. Of course I use a motor drive, but have never found one that gave perfect satisfaction in speed control. Have used the Chambless motor attachment on both Edison and Power's "Six" and think they are fine. Am a member of the I. A. T. S. E., Auxiliary No. 10, Evansville, Ind.

It certainly must be considered something of a feat to handle a projection machine with one hand. Just how the brother manages to thread the machine and the lower reel, and do it quickly, is a puzzle. The man who produces good results under such conditions as these is certainly to be commended, and I congratulate him on the pluck he has displayed in mastering the profession of operating.

Has Troubles of His Own.

From New Brunswick (I cannot make out the name of the town) comes the following:

> The picture does not set square in the aperture of my Edison Model B. All the sprockets are in line, and I have my aperture plate set straight, but when titles are on the lines of printing do not set square with the top or bottom edge of the aperture, and I cannot seem to locate the trouble. It is not noticeable in the picture. We have a very good license law here, which just came into effect this year. My employer is the tallest and largest man in the moving picture business. Perhaps you think I am wrong, but I will send you his picture some time. We are building a new theater, and will also send a picture of that when completed.

As to the machine trouble, I think either your aperture does not set square with the machine, or else your intermittent sprocket is too far one way and your top gate rollers, or the top of the gate itself, too far the other way. It is probable, however, the fault is due to the aperture. I think you will find that the screws holding casting 18181, plate 5, page 238 of the handbook, have worked loose and allowed the casting to drop a little on one side, thus throwing the aperture out of line. If, however, the aperture is straight and square with the machine, then you must shift your intermittent sprocket one way and the top roller gates the other. I will be glad to have a picture of your new theater operating room; also of the heavyweight manager.

Power's Lamp Adjustment.

Mr. G. S. Guernsey, Harvard, Neb., inquires:

> Where can I secure carbon holders for the regular Power's Six lamp, with the upper holder arranged so as to permit the adjustment of the upper carbon in relation to the lower?

You cannot, Brother Guernsey, so far as I know. Power's Six A lamp has those adjustments. A number of operators have remodeled their Power's Six A lamps and supplied that adjustment themselves. You will find their methods described in back numbers of the department.

Head Twisted.

Mr. Alfred Fowler, Alliance, Ohio, writes, enclosing money for handbook and asking the following question:

> (1) My picture jumps up and down on the screen; Power's 6-A. What is the remedy? The operator's poem in February 13th issue certainly was fine. More truth than poetry, however. (Huh! Wonder what brother Clark will make out of that.—Ed.) I hand you herewith a photo of my operating room. It only shows one machine, though we have two, but if you publish it, for the love of Mike cut me out, because my head is crooked, though that is no sign that I am crooked myself. Allow me to assure you it was the photographer's fault. On May 25th we are going to have a big blowout here, and there will be men from four surrounding states attending. You are cordially invited to come to the banquet. I am projecting a 12-foot picture at 76 feet. There is just a least little bit of travel ghost at the top of titled letters. We have a mirror screen, a two-wing shutter, with a motor-driven machine, and the flicker is pretty bad.

I do not see anything the matter with that head, neighbor Fowler. Looks just like a gink who is having his phogytrap tuk. I have been there myself. You were afraid the flashlight was going to hurt your eyes, but it didn't, did it? As to the jump in the picture, be sure that there is no gum or dirt on the face of your intermittent sprocket. Be sure that your tension is tight enough. If not, tighten up screw 734, plate 1, page 272 of the handbook. I cannot answer such questions very well without having the jump more accurately described. One kind of a jump means one thing, and another kind may mean something entirely different. Your operating room looks all right, except that I do not see any vent flue, and I would advise you to hang your wall shutters as illustrated on page 78 of the handbook. As to the flicker, projecting with a two-wing shutter on a mirror screen will produce some flicker. I think you will get better results by holding your speed down below 65, using a three-wing shutter. As to the travel ghost, your shutter wants a little setting. In this connection I would recommend that you study pages 217 to 223, inclusive, of the new handbook. Meanwhile loosen screws 739, Fig. 120, page 382, and revolve the top of the shutter away from you just a little.

Moving your Lamp.

Valley, Wash., says he has a Motiograph and that sometimes the spot is large enough, and sometimes it is not, and that he moves the lamphouse backward or forward to alter the size of the spot. Supposing you try moving your lamp ahead and back, instead of moving the lamphouse.

Some Scheme.

From Minneapolis, Minn., comes the following valuable contribution:

> I have been operating about nine months and have had excellent success. The censors are very strict here, and wherever a flag shows it has to be cut out. It occurs to me that, rather than cut the flag out, we could stick a piece of tape on the lens where it shows.

All of which is respectfully submitted to our department readers as being a real bright idea.

Hallberg Found It.

Mr. T. Rauch, New Orleans, La., writes:

> Regarding the five-point star which you recently said you did not think I could get in this country, Mr. Hallberg has again proven his ability to secure, somewhere and somehow, about anything you ask for. The twenty-tooth sprocket he got for me is giving A-1 results. Your Handbook, which is right beside me now, certainly is great; in fact, it is indeed a "friend in need."

And now, I suppose neighbor Hallberg will swell up like a toy balloon. Well, he is a pretty good scout at that, so I do not mind handing him this bouquet of words; particularly since he seems to deserve it. I remove my chapeau, step two paces to the rear and make my most elaborate bow, friend Hallberg. May your shadow never grow less, or your ability to discover things suffer no diminution.

Isolated Light Plant.

Mr. W. C. Weygint, operator Pierce Opera House, Pierce, Neb., writes:

> In return for what I have received through the department, I will try and help some of the brother operators and managers who have been inquiring in regard to isolated electric light plants. When we took the opera house here last May we were unable to get good results from the city current; therefore installed a 4 h. p. Cushman 2-cycle engine and a Standard 2½ k. w., 60-volt generator—d. c., of course—costing $320, which included all wiring, globes and the installing of the plant. We are using about forty incandescent 48 and 16 c. p. globes, besides the projection arc. Have a Power's "Six" machine on a 65-foot throw and get a picture which traveling men say it is hard to beat. I have, I think, the best electric light plant on the market today. The engine has got everything that I ever saw or heard of beat to a standstill. It is 4 h. p., yet only weighs 150 pounds, and this alone is a big feature. The 2½ k. w. generator weighs 550 pounds. Anyone wishing a plant which can be moved from place to place could not get anything more suitable. I purchased this plant last July, and it has given me the best of satisfaction. I would not part with it at four times its cost and do without it. I start it going and do not see it again until the show closes, and have run it from 7:30 p. m. till 3 o'clock in the morning on special occasions, such as dances, so you see I have given it a very good test, indeed.

You certainly are enthusiastic about this plant, friend Weygint. I am publishing what you say without, however, committing myself in any way by so doing. Certainly a plant that is as light as this, and which will produce the results you claim, is worthy of investigation.

Dynamo Overload.

Mr. E. F. Dowdell, of the Idle Hour Theater and Amusement Company, Artesian, S. D., writes:

> We are projecting an 11 ft. picture with a 42 ft. throw, using an Edison Exhibition model which has been giving excellent satisfaction. Take current from a 2 k.w., 110 volt dynamo, through a rheostat. We intend to install a larger dynamo soon, however. We run three 25 watt lamps when the arc is on, but believe that the present dynamo is somewhat overloaded. We mention these facts because there seems to be a great variance of opinion as to the amount of current necessary to procure good light. From our experience a 3 or 3½ k.w., 110 volt generator will give ample illumination, unless a large number of house lights are to be used. Of course a 60 volt generator would be much more economical in the matter of fuel consumption. Have tried prepared chalk on the commutator with excellent results, using it to polish after an application of 00 sandpaper and vaseline.

All of which is respectfully referred to our readers for consideration. I have many times expressed my opinion as to the advisability of having a surplus of both engine and dynamo capacity. It pays to have it. Many thanks for your kind words of appreciation. The work of this department is by no means easy and it encourages one to know that his efforts are appreciated. There is a vast amount of work done by the editor concerning which you know nothing, but the benefit of which you reap in many different ways.

What Ought I to do to This Man?

Mr. Benj. G. Hull, Westfield, Mass. (Westfield is near Springfield, and under the jurisdiction of that union), writes as follows:

> I am glad that you enjoyed yourself on the occasion of your visit to Springfield to attend our ball. My wife asked why I did not introduce her to you. I told her that you were so busy talking to the boys that ladies did not have any chance. Here is a scheme I use to prevent "pulling down" in rewinding. Take a piece of ¾ inch gas pipe 7 inches long and to one end attach a flange. Bolt this down to the rewinding bench. Now drill a hole ½ inch from the top, small enough that a 6 inch spike will fit tightly in it when driven in and so that it will tilt up a little bit. Next get a large bolt nut, say 1¼ inch and hold this against the reel while rewinding, being careful that the three screws do not stick out or they will catch. If you hold the nut tightly against the reel the film will rewind snugly and pulling down will be avoided. In closing I must congratulate you on the excellence of the new handbook.

Now what do you think of that! I am sure this brother has a mighty good looking wife and the jealous villain did not introduce me to her. I think I will go right back up there and bite him. Now, Mrs. Hull, next time I come to Springfield you just march right up and we will introduce each other to each other and tell Mr. Hull to go away back in the corner and fan himself. Huh! As to that rewinding scheme, the idea is correct, but why bother with a crude appliance when you have exactly the same thing provided in most excellent form in the rewind shown in Fig. 154, page 372, of the handbook.

Hard to Start.

Mr. Glenn Bossard, Avon, New York, orders a Handbook and writes:

> I have a new Power's Six A projector, which is working fine. I also have a mercury arc rectifier which is very hard to start. The tube will tip but seems to stick there, but the arc burns fine when I finally get it going. Do you think the trouble is in the magnet? If you can suggest anything I would be glad to try it.

I have forwarded your letter to the Rectifier Department of the General Electric Company with request that they fix you up. Power's Six A machine seems to be giving very general satisfaction.

Light Trouble.

Excelsior Springs, Mo., propounds the following inquiry:

> Am using 110 volts d. c., with a Simplex 1913 Model projector and an 82-foot throw. Use two 6½ and one 7½ condensers, the 6½ next the arc. Have two-wing shutter and only a very slight ghost. The light is very good when not running the machine, but when running it gets dark all over. The definition is sharp, but the above trouble refuses to be remedied. Have thought of using narrower shutters. Would that help?

When the machine is standing still the lens is uncovered and you are getting all the light which passes through the aperture, but when the machine is running the revolving shutter cuts approximately 50 per cent. of your light; therefore the illumination is only half as brilliant. There is no way of overcoming this with the present type of projector. If you make your shutter blades narrower you will get more light, but you will also get a travel ghost. Presumably by "slight ghost" you mean travel ghost, which would, if only one way, indicate that your shutter needs adjustment. If both ways, the shutter blade is too narrow, or too far from the lens.

Mixing Colors for Card Work.

Mr. J. Sursh, Coffeyville, Kan., writes:

> I have not heretofore contributed to the department for the simple reason that I am not an operator or a manager, nor am I in any way directly connected with the motion picture business. In traveling over the country, however, I have noticed a great many operators are using prepared water colors for making show cards and posters for theater front advertising. I also find that most of them would like to know how to make their own colors, and although I do not believe the operator should have to do sign work and other things around a theater, still many operators are also managers, particularly in the small towns, and they seem to like to do this work. I had supposed that every one able to execute a show card knew how to mix the colors, but it seems they do not, and for the benefit of those I give the following: Buy some finely ground dry color, of the shade you desire. Dampen this color with grain alcohol (wood alcohol is bad for the eyes), and then, with a knife or flat cork, grind in dextrin mucilage or Le Page's glue. If the latter is used you will have to first thin it with a little water. Dextrin mucilage can be made by dissolving dextrin in water until a point of suspension is reached. Use boiling water and add about 20 drops of oil of cloves to every quart of dextrin. The best dry colors I have found can be procured from the Detroit School of Lettering, Detroit, Mich., the price ranging from 25 cents to $1.45 for a half-pound package, with the exception of Persian scarlet and purple, which always sell at the market price. For rapid one-stroke work in water colors this school furnishes an excellent one-stroke lettering brush, which beats anything I have ever seen.

Assuming that what the brother has set forth is correct, I desire, on behalf of our department readers, to cordially thank him for the information conveyed in his letter. I am sure it will be appreciated, especially by small town managers. Information of this kind is of distinct value.

Rheostats Overloaded.

Harrisburg, Pa., writes as follows:

> The coils of my rheostat become just red enough so I can see them in the dark. All my connections are in good shape and I clean them twice a month. We have our wall shutters arranged with a master cord, as per the handbook, and I note that in this week's World you suggested putting a piece of film across the spreader. The suggestion is already followed. You bet we are up to date in this theater! We run nothing over 12 days old, and have the best projection in town, using two Standard machines. Can you charge dry cell batteries with d. c.? I think you can.

The brother also made a sketch of his method of keeping the reels in the operating room, but I could not quite understand. Do you have a special can made, or what? As to the rheostat, it is overloaded a little, but if you can only faintly discern the redness in the dark the matter is not serious. It will do no more than shorten the life of the coils somewhat. As to "charging dry cells with d. c.," I do not understand what you mean. On page 387 of the handbook you will find a method by which dry cells may be renewed. If that is the kind of cell you are talking about, you cannot charge them with current. Storage batteries are charged with d. c.

That Quiver Explained.

From Mr. Wm. Long comes the following:

> Some time ago I sent a picture of the Atlantic City operators. Attached find a newspaper clipping which shows we mean business. Now, as to that quiver we were talking about. About three years ago a friend came to me with the same proposition, and I laughed at him, but went to see for myself. From the operating room objects really appeared to quiver on the screen. In the center of the house I could just see it a little, but down in front the quiver was entirely absent, so I walked slowly back, watching the screen all the time, and discovered the trouble, and what do you think it was? Simply the effect caused by the heat arising in the center of the house, the same as you often see it in the summer time. Very likely the brother who is troubled with the quiver will find that it is due to exactly the same thing. There are five new houses going up in Atlantic City. We now have one seating 1,900.

As to the quiver, your explanation certainly is unique, brother Long, and it is passed on to the department fans for their consideration. The newspaper clipping says that the operators' union (I. B. E. W.) was formed to assist in the enforcement of city ordinances in reference to having none but reliable licensed operators in the moving picture theaters of Atlantic City.

Comments on the Films

Licensed

"THE SHOTGUN MAN AND THE STAGE DRIVER" (Selig), April 9.—The title picks out the two heroes (William Duncan and Tom Mix) who bravely hold off a gang of desperados from robbing the stage. That is all, except the love episode at the end; but there is action all through and the picture held the attention pretty well. It is set in the same country with other recent Selig offerings by this company and the photography is fair.

"THE SHERIFF'S WIFE" (Essanay), April 9.—A fair commercial offering made by Arthur Mackley and his usual company. There is nothing new in it and the first half is rather slow. This company is intelligent in acting and the photography is fair. The sheriff's wife hiding in the trunk and springing up at the robbers got a laugh.

"THE PURSUIT OF THE SMUGGLERS" (Kalem), April 9.—A melodrama, rather old style; but with good scenes taken, it seems, around the harbor of New York and in Great South Bay. Such pictures are made by forcing a love story into a story of adventure and most of our releases of all makes are of this pattern. The story's best point is its pictures of ships and small wharves. The photography is only fair. The audience watched the picture. Earle Fox with Irene Boyle play the romantic leads and Stewart Holmes is the villain.

"THE WELL SICK MAN" (Edison), April 9.—A farce by Charles Menges that gave some laughter to a few in the audience. There is nothing new in it and we have heard audiences laugh more heartily at these same things before many times. Laura Sawyer, Charles Sutton, Benjamin Wilson and Jessie McAllister have roles. L. S. Dawley produced it.

"OUT OF THE STORM" (Vitagraph), April 9.—The best offering of today's regular releases, but it is not a great picture. Gertrude Lane is the authoress and Wilfred North the producer. The primary statement does not build up to the situation very smoothly. The first scene should have shown that the woman had a sick child and then we should have been told that a storm was brewing, so that we might have understood the woman's being so startled. The lightning scene when the telephone was cut was fine—we didn't know that it had disconnected the house. That subtitle about the little one's photograph was a bit sickly. The man ought to have asked for one that he had noticed. Rosemary Theby, as the woman, is just what was right and Harry Northrup, as the burglar, is also good.

"TOO MUCH PARCELS POST" (Patheplay), April 9.—There is newness rather than real freshness in this farce in which a country postman has to lug a stove, eggs, that are called fresh, but batch before he can deliver them; a baby, a cat and her family, etc., including a goat, dog and dynamite. There was little laughter. The picture seemed distressing rather than funny. Charles Arling deserves credit surely.

"FOUND OUT" (Essanay), April 10.—A comedy of embarrassing misunderstandings with Augustus Carney and Eleanor Blanchard in the leading roles, the one, the master of the house; the other, his Swedish cook. Gertrude Scott plays his wife, to whom some officious friends bring a false report that makes her jealous of some unknown "serving girl." John Steppling is the cop on the beat, married to Miss Willis, but flirting with Swedish Eleanor for the sake of goodies in the kitchen. The relationships in the early part of the picture are obscure and this hinders it, but as soon as we get the thread, it becomes an amusing comedy and the audience seemed to enjoy it. Good comedy-acting makes plenty of laughter. The photography is clear.

"TOMMY'S ATONEMENT" (Selig), April 10.—A pretty picture full of sweet sentiment and pleasing scenes. The story is not wholly new and is built on the plan of the old-time Sunday school book; that is, it has a good and wholesome moral. It is good to have pictures like this, if they are not too frequent; for they serve a healthy purpose and are popular with a very large block of patrons. It was produced by H. Kirkland from J. E. Hungerford's script. C. Johnson is the child; Adrienne Kroell, the mother; H. Lonsdale, the old musician, and a player who takes the role of his wife, not named but noticeable for good acting. Mac. Barnes plays a hard landlord and C. Winterhoff, the boy's father. The photography is very good.

"CUTEY AND THE CHORUS GIRLS" (Vitagraph), April 10.—A very funny picture, full of laughs, very entertaining; it pleased the audience markedly. It was written by Mrs. Breuil in a playful mood and successfully produced by James Young. Of today's comedies, it is perhaps the best and every one of today's releases is a good offering to the money-paying public. Wallie Van, as Cutey, lives up to his role and is well assisted by Flora Finch, the most tender-hearted one of the chorus; by Hughie Mack, a good natured comedian whose chortling smile is catching, and Harry Lambert, another of his companions. Leah Baird and Lillian Walker also add much. The Vitagraph tall man is in it. The photography is very good.

"THE MAGIC SHOES" (Lubin), April 10.—A pleasing little offering in comedy vein, giving us the dream of a cobbler that turns out to be only a dream. It was a bit too slight to stage in the best way; yet, if it had been done expensively, it would have been a gem. Clarence Elmer and Jennie Nelson play the leads and it is well photographed.

"ANGEL CAKE AND AXEL GREASE" (Lubin), April 10.—A well worked-up comedy with the standard ranch setting. It might have been even more amusing, if the title had not let the "cat out of the bag" before the right moment. The two on this reel make a very fair offering. George Reehm and Frances DeMoyer play the leads with Walter Stull as the villain, Robert Burns, the objecting father and a large cast including Indians, cowboys, etc. The photography is very fair.

"AN UNCLE TOM'S CABIN TROUPE" (Biograph), April 10.—A dandy comedy offering. There is a touch of pathos in the Uncle Tom even as given in this farcical setting and the laughter that springs again and still again is unforced and natural, yet compelling. The audience liked the offering, no doubt of it. Grace Lewis is Little Eva. A large number of the best Biograph players supported the picture and by personal flashes of comical characters made it very laughable. The photography is clear enough.

"A LESSON TO MASHERS" (Biograph), April 10.—Another laundry farce that pleased a good deal. It is well acted, clearly conducted and photographed and gives satisfactory entertainment. There was much laughter.

"GOD IS LOVE" (Patheplay), April 10.—A picture made after one of Tolstoy's stories and a very effective offering. It reaches a higher plane than any picture that we have seen for a long while and, in many of its scenes, is truly great. We have never seen an ascension scene that really got over: they all seem mechanical. The reason is that they all are carried up through the roof, whereas the figures ought to disappear as soon as we see them beginning to rise. We ought not to see the tail ends of robes; they are too material. Another thing would have made this picture more effective. It would have been better, if the cobbler had gone back to his hammering for a couple of strokes after greeting each of his visitors that came to him in place of Christ. Coming as they do, one after the other, makes the picture constrained. The acting, on the whole is excellent. But that starving woman was very well nourished—there are thin players in the business. The photography is very good. It is a fine, a very desirable offering, one that ought not to be missed. The producer deserves great credit.

"THE TOLL OF FEAR" (Lubin), April 10.—We have already reviewed this picture at length, before release, on page 28, issue of April 5th, 1913. It is a two-reel special offering and it certainly compels our admiration for Romaine Fielding, author, producer and cast—he plays a double role, a sheriff and brother, two characters who look alike, but are different. It is a tragic picture of fear. People of strong imagination are apt, if they have Celtic or Gothic blood, to exploit the morbid in their art (both Poe and Hawthorne did) and because this realm of unrestrained emotions offers the easiest way to affect cruder minds, to bring them in touch with that strange sense of the infinite that we northern races have developed before all people. The upspring of Gothic arches is ours and also the plummet line into the shadows. With the latter belongs this offering. It is two reels of unrelieved horror. There were people in the audience who thought it was "great and wonderful"; but some thought it was "too terrible," and one man, we noticed turning away from it, refused to give us his opinion. It affected us unpleasantly.

"THE KENTISH COAST" (Eclipse), April 9.—A short trip to several of the seaside resorts on the English south coast. It includes a fine picture of the chalk cliffs of Dover, that give the sobriquet of Albion to England. It is a very interesting offering.

"MAKING BIRCH BROOMS" (Eclipse), April 9.—On the same reel, is this little topical that is much better entertainment than the usual offering of this kind; for it was taken by the hut of as fine a specimen of English peasant as one could find. The old man makes brooms so fast and so cleverly that he was applauded heartily by the audience. The photography is perfect.

"AN UP-TO-DATE AVIATOR" (Eclipse), April 9.—A vaudeville sketch played by a clown and with trick photography. It offers nothing new and made very little laughter.

"THE CAPTURE OF A WILD CAT" (Edison), April 11.—Shows the capturing of a wild cat that had been pillaging a hen roost. Two men and a dog make a spirited chase and capture. But, considering the picture as entertainment, we are in doubt of its value. Some in the audience liked it; some didn't. The trouble is that the cat puts up a good fight and the odds against it are too great. The photography is clear enough to show what happens.

"RULE THYSELF" (Edison), April 11.—This little comedy made a good deal of laughter and its author, Frank Hart, deserves credit for hitting the mark several times in real comedy. C. J. Williams produced it with Herbert Prior in the leading role, as a man who is trying to control a bad temper. Edwin O'Connor, as an Irishman who shows him how to light a cigar in the wind, added a good deal. Mrs. C. J. Williams plays the man's wife and Arthur Housman, her brother. Richard Ridgely makes good fun in the scene in the man's office.

"THE LITTLE MOTHER" (Essanay), April 11.—A picture of sentiment with good comedy breaking through it; at times it falls into sentimentality. The little mother is Ruth Stonehouse, a girl of the tenements who is left with two little sisters to take care of and with only what help a newsboy brother can give. The charity organization, directed by Rev. E. H. Calvert, attempts to take the two girls from her; but neither the police force nor the fire department is able to get them. Then there is the usual pleasant ending. The audience liked the picture and was moved by it. Yet a much greater offering might have been made of this situation, if the writer had taken time to develop it along truly human lines.

"THE SPLIT NUGGET" (Lubin), April 11.—The two children have each one-half of the split nugget. It is an Indian story and we have reviewed a great number of pictures like it. The author is Wilbert Melville; but surely he deserves no great credit. The players are commendable—Laura Nevius, Irene Hunt, Henry King, Carl von Schiller, and Joseph Holland. The backgrounds and photography will be liked.

"THE ANALYSIS OF MOTION" (Patheplay), April 11.—This unusual offering gives us pictures of things in motion, a jet of water, a bullet fired from a gun, etc., taken a hundred times faster than the normal so we are made to see things happen that the eye alone never can catch. It most surely will interest.

"THE LOCUST" (Patheplay), April 11.—A glimpse into the life of one of our interesting summer visitors.

"WITH LOVE'S EYES" (Selig), April 11.—The beautiful actress is burned in a fire and disfigured. Her rich lover turns from her. The fireman who truly loved her and who saved her from the fire, has been blinded and never knows that she is not as beautiful as when he saw her last. This is a good, affecting situation, but not a wholly new one. It has been intelligently acted by Kathlyn Williams in the lead, fairly well supported by Harold Lockwood and others. The picture was produced by L. B. Parker from a script by E. C. Hall. The photography is clear. Most of the audience seemed to be watching closely.

"THE SCIMITAR OF THE PROPHET" (Kalem), April 11.—An interesting, but rather boldly conceived story of some brash tourists who steal the scimitar of Mohammed from a mosque in Egypt and escape to New York. The vengeance of Allah follows. The staging of this offering is remarkably fine—we don't know that the picture wasn't produced partly in Egypt. Where those scenes came from we don't know. It was brash to undertake this story; we have seen more failures than successes with stories like this. But it surely held the audience, though at the climax, stronger acting would have made it better. The photography is good. Earle Foxe with Alice Hollister plays the lead, well supported by Robert Vignola, as the Mohammedan priest.

"THE INDESTRUCTIBLE MR. JENKS" (Kalem), April 11.—A farce on the same reel that surely is a success as a laugh-getter. Ruth Roland makes biscuits for hubby. Mother never made any like them. John Brennan, who is hubby, has had an eventful day; even a steam-roller has run over him. Coming home one or two of the biscuits fall on his head and Ruth wears black.

"WANTED—A STRONG HAND" (Vitagraph), April 11.—Norma Talmadge, the child incorrigible, needs a "strong hand," so her father (Van Dyke Brooke) marries widow Price; but it makes no difference till the widow's little boy (Hughey Mack) comes. The fun comes most from the unexpected quarter from which the hand is supplied and a good deal of it is in Hughey. It surely made fun for the audience. The authoress is Widow Price herself. May she write more. The producer is Van Dyke Brooke.

"LAYING A MARINE CABLE" (Vitagraph), April 11.—On the same reel is this very instructive topical which we are sure will interest. It is clearly photographed and shows much.

"MINNIE, THE WIDOW" (Lubin), April 14.—A farce in a summerland setting and with a hotel-life flavor. It is an amusing picture, but not one that makes much loud laughter. There were some laughs and many smiles. Mae Hotely plays the lead as the widow, so charming that she quite eclipses the chances of her daughter (Frances DeMoyer) and who, when she finds how things are, dresses in a different style and the men crowd around Elsie. It was produced by Arthur Hotaling from the script of E. W. Sargent. The scene-making and the photography are commendable.

"ONE ON ROMANCE" (Lubin), April 14.—Some time ago a picture was produced in which a leading woman wore a very low-cut dress and it caused, in some localities, unfavorable comment. Now it didn't seem at all outrageous to us nor does this picture in which the same thing happens. It is a burlesque and made a good deal of laughter, chiefly, we think, because it really pokes fun at certain earnest, but very poor motion pictures. Anita Bresman wrote the script which E. Middleton produced. Eleanor Caines and Frank DeVernon play the leads.

"MR. MINTERN'S MISADVENTURES" (Vitagraph), April 14.—A pleasing picture, taken on shipboard by Maurice Costello and W. Ranous. It is a slight love story and borders on the melodramatic only to keep it interesting. Its chief charm comes from the players who are restrained and natural. The man is M. Costello; the girl, Clara K. Young. James Young plays a detective who nearly makes trouble, thinking that Costello is the man he "wants," but who turns out to be a good angel in disguise. The photography is clear enough to give the story.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY" (April 14).—It makes a good number this week, there being several items of great interest, including clear views of the devastation caused by tornado in Omaha and of floods in Dayton and Hamilton, Ohio. There is a good view of the woman police officer of Los Angeles, Cal., Alice Stebbins.

"A WISE OLD ELEPHANT" (Selig), April 14.—This offering has been reviewed at length on page 142, issue of April 10, 1913.

"A STREAK OF YELLOW" (Kalem), April 14.—Graceful, sensible acting gives character to this picture. It is one of the best offerings among today's regular releases, chiefly on account of this and of its clear photography. The situation is surely now new; for the pretty heroine is burned on the face and of her two lovers the accepted one is made to show the yellow streak. He refuses her and the other takes her. Then it is shown that she wasn't really scarred after all. There is, however, much that is new in the development and it is made very satisfactory. The audience liked it and we also did. Alice Joyce plays the girl; Tom Moore, the hero, and Stephen Purdee, the villain. There is some fine acting from all three.

"THE WOODMAN'S DAUGHTER" (Selig), April 14.—A dull picture. The acting is fair; but the story is old style and the photography is rather flat. The author does not deserve much credit. It was produced by F. W. Huntly. Herbert Rawlinson, Margaritta Loveridge and Eleanor Blevins play the leads.

"HE HAD A GUESS COMING" (Biograph), April 14.—A farce in which the joke that is coming at the end is too clearly apparent from other pictures like it that we all have seen. Grace Lewis, Edward Dillon and others have roles. There was some laughter; not a great deal.

"A HORSE ON BILL" (Biograph), April 14.—An excellent burlesque that gave unflagging entertainment. It kept a ripple going all through and there was a roar of laughter at the end. One of the best comic offerings the Biograph people have put out for some weeks. Edward Dillon and Charles West have the leads and make good in them.

"ON THE NEBI RIVER, EAST AFRICA" (Cines), April 12.—A short film that is full of merit. Some good portraits of the people of the country. It is hand-colored.

"KEEPING TAB ON SAMMY" (Cines), April 12.—A dull comedy. It has some very pretty scenes; but much talking and too little action.

"THE HAPPY HOME" (Patheplay), April 12.—A picture with an unusually poor scenario. The director couldn't save it.

"THE CALIFORNIA OIL CROOKS" (Kalem), April 12.—It is easy to write such pictures as this, which, at bottom, are only a few stock property incidents connected into a story. The cause of this one seems to have been a good view of a burning oil derrick.

"PETE TRIES THE STAGE" (Lubin), April 12.—A good comedy offering, written by Shannon Fife and produced by Barry O'Neil. As usual in these Pete stories, it features Mrs. George B. Walters and Peter Lang in a love story. Both are past masters at this sort of thing and its success is largely due to their acting. A large number of people are in the picture, as an audience at Pete's opening as Falstaff, and the producer has made a good audience of them—they don't like the play and don't mind who knows it. Before Falstaff begins the comedy business in his role, Pete's playing is charming; it makes us feel sure that he would make a hit in that part. Mrs. Walters is the agent that got him the job and when he failed, made room in her heart for him. Richard Morris plays a lodging-house keeper who finds his unpaid rent acting on the stage and demands his money right in the middle of the act. It is clearly photographed and there is no doubt that the people liked it.

"THE MYSTERY OF THE STOLEN CHILD" (Vitagraph), April 12.—A comedy that is slight, but very charming and fresh. Hazel Neason is the authoress and it was produced by M. Costello and W. Ranous. It cleverly keeps us expecting that the child (Helen Costello) is going to be stolen; for George Cooper has read that she is heir to millions and has got his gang on the job. C. K. Young has been sent to get the position of nurse in the child's family; but has grown very affectionate toward her charge. She manages to protect her at every turn. The photography is excellent and the story makes a first class offering.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S REASON" (Essanay), April 12.—A picture that has a good deal to commend it, from the average spectator's standpoint. The situation and the story are not new or startlingly interesting; but they give a good chance for galloping of horses and this is an item that Broncho Billy's men are past masters at. Audiences still like to see horses too. It is fairly photographed.

"THE MAN WHO WOULDN'T MARRY" (Edison), April 12.—The kind of picture that is likely to cause discussion among the people as they walk home. Indeed, some around us took up the advantages and disadvantages of matrimony while the man upstairs was putting the next offering in the machine. Annesley Burrowes wrote the script, which is fresh in a measure, though there is not much "bite" to it; it doesn't get very much below the surface of things. Walter Edwin is the producer. The center of interest is Marc MacDermott. who proposed to a millionaire's daughter (Priscilla Dean) and was disposed of by her sensible father (A. Phillips). Many years later he falls in love with Miriam Nesbitt, but, so it seems, is not able to propose to her and so remains an old bachelor. It is the acting and general character of the production that gives interest to it, not the story; but even it is commendable. Bigelow Cooper, Robert Brower and Richard Tucker have good roles. The photography is good. The picture first shows us the old man who then tells the story.

"THE LITTLE TEASE" (Biograph), April 12.—In this picture we see the Biograph at its best. It is a story of today and of anywhere—the story of the unsophisticated girl whose head is turned by a smooth stranger, who leaves her home and parents to go with him, only to discover that there is another, of polish and worldlywise, with whom her newly found friend and supposed protector is really in love. The charm of this story lies in the natural acting. Most of the work falls to Mae Marsh and William Christie Miller. Henry Walthall is the stranger and Robert Herron the lover who for the time is neglected. The film exceeds the regulation thousand feet, and the surplus is amply justified. There are many strong situations. One was where the old father—his daughter gone and his wife just laid at rest, her death the result of shock—renounces the Bible; a second is where the girl sees her supposed lover in the embrace of another; a third is where the girl, found by her old sweetheart working in a restaurant, declines to return to her home; the best of all, however, is where the father puts the lantern in the window and hangs out the latch-string—and the ensuing reconciliation.

"IN THE DAYS OF WAR" (Pathe), April 12.—Here is a two-reel special, made in America, based on the old, ever young,, story of the North and South. There is a sustained interest throughout the two parts. The acting is strong, melodramatic, perhaps, but the chief actors. Paul W. Panzer and Crane Wilbur, were portraying stirring times. Much may be said of the picture from the spectacular side, one of the features being the destruction of a railroad by means of ripping up the rails and ties and heating and twisting the rails and burning the ties. There are several battle scenes, which are well handled.

"GOD'S WAY" (Selig), April 15.—This is a much better picture than its title led us to expect. It tells a slight story that is not at all dramatic, but is truer to life and humanity than usual. It is sweet and wholesome and, finely acted as it is, we feel sure that it will widely please. The players are natural and most engaging in the simple way in which they embody their roles. The photography is clear and has quality. Hardee Kirkland produced it from the script of Chris Lane. Harry Lonsdale is a pardoned, innocent convict; Gloria Gallup is his wife; and a personable younger player, who deserves mention, takes the role of a girl whom they adopt. William Stowell plays a good tough, father of the girl.

"HANKOW, CHINA" (Selig), April 15.—On the same reel with the above is this clearly photographed picture of the great tea market in China. It has a thrill in a series of views taken from a tram coming down a steep slope very fast.

"THE PAWNED BRACELET" (Lubin), April 15.—The best scenarios are those that take up a bit of real life for us and criticise it; their stories have some basis in fact that we can touch, handle and examine. It is remarkable how few pictures do this and we call attention to this offering as showing what we mean. There are said to be a great many women whose husbands are rich, but who have no allowance or regular pin money. In this picture, one of these women (Lottie Briscoe) has to pawn a bracelet given to her by her husband (Arthur Johnson). In getting it back to her again, Howard Mitchell, who is acting for one of her woman friends, plays the fool and gets her into trouble with her husband; but there is a happy ending. We heartily commend the offering as worth while. It was produced by Arthur Johnson from George Terwilliger's script. Every character in it is graceful and human and the sets and photography are perfect. Miss Briscoe is growing better looking every picture and she has some pretty new gowns. A good offering.

"THE FORTUNE" (Vitagraph), April 15.—While there were very few laughs over this Bunny picture there is much of it truly amusing. The situation is good and the acting of Bunny, at times, hits the mark squarely. The development from the situation was old in Shakespeare's time and has been used in a number of pictures and perhaps this did a good deal to keep laughter down. Bunny is told by a fortune teller that he will soon be rich. He doesn't worry, but gets drunk to celebrate. Some jovial practical jokers take him home and make him think that his fortune has come true and the following evening when he is drunk again take him to his home. The photography is fair. It was produced by Wilfred North.

"THE FIRE OF VENGEANCE" (Patheplay), April 15.—An interesting picture with a new twist, a new kind of vengeance. A marchioness buys all the paintings of an artist whom she hates and, after ten years, invites him to an "exhibition" where he has to see them burn. That climax is very well done and effective and the release a commendable offering to the public. The sets and photography are good and the acting is fair. It is a picture made in France.

"THE ACCUSATION OF BRONCHO BILLY" (Essanay), April 15.—Broncho walks in his sleep and takes gold dust belonging to some miners who, next day, think he stole it. They are going to hang him when they find him asleep, but putting it back. It is not a great picture.

"THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS IN WINTER" (Edison), April 15.—Some good views of snowy hills and valleys.

"JONES GOES SHOPPING" (Edison), April 15.—This picture, by Susan Dyer, gives a woman's version of a man shopping. Mrs. Jones (Mrs. C. J. Williams) gives to the husband (Herbert Prior) a bit of cloth to match and he has his troubles in the department store. The offering was very popular with the women and they laughed heartily over it. The men grinned. It is one of C. J. Williams' productions and is a success. Mr. Prior is popular as a comedian; it is hardly necessary to say it.

"THE NEW PUPIL" (Edison), April 15.—A picture of pretty scenes and pretty acting. The story gives an impression of being cheaply written without care or much trouble and, in itself, gives little entertainment. The producer, George Lessey, might have saved it in one or two places. That tough-mug janitor didn't help to make it convincing and in no scene was there any touch that made it seem like Paris. Augustus Phillips and Mabel Trunnelle play the leads. It is clearly photographed. The author is John MacCormac.

Kinemacolor

"NATHAN HALE" (Kinemacolor).—Here is a historical drama that will more than interest—it will charm. It marks the beginning of a series that will portray the lives of great men. The best scene in the film is a panoramic view of the British camp. Many redcoats, afoot and mounted, are being drilled, and make an impressive picture. The use of the American flag at General Washington's headquarters in 1776 will be pardoned as a historical license. The photography is excellent and the acting acceptable. Gaston Bell plays Nathan Hale. The representation of Washington is well done. Much care was used in the selection of backgrounds. While the picture was made in California the topography will easily pass for the neighborhood of Long Island Sound.

"THE BERNESE OBERLAND, SWITZERLAND" (Kinemacolor).—Fine scenic, one of the best scenes being of the Jungfrau.

"KEEPING UP WITH HUBBY" (Kinemacolor).—A comedy, with a bit of fun in it, but notable chiefly for the fine gowns worn by the wife, who on the advice of her sister starts out to arouse the jealousy of her negligent husband.

"WATER BABIES" (Kinemacolor).—Pictures of animals in the water. There are seals, Himalayan and brown bears, hippopotamus, polar bears at play—and they do play, too—sea lions and Russian bears.

Independent

"THE BLACK CHANCELLOR" (101 Bison), April 26.—This product of the Great Northern company, purchased by the Universal company to take the place of a film the negative of which was destroyed in the recent burning of one of their Los Angeles buildings, is a real feature in all departments. It is more than a feature. It is a great picture. There are splendid settings—Old World settings, of castle, of moat, of mansion; there are beautiful exteriors, of flowering field and smooth highway; there are splendid actors, and those who portray soldiers have been soldiers—that is plain; there is excellent direction—the drama runs smoothly, consecutively. Above all, there is a grade of photography that is in a class by itself.

"CUPID IN A DENTAL PARLOR" (Keystone), April 21.—A short reel, in which the love episodes occur in a dental parlor. The girl is the dentist's daughter. Lots of action but a slight plot.

"A DOG IN THE BAGGAGE CAR" (Thanhouser), April 13.—Here is a railway story with certain amusing incidents in it. The husband and wife are stranded actors in the West, with only enough money to buy one ticket home. The husband gets in a trunk and rides in the baggage car with the dog. When the baggage agent misses his sandwich, he blames the dog, and finally throws the animal out of the door. Then the wife gets off the train and makes her husband do likewise to recover the dog. A fresh little plot.

"THE RUNAWAYS" (Kay-Bee), April 18.—The story of an elopement by an artist and a girl. There is the familiar irate father who tries to intercept the match, but he is thrown in jail by a friendly constable and released only after giving his sanction to the match. An old plot, handled in a fairly interesting way.

"A FISHY AFFAIR" (Keystone), April 24.—A successful half reel, full of interesting foolishness. Schnitzler's fishing experiences were certainly laughable, and he winds up in an alligator farm.

"THE BANGVILLE POLICE" (Keystone), April 24.—More laughable absurdities, in which Fred Mace appears as police captain in a home-made automobile. As a whole, this reel is very pleasing and full of laughs.

"THE DRAGON'S BREATH" (Rex), April 24.—Here is a gripping story and original enough to insure it a place of its own, setting it out from the commonplace releases as a distinctly interesting picture. It is the tragic significance of its situation that is so effective in it; but the setting is suggestively natural and the acting, especially of the two leaders, is clear-cut and powerful in bringing out its meaning and its emotional result. It is a story of the Pacific coast. The dragon's breath is opium, a need for which the young bride (Lois Webber) of a college president (Phillips Smalley) unconsciously contracts while caring for a sick servant, a Chinaman. It is a commendable offering.

"LOVE AND GOLD" (Ramo), April 23.—This picture has a quality that will be very noticeable—the beauty of its photography which gives us some new and charming scenes taken on the northern end of Manhattan. Most of them are looking out over the Hudson, but one or two give glimpses of the Harlem river. The story is wholesome, conventional and very old fashioned and gives us the girl (Mary Alden), daughter of a miser (Will Davis) and the young physician who loves her against the wishes of his father who wants him to marry money. We commend the offering for the sake of its acting and its photography.

"THE BATTLE OF LONG SAULT" (Briam).—A special two reel picture, now ready for the market. It is the initial offering of the British-American Company of Montreal, Canada, and is released through the Film Supply Company. It surely is a good beginning and can be commended as a first-class feature, a historical picture dealing with an Iroquois expedition against Montreal in 1660, which is heroically turned back by the determined resistance of seventeen brave Canadians who defend an outpost stockade and perished in it. It shows one thing that we have not seen before, except in the mind's eye when reading old ballads—the air thick with arrows. There are thrills and some are big ones. The glimpses of the war expedition of the Iroquois in their canoes is one, and there are many during the fighting around the stockade. It has, we believe, a high educational value. The photography is of good quality. We congratulate the Briam Company.

"HIS SON-IN-LAW" (Solax), April 11.—A farce with a fairly amusing ending, but too long. There is much in the early scenes that has been shown too often. The photography is good. Marian Swayne is very pretty in this picture.

"THE LADY DOCTOR" (Solax), April 9.—A farce featuring Blanche Cornwall as a lady doctor in a college town. She reads in the college library and four of the men (there seem to be only four at the college at the time) fall in love with her. Darwin Karr wins her. The trouble with it is that it has nothing new and the scenario is weak.

"POOR LITTLE CHAP—HE WAS ONLY DREAMING" (Eclair), April 20.—One of the Newlywed screams, and just as laughable as any of its predecessors—if anything more so.

"FIRE" (Eclair), April 20.—A scientific film showing many facts about fire, especially as to how it was created in primitive days; interesting.

"HIS FRIEND JIMMIE" (Nestor), April 21.—Good comedy. A youngster in college gets married against his father's wishes. In order to fool his dad he dresses the bride as a boy and carries her home. There are many amusing complications.

"BURGLARIZING BILLY" (Gem), April 22.—A lively Billy Quirk comedy.

"THE REGENERATION OF JOHN STORM' (Imp), April 21.—Here is good drama, although it seemed crowded—as if there were too plainly an effort to get the picture into a single reel. The acting was excellent. Vivian Prescott and Guy D'Ennery had the leads.

"WHEN DOLLY DIED" (Powers), April 23.—A child picture, in which the leads are taken by Matty and Early, the talented "Powers Kids." Matty especially was at his best. The story holds throughout.

"BRED IN THE BONE" (Bison), April 22.—This picture, in three reels, marks the debut of Wilfred Lucas as a Bison director. He has done well. Bess Meredith as the daughter of the General in command carries the lead.

"WHEN JIM RETURNED" (American), April 24.—There are a few promising scenes in this, but the plot is too light to hold the attention well. It is Western in setting and concerns the jealousy of some ranch hands over a pretty girl.

"BREAD CAST UPON THE WATERS" (Broncho), April 30.—A two-reel war production. Lieut. Stone, in charge of a party of Union foragers, refuses to take the small boy's pet horse. Later the boy befriends him, when he falls on the front porch, wounded. The lad and his sister black up the injured man and take him to the negro's quarters, where the searching Confederates fail to recognize him. This is an interesting story, and the war scenes are done in the usual effective manner. The photography is also good.

"THE GIRL AND THE GRAFTER" (Thanhouser), April 15.—Here is a bright little film story of an improbable but interesting character. The managing editor is badly in need of a scoop for his paper, and the girl reporter accomplishes this by getting a flashlight photograph of one man in the act of bribing another. The audience will smile at the absurdity of this, but the film is enjoyable.

"RETRIBUTION" (Thanhouser), April 18.—The country boy, who inherits a fortune, goes to the city. After six months there he writes a brutal note to his former sweetheart, breaking their engagement. She weds another, and her first lover loses his fortune and becomes a tramp. Good photography and artistic scenes help this along and altogether it is quite an entertaining offering.

"BOOBS AND BRICKS" (American), April 21.—A small town story, in which a pretty female drummer charms the rural swains. She borrows a lot of money from them and makes away with it. The village belle then refuses to take back her old admirers and weds another. The photography is very good indeed and the story a passable one.

"CALAMITY ANNE'S TRUST" (American), April 26.—In this Louise Lester, in her character of Calamity Anne, adopts the daughter of a suicide. She makes the various admirers dance to the tune of her six-shooter and finally marries the girl off to a young drummer. This picture is something of an improvement on the former offerings of this series.

"THE LEADER OF HIS FLOCK" (Imp), April 17.—A two-reel film story, featuring King Baggot as a minister and Jane Gail as an abandoned wife. The story depicts in a convincing manner the uncharitable attitude sometimes existing in church circles, and is a good offering as a gentle reminder that even the best of us are often harsh in our judgments of womenkind. The scenes in the church and later in the slum chapel are very true to actual conditions. The "near" views of Mr. Baggot added nothing to the effectiveness of his characterization, but, if anything, detracted from it. A good offering.

"A KNIGHT OF THE GARTER" (Nestor), April 14.—The discovery of a woman's fancy garter in the hall brings about a duel between the husband and his neighboring friend. The pictures are good and promised a little more than was realized, as the close of the story was rather weak.

"FICKLE PHIL" (Nestor), April 14.—A neat little comedy notion, nicely pictured on same reel with above. Phil takes his frequent love affairs very seriously and thinks he will end his existence after each one, but at last his first love accepts him and his happiness is assured.

"BILLY TURNS BURGLAR" (Gem), April 15.—In order to obtain money so he can marry his sweetheart, Billy decides to become a burglar. Instead he encounters some real house breakers and brings them to justice, thus obtaining a big reward. There is some amusement in this, though the plot is not a novel one.

"THE LAPLANDERS" (Gem), April 15.—A few interesting glimpses of this land of snow and ice, on same reel with above. It rounds up a fairly good reel.

"WHY THE RANGER RESIGNED" (Frontier), April 19.—Some very attractive views of the open range by night and day in the land of cattle smugglers. The plot is weakly devised, however, and brings down the merit of the production somewhat. The herd of cattle being driven to the boundary line was just stopped in time by the Texas rangers. The actual Western life in this is well shown, but the story value is not so good.

"THE SHERIFF'S WARNING" (Nestor), April 23.—The cabin scene in this film, where the girl holds up the bandit with his own gun, was its strongest feature. The story concerns a young man who came to grief from bad associations. It is of the conventional Western type.

"WAR" (Bison), April 15.—There is probably not a moving picture film in existence which covers the subject of warfare more thoroughly than this three-reel offering. It is almost a complete exposition of the actual fighting, the movement of troops and all the attendant features of warfare. A few years ago it would have been a revelation, but its weakness for present-day picturegoers will be its very slight plot. True, it follows the fortunes of a girl and her brother and lover, who are on opposing sides, but there are no complications, except for the dramatic scene in the hospital in the last reel. But as a big, sweeping incarnation of "war's rude alarms" this offering is worthy of high commendation.

"THE COWARD'S CHARM" (Victor), April 18.—A picture depicting the psychology of cowardice in an interesting, though not powerful, way. James Kirkwood, as the hero, believes himself to be a coward. A doctor gives him a charm to wear and while he has this he is able to fight his rival without fear. He at last learns that he is not a coward even without the charm. An idea similar to this appeared not long ago in a film called "Napoleon's Luck Stone," as we remember it.

"THE MYSTERY OF THE LOST CAT" (Solax), April 16.—This is a Burstup Homes burlesque, and there is much burlesque.

"WHERE LOVE DWELLS" (Solax), April 18.—A story of a girl from the country visiting a well-to-do aunt who tries to make the guest ridiculous when a reception is given. The titles have a strong Laurajeanlibby flavor. The picture is likely to create amusement in unexpected ways.

"THE DEAD ALIVE" (Gaumont), Special.—Fine drama. There are two reels of good story, good acting and good direction. The picture is reviewed at length elsewhere.

"SOME DOINGS AT LONESOME RANCH" (Frontier), April 17.—There is a lot of good, hearty fun in this film and it is particularly to be commended because it proves that something different can be given us in the way of a Western comedy release. There are several excellent comedy characters in this and the situations are actually funny, even though exaggerated. The homely hired girl blossomed out wonderfully after going to the beauty doctor. A very good comedy offering.

"THE EVIL GENIUS" (Eclair), April 16.—The European Eclair company has here produced a fine two-reel subject, dealing with the love of a man for his friend's wife. He plans to wreck the husband by burning his toy factory. The fire scenes were vivid and realistic. The people escaping from the factory appeared to be in real peril. The courtroom scenes were also good and in the end the tool makes a dramatic confession, completely clearing the owner of the works. A fresh subject with many points of excellence.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 57" (Universal), April 9.—Full of live subjects, including target practice at Hampton Roads, reception of the new Secretary of War on a battleship, views of J. Pierpont Morgan's various properties, an English steeplechase, etc.

"TWO LUNATICS" (Crystal), April 20.—Pearl and Chester, on their way to a house party in the country, meet with two escaped lunatics. There are several laughable situations in this.

"HIS ROMANTIC WIFE" (Crystal), April 20.—A young wife rashly decides to flirt in order to make her husband pay more attention to her. Plenty of trouble results and the picture closes with two pretended suicides. Fairly amusing. On same reel with above.

"FOR HER SAKE" (Nestor), April 25.—A peculiar film story, with some very good acting in it, but not a specially attractive plot. The Jew, who gave his daughter to a couple to raise twenty years before, tries to prevent her marriage with a Christian. His efforts are unavailing, but he is forced to maintain silence because of the agreement he entered into years before. He raises the wages of his employees for the girl's sake.

"A SPRIG OF SHAMROCK" (Imp), April 24.—This will get some laughs out of the average audience. It is a good offering of the low comedy type, with a Dutchman and an Irishman in it. The Dutchman spoils his chances for marrying the daughter when he eats her father's shamrocks. The character work is very passable, Budd Ross appearing as the Irishman.

"ON AN ALLIGATOR FARM" (Imp), April 19.—More views of an alligator farm, with various interesting performances by the big-mouthed reptiles.

"FIXING THE FAKERS" (Imp), April 19.—On same reel with above. A burlesque detective story, with no apparent motive and scarcely any situations worth while. The leading character was named Curlock Bones.

"WHEN STRONG MEN MEET" (Champion), April 21.—A very good film story, in which Ramon Ashley, known throughout Arizona as an outlaw, returns to New York and becomes a social lion. He is followed to the city and discovered by a detective and his assistant. There is a nice atmosphere of suspense about the picture, though it never becomes exciting. In the end his redemption is brought about. A pleasing offering.

"THE SERGEANT'S SECRET" (Kay-Bee), March 14.—One of the most interesting and generally pleasing two-reel productions this company has turned out. The plot centers about the Colonel's wayward son, who falls in with a gambler and stage robber. Sergeant O'Grady does a little amateur detective work in the second reel, which makes the plot clear to the observer. The son is shot, but through O'Grady's efforts is buried with military honors. Brisk, exciting and fascinating throughout. A superior offering.

"THE MOVING PICTURE GIRL" (Excelsior), April 14.—The title of this offering is really a misnomer, as it is a series of views showing how certain moving picture scenes are taken. A more general title would get the idea to the audience quicker. There are burlesque scenes, rehearsals, a burglary, fire scene, etc. It makes a good novelty.

WAS NOMEL RIGHT?

Nomel shall be his name here. He has stolen from the very bank that now employs him — re-employed him on his leaving prison, that is. You see, the president of the bank had some faith still in his erring employe and when Nomel finished his "time" for the theft, the official gave him another chance.

You will see from this that it is squarely up to Nomel to keep "straight"—to vindicate the president's faith in him.

But at the bank none of his associates have any faith in Nomel, any patience or sympathy with him. Except—

The exception we will call Hart. He is paying teller at the bank, a man with a most responsible position, a wife—and she is the girl Nomel loved before his fall from grace—and child. He proves a true friend to Nomel.

Nomel discovers that Hart is following in his footsteps — defaulting. The bank president finds large sums missing. He starts an investigation, and Hart decides to confess.

But Nomel pushes him aside and confesses "everything" to the president. That official is shocked — and Nomel is returned to the dungeon!

Nomel did not care, as he had no great future anyway.

He knew that Hart had — future, wife, baby!

Did Nomel do right?

Better have a look at the film-story, entitled, "For Another's Sin," in two Thanhouser reels released Friday, April 25th.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

CALIFORNIA CENSORSHIP LAW.

Sweeping Provisions Proposed By Legislature of Golden State—Approved By Exhibitors and Likely to Pass.

By P. M. Powell.

REPRESENTATIVES of the California State Exhibitors' League who journeyed to Sacramento to appear before the various legislative committees and to lobby against the bill providing for state censorship now pending before the Legislature succeeded in winning the two concessions upon which they laid most stress. The bill was reported out of committee April 10th, with the recommendation "that it do pass." This means that it will, in all probability, become a law in the form in which it was reported.

The Exhibitors' League had insisted upon a board of six members, to be divided into two sections of three each, to work independently—one at San Francisco and the other at Los Angeles. The bill provides for this. The other demand was that the provision barring persons connected with the industry from appointment to the commission be stricken out. It has been eliminated. In its present form, it is said, the bill is fairly satisfactory to the committee which visited the state capitol, although there were a number of other changes which were suggested, but were not made.

Section 1 of the bill gives its title, and Section 2 defines various technical terms used therein. Section 3 declares that "There is hereby created a commission to be known as the moving picture censor commission of the state of California. The commission shall consist of six members, who shall be appointed by the Governor from the state at large and shall serve at the pleasure of the Governor. Three of said members shall have office in San Francisco and may act as an independent board of censors, and three shall have offices in Los Angeles and may act as an independent board of censors. The annual salary of each member of the commission shall be $2,400, payable in equal monthly installments, and they shall be paid in addition all necessary traveling expenses incurred in the performance of their duties."

Section 4 provides that each half of the commission shall have the right to employ a secretary, a projecting machine operator and one other person if necessary. Sub-section (c) says: "The boards shall alternate in censoring the different makes of pictures, and shall not duplicate each other's work."

Section 5 gives the members and employes of the commission free access to any moving picture theater in the state.

"Section 6. It shall be the duty of the censors to examine and censor all films manufactured or produced in, or brought into, the state of California for exhibition, and either to approve and pass, or to reject and forbid the exhibition of every such film; provided, that the action of either board in passing and approving or in rejecting and forbidding the exhibition of any film or reel shall apply in the same manner and with equal force to all duplicates, counterparts or copies of any particular film upon which action is had by the boards; provided also, that either board may approve and pass any film subject to such excisions, amplifications or alterations as they in their discretion may direct and require to be made, and attach the seal or tag of this commission, hereinafter provided for, to such film or reel or the duplicate thereof, and after the portion of such reel or duplicate or counterpart objected to is cut out and retained in the possession of the commission; and it shall be unlawful for any person to exhibit any film which has been approved and passed by the board subject to such excision, amplification or alteration without first making or causing such excision, amplification or alteration to be made; provided, that the commission may, in its discretion, accept the decision, in any particular case, of any municipal, state, national or international bureau or commission in favor of any film or moving picture, and the commission by unanimous vote of its members may in its discretion work in conjunction with like or similar censor boards or commissions of other states as a national censor congress, and the action of such congress in approving films shall be considered as the action of the commission, a certificate of this commission given, and the seal or tag of the commission attached thereto, and have the same force and effect as if approved by the commission in separate session, but such co-operation shall continue only at the pleasure of the commission and may be discontinued at any time upon the vote of a majority of the commission; provided also, that no film or reel shall in any case be rejected by the commission unless the same shall have been viewed by at least two of its members, nor shall it be rejected except upon the vote of a majority of either board.

"Section 7. It shall be unlawful for any person to exhibit any film, reel or motion picture in the state of California unless and until the same shall have been passed by the commission and the mark or seal attached.

"Section 8 (a). It shall be the duty of the commission to adopt an appropriate seal or tag which may be employed or used as a token or sign to indicate the approval by the commission of any film, and the said seal or tag shall be exhibited immediately preceding and in the same manner, and as conspicuously, as the exhibition of any film which has been approved and passed by the board, and it shall be unlawful for any person to refuse, neglect or fail to exhibit the said seal or tag in the manner herein provided.

"(b). When any film shall have been approved and passed by the commission a secretary of the commission shall, upon demand, issue to the owner, renter, lessee or custodian of said film a permit or certificate in manner and form to be prescribed and adopted by the commission, each of which said certificates or permits shall bear a serial number peculiar to itself, and shall also bear the name or title or description of the film or reel in reference to or in connection with which it is issued, and the date upon which it was approved by the commission, and a notation designating or indicating the number of linear feet contained in such film or reel, and the said certificate or permit, when signed by the secretary or some other person designated by the commission, shall constitute full and proper authorization and permission, to exhibit the seal or tag provided for in this section in connection with the film or reel referred to in the said certificate or permit; provided, that whenever any film or reel shall not have been actually and literally examined and censored by the commission, but shall have been automatically approved and passed by reason of the approval of some other board or commission, as provided for in this act, or by reason of the action of the commission in approving a duplicate. counterpart or copy of any film as provided for in this act, then the secretary shall issue, and there shall be required, a separate certificate or permit for each separate film, and the issuance of a permit for one film or reel shall not be authority for exhibiting the seal or tag heretofore provided for, in connection or conjunction with any duplicate, counterpart or copy thereof.

"(c). It shall be unlawful for any person to exhibit the aforesaid seal or tag in connection or conjunction with any film or reel without first obtaining from a secretary or other proper officer or employe of the commission a certificate or permit as herein provided, and the said certificate or permit shall at all times be attached to the film or reel for which it was issued, in such manner that it can readily be inspected or examined by any member or other employe of the commission or boards upon demand at any time or at any place where the said film or reel may happen to be in the state of California."

Sub-section (d) makes it unlawful to refuse any authorized person the right to examine the permit as mentioned in the foregoing.

"Section 9. The commission shall charge, and the secretary or some other person designated by the commission shall collect, the following fees from the exchange controlling the reel or film to be censored: For each certificate or permit issued under the provisions of this act, a sum equal to one-tenth (1/10) of one cent per linear foot for each and every linear foot of film contained in the film or reel named or designated in the said certificate or permit for all original new reels, and one-twentieth (1/20) of one cent per linear foot for all duplicates thereof; and for reels issued or released more than ten days prior to the time this act becomes a law, one-twentieth (1/20) of one cent per linear foot. All fees charged and collected under this section shall be paid at least once each month into the state treasury, to the credit of a fund to be known as the motion picture censor fund, which is hereby created.

"Section 10. It shall be unlawful for any exchange to sell, lease, rent, give, loan or vend any film or reel to any exhibitor in the state of California unless and until the said film or reel has first been approved and passed by a board; provided, that the neglect or failure of any exchange to comply with this or any other section of this act shall not excuse any exhibitor from compliance with all the terms of this act.

"Section 11. It shall be unlawful for any person to exhibit any motion picture of any human figure in such detail as to offend public morality or decency; or of any lewd or lascivious or sensual act; or of any other matter or thing of an obscene, indecent, immoral or suggestive nature, or offensive to the moral sense, or against public policy; or of any murder, suicide, robbery, hold-up, shooting, stabbing, clubbing or beating of any human being wherein such acts or any of them are shown in gruesome detail or in a revolting manner or in any manner objectionable to the moral sense; or of any act of brutality, cruelty or barbarity shown in gruesome detail or in a revolting, disgusting or horrible manner."

Section 12 provides a fine of not less than $50 for a first violation, not less than $250 for a second violation, and obligatory imprisonment for not less than one year for third and subsequent violations. Section 13 appropriates $5,000 to inaugurate the work of the commission, and provides that all fines shall be paid into the commission's fund. Section 16 is the usual repealing section.

TO ATTACK KANSAS CENSOR LAW.

The Mutual Film Corporation will contest the constitutionality of the Censorship Act of Kansas, on the following grounds:

1. That the act is in violation of Section 10, Article 1, of the Federal Constitution, in that it attempts to lay a tax on imports into the state of Kansas.
2. That it violates Section 1, Article 14, of the Federal Constitution, as amended, in that no state shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, in that it imposes a charge, duty and tax on importation.
3. That the act is in violation of the Constitution as to the freedom of the press and the freedom of speech, in that it censors, before trial, privileged matters exempt under the freedom of the press.
4. That the act is unconstitutional, being an act of pure censorship, attempting to invest the power in one man to censor the matter of films, both good and bad, and impose a penalty upon the good, as well as the bad, without judicial hearing.
5. The act itself is unconstitutional because, under the guise of inspection law, it provides a state revenue, and the act itself makes no provision by reason of the want of an appropriation by the Legislature to defray the expenses of such censorship, which makes the law impracticable and unenforcable.

The question involving the rights of censorship under the act will test the question of all such matters in the entire United States. Eugene Batavia and Thomas F. Gatts are attorneys for the Mutual Film Corporation in this action.

MURPHYSBORO, ILL., EXHIBITORS' MEETING.

A meeting of Branch No. 2 of the Illinois League, of Murphysboro, Ill., was held in that city on April 6th. There was a large attendance and matters of importance was disposed of. The organization is growing rapidly, new members being received at each meeting.

ROCHESTER EXHIBITORS' BALL A SUCCESS.

The entertainment and ball given by the Rochester Exhibitors' League, of Rochester, N. Y., on April 3rd, was a social and financial success. The grand march was led by President A. N. Wolff and Miss Pearl White, of the Crystal Film Company. There was a large delegation from New York City, headed by President Samuel Trigger and Secretary Rosenthal, of the State League, with Darwin Karr, Hugh Mack, Tom Powers, James Morrison and many others. Motion pictures and vaudeville formed the entertainment program, and the dancing continued till the early morning hours.

WISCONSIN CONVENTION.

Large Gathering of Picturemen and a Big Time at Milwaukee —A Successful Meeting.

THE Wisconsin State branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, held their annual convention at the Plankinton Hotel, Milwaukee, Wis., April 8th and 9th. The convention was called to order by President C. H. Phillips of Milwaukee, promptly at 10 A. M. Tuesday. The out of town members in attendance numbered about 150 and local members about 60, making a total attendance of 210. From outside of the state were Wm. J. Sweeney, President of the Illinois State League and C. M. Christenson, National Secretary of Cleveland, Ohio.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Charles Phillips, Milwaukee; secretary, B. K. Fischer, Milwaukee; treasurer, Tom Saxe, Milwaukee; first vice-president, M. Prince, Milwaukee; second vice-president, F. H. Smith, Menomonie; third vice-president, Joseph Rhode, Menomonie; fourth vice-president, William McCenna, Appleton; fifth vice-president, Henry Goldman, Green Bay; Sergeant at arms, Frank Bruemmer, Milwaukee; delegates to national convention, Gust Frellsin, Waukesha; Roy Cummings, Madison; Frank Bruemmer, Milwaukee; H. Burford, La Crosse, and Henry Trinz, Milwaukee; alternates, Henry Klein, Milwaukee; M. B. Hackett, Stevens Point; A. V. Johnson, Milwaukee; James Cochrane, Milwaukee, and Albert Schoenleber, Milwaukee

Green Bay was selected for next Convention City, to be held June 26, 1914.

President C. H. Phillips in his opening address welcomed the members on behalf of the Chief Executive of the city and the citizens of Milwaukee.

President Wm. J. Sweeney of the Illinois League was the next speaker. He spoke of the wonderful good accomplishments of the league and the harmonious conditions existing in Illinois through its efforts.

C. M. Christenson, National Secretary of Cleveland, O., was the next speaker. Mr. Christenson took up the subject of organization. He had just received a telegram from President Neff saying that Deleware, Rhode Island and Maryland had just been admitted to the league, making a total of forty states now represented in the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America. He touched upon the necessities of an organization of this kind for mutual protection for the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the country and for the entire industry as well. He told about adverse legislation that had come up in most of the states in the Union and how well the various branches of the league had defended themselves and had won in most every case at very little cost to any individual.

President Phillips took up the state censor bill, now pending in the legislature. A telegram was sent asking Chairman Johnson who has the bill in charge to hold same in obeyance until the exhibitors could be heard from. The convention went on record favoring a state censor board if certain charges were made in the proposed bill as now presented. The exhibitors want the appointive power in the hands of the Governor and they ask for two motion picture men on the board, they also want a reduction of salaries paid to the members of the board, they also want a reduction of cost on censoring old films now in stock in film exchanges.

The meeting adjourned at 2 P. M. and the entertainment committee had in waiting twenty automobiles. All the visitors were given a joy ride through the beautiful residence district and boulevards of the city.

Wednesday's meeting was called to order by President Phillips at 10:30 A. M. By this time many more exhibitors had arrived from up state. The Milwaukee local made a report that on Monday, March 31, every motion picture theater had turned over to the Mayor the entire receipts on that night to be given to the Ohio flood sufferers, amounting to $2,100.

Mr. C. M. Christenson on behalf of citizens of Ohio thanked the exhibitors of Milwaukee for their kind and generous donation and said he would call the Governor of Ohio's attention to the kindness and assured the exhibitors of Milwaukee that Governor James M. Cox would appreciate the gift, also he was a staunch friend of the motion picture exhibitors the country over.

At 7 P. M. the members all donned night robes and gobling caps and paraded the down town streets led by a band of 20 pieces and in their ghost appearance, they had the citizens all guessing which one was John Bunny; and the girls, of course, wanted to know which one was Francis Bushman. After the parade all were ushered to the Eagles Hall, where all kinds of gambling games were soon in full blast with "stage money." After everybody was broke the grafters and game keepers had provided a Dutch spread and everybody was introduced to Pabst, Schlitz, Blatz and High Life and after speeches and entertainment by Professor Martini, the great mystifier in slight of hand. A roped arena was the next on program, after three rattling good bouts were pulled off it was 1:30 A. M. and everybody scooted for taxi cabs.

MISSOURI LEAGUE NOTES.

The third annual state convention of the Missouri state branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be held at Springfield, Mo., on June 10th and 11th, 1913.

The entertainment end of the convention will be in charge of Springfield Local, No. 2. There will be a vast amount of important business transacted, including the election of state officers and delegates and alternates to the New York convention. President Wiley looks forward to the largest attendance of any state convention in the history of the state branch.

Every credit is due to President W. J. Flynn, of St. Louis Local, No. 3, in the excellent manner in which he handled the drastic laws which were introduced at our recent state Legislature. Through the fine work of Mr. Flynn there was no laws passed pertaining to the moving picture industry.

National Vice-President G. H. Wiley is working hard perfecting arrangements whereby the state branches of Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri will mobilize all special cars from the different states in Chicago, and from there to New York travel in one solid special train. They will be accompanied by the Indian Band of Oklahoma, which has been secured by the Oklahoma state branch.

WHAT PRESIDENT NEFF IS DOING.

Leaving New York April 10th, President Neff went to Philadelphia and concluded arrangements for a big convention of Pennsylvania exhibitors in that city, to be held on May 27th and 28th. A meeting of Philadelphia exhibitors was held at the Belleview-Stratford Hotel, at which President Walter Steumpfig and other officers of the state and local leagues were present. Arrangements were concluded to engage the services of Clem Kerr as organizer, and it is believed that a large attendance will result.

From Philadelphia President Neff went to Baltimore and, with J. Howard Bennett, secretary of the Baltimore exhibitors' local, concluded arrangements for a convention of exhibitors of Maryland at Baltimore on June 3rd and 4th.

A visit to Wilmington resulted in arrangements for a convention of exhibitors of that state to be held at the DuPont Hotel on May 26th. Arrangements for this meeting are in the hands of James M. Ginns, of the Majestic Theater, Wilmington, Del.

At Washington, D. C., Mr. Neff concluded arrangements for a convention of exhibitors for the District of Columbia, date and place of meeting to be named later. He also visited the office of the Attorney General and paid a call upon Secretary of State Bryan.

Upon returning to Cincinnati, President Neff learned that the Ohio Censor Bill as offered in the Ohio Assembly had been amended and sent to the Senate. He immediately went to Columbus and succeeded in having the amended bill killed by the Senate committee, securing the introduction of a new bill in the Senate which subsequently passed without opposition in both houses.

CONVENTIONS SCHEDULED.

Kansas State Convention—At the National Hotel, Topeka, June 2nd and 3rd.

Missouri State Convention—At Springfield, June 10th and 11th.

Iowa State Convention—At the Auditorium, Des Moines, May 13th and 14th.

Pennsylvania State Convention—At Philadelphia, May 27th and 28th.

Maryland State Convention — At Baltimore, June 3rd and 4th.

Mississippi State Convention—At Jackson, May 8th.

West Virginia State Convention—At Wheeling, April 29th and 30th.

Delaware State Convention—At DuPont Hotel, Wilmington, May 26th.

KINEMACOLOR IN JAPAN.

The rights for Kinemacolor for Japan and Korea have been disposed of to the biggest moving picture syndicate in Japan. Three Kinemacolor experts, in charge of Mr. Wark, left for Japan this week to superintend the installation of equipment for the production of Kinemacolor film, as well as for its exhibition.

OPEN LETTER TO PRESIDENT NEFF.

Cleveland Exhibitors Raise Interesting Questions Relating to Rights of Picturemen.

Mr. M. A. Neff, National Pres. of M. P. E. L. of A., Cincinnati, Ohio,

Dear Sir & Brother: The resolutions enclosed herewith were passed by unanimous vote of Cleveland Local No. 1 at our regular meeting April 9. The preamble and resolutions are self explanatory. Our members have discussed this subject with each other for a long time until the matter finally crystalized into it's present form. The committee chosen to devise ways and means to carry out the purport of the resolutions have only one object in view, thus; to establish beyond all doubt and as quickly as possible our exact status in law. The question of censorship, Local, State or National, is a question entirely separate and apart from the matter covered by these resolutions. Cleveland Local No. 1 insists upon finding out for themselves and some fifteen-thousand National Exhibitors how much longer they are to be the "goats" upon this simple question of Constitutional rights and we respectfully submit the matter to you as the official head of our organization for action.

We know that no court can or will consider a question of Constitutional Rights until someone's rights have been interfered with or jeopardized. We also know that as yet no socalled legalized censor board, local, state or national, has been enjoined or restrained from proceeding as they see fit in various localities and we think that you have plenty of available information as to where these self constituted and "privately legalized" individuals are now operating.

We think Illinois would welcome a test per the Chicago police censorship.

Michigan also, per the rights of one Baker to follow his formula in Detroit.

Ohio per Cleveland, though ours is only a temporary expediency operating with our consent and therefore not subject to the courts as yet.

This local thinks that the manufacturers should finance the proceedings inasmuch as both the licensed and independent manufacturers have expended thousands of dollars fighting each other but not one cent have they spent to make a legal stand in behalf of the exhibitor who, is compelled to take their products "unsight, unseen."

We suggest that the National Officers single out a manifestly unfair decision rendered by one of the above quoted censors, or elsewhere. It will be easy to single one out. Have the reel exhibited in defiance of the decision and make the test UPON THE QUESTION OF HIS RIGHT TO CENSOR. The police power to stop crime pictures we do not question, simply the question of OUR rights to show pictures BEFORE censoring, just as the newspaper man publishes his paper, subject to legal restrictions afterwards.

We have every confidence in you and your fellow National officers supported by the Hon. J. B. Foraker and the Hon. J. J. Lentz, our attorneys and we feel that your combined wisdom will be able to evolve a plan of action and carry the same to a conclusion satisfactory to all concerned at an expense that will fall very lightly when divided pro rata among the manufacturers and importers.

In conclusion we submit that the Exhibitors desire to be open and above board in this matter as we have been heretofore in our business dealings with the public and the authorities and for that reason we are forwarding copies of the resolutions and committee's recommendations to the trade papers and the league's attorneys.

Hoping this will meet with the approval of all concerned and that success may crown your efforts, we beg to remain, Fraternally yours,

Samuel Bullock, Erie Amusement Co.

Committee on Resolutions For Cleveland Local No. 1 M. P. E. L. of A.

Resolutions on the "Freedom of the Screen."

WHEREAS: The highest authorities, legal and editorial, have been asserting from time to time in our trade journals and public print that "The first test that is made in the courts regarding the freedom of the rights of the Motion Picture from legalized censorship will result in the rights of the Motion Picture Exhibitors being established" and similar emphatic statements and

WHEREAS: The annoyance, persecution and expense to which the a chaotic and insecure condition throughout the United States by reason of the fact that the exact status of the rights of the Motion Picture has not as yet been clearly defined by the courts and

WHEREAS: The annoyance, persecution and expense to which the Motion Picture Exhibitors are being subject in every State and City in the Union, Render it imperative and absolutely necessary that this important question be settled at the earliest possible moment therefore be it

RESOLVED: That we demand that a test be made by our National League officials as to the exact legal status and rights of the Exhibitors to the freedom of the Screen under the same constitutional rights which guarantee the freedom of the press. Be it further

RESOLVED: That the manufacturers be requested to finance this undertaking inasmuch as the Exhibitor is entitled to morally clean and unobjectionable programs without any additional expense beyond the cost of regular service. Further

RESOLVED: That President M. A. Neff be and is hereby requested to act upon these resolutions at once and arrange for a friendly action in court to settle this question for all time.

MOTION PICTURE EXPOSITION NOTES.

Mr. Frank Samuels has returned from London. He sailed from New York for England on March 15 and landed back in America on April 12. Mr. Samuels went to London as the special representative of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, to the International Kinematograph Exposition and Conference, which was held at the Olympia, London, for one week beginning Saturday, March 22. The principal object of his trip was to interest the English motion picture trade in the coming Exhibitors Convention and International Motion Picture Trade Exposition to be held at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, from July 7 to 12, 1913. As representative of the M. P. E. L. of A., Mr. Samuels was vested with full authority to close contracts with European manufacturers of all kinds, pertaining to the trade, for space or other representation at the New York Exposition. He covered a considerable amount of ground during his two weeks' stay and returned with quite a number of space reservations for some of the largest and best English firms in the trade. The British trade received him very cordially and he succeeded in stirring up a lively interest in the New York Exposition to such an extent that a good number of the English brothers have made up their minds to be in New York when the Exposition begins next July.

The idea of sending Mr. Samuels over there was a very good one. Mr. Rich G. Holloman, President of the Eden Mussee, New York, was the man who made the suggestion, and it was immediately acted upon by the Exposition Committee. Mr. Samuels was invited to be guest of the Exhibitors Association of Great Britain and Ireland at their first annual banquet held during exposition week in London. At that time he was called upon to address the British association, and he took advantage of the opportunity to tell those present of the work and aspirations of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. He gave them a good first hand idea of the general status of the exhibiting branch of the business in America and pointed out various improvements that could be made, in which both nations had a common interest, if there could be some definite co-operation and plan of action between the exhibitors of Great Britain and America. He made it known that one of the objects of his trip was to establish co-operative relations between the American and British exhibitors, and his statement met with a hearty response. Mr. Samuels is now back at his desk at the offices of the M. P. E. L. of A. Exposition Committee in the German Savings Bank Building, Fourth Ave, and Fourteenth Street, New York. He was agreeably surprised to find that during his absence many more space reservations had been made by prominent firms in the trade for exhibits at the New York Exposition.

One of the advertising schemes of the Exposition Committee is the distribution of large quantities of stickers calling attention to the Exposition, and giving the time and place. These are being sent to the many firms that have taken floor space with the request that they stick one on each and every letter they send out to renters, exhibitors and others in the trade. This scheme not only helps the exposition but it helps the man who sends the letter, by bringing more people to see his exhibit.

The H. W. Johns-Manville Company, manufacturers of portable and permanent asbestos operating rooms, has contracted for a space on the main floor. Besides this that company has decided to install one of its operating rooms in each of the "model theaters" on the mezzanine floor.

The Day and Night Screen Co., of 192 Broadway, through its Capt. A. M. Baber, has taken space in which it will exhibit its screen in daylight. This company has also arranged to have a screen installed in one of the model theaters on the mezzanine floor.

Alex A. Wall, National vice-president from Alabama comes in with a request for more literature and more stickers. The exhibitors down South are coming north in a body to attend the big show.

Western and Southern picture men have a fine alibi for being in New York next July. Incidentally a little whirl at Coney Island may be arranged and perhaps a jaunt around to the local moving picture studios, and other points of interest.

Even the suffragettes are bidding for space. They want one of the model theaters for a while each day for expostulating purposes. The application is under advisement, but it looks like "nothing didding."

PUTS THE PICTURE THEATER ON THE LIST.

Assemblyman Cuvillier has introduced a bill at Albany, N. Y., which includes "any kinetoscope or moving picture performance" in the list of entertainments to be licensed. The bill is an amendment to sections 51 and 1472 of the Charter of Greater New York, which has not heretofore specifically named motion picture shows. At present such institutions are licensed as "common shows."

The fog on the day of Lord Wolseley's military funeral cost London cameramen £30,000, for they only secured a few uninteresting lengths. Hundreds of pounds were paid by one firm alone for stands—that for a single operator over St. Paul's costing 50 guineas.

MISS LAURA SAWYER.

Miss Laura Sawyer, leading lady in the Edison company, who, as might be readily surmised by the accompanying photograph, is commonly referred to by her intimates as "Dolly Dimples," is as charming a young woman as she is a talented actress, and one whose friends in and out of the professions are legion.

Into the four years she spent before the footlights—two of which as understudy to Ada Rehan in Shakespearean roles—and the four years she has been with the Edison company in Cuba, Bermuda, the great Northwest and California, have been crowded experiences that seldom fall to the lot of so young a woman, and covering which a volume of interesting memoirs might be written.

Miss Sawyer is now in Long Beach, Cal., where, under the personal direction of J. Searle Dawley, she is doing some of the best work of her career.

Recent productions of the Edison company in which her finished work has received the commendation of the press and public alike are "Unselfish Love," Marguerite in "Faust," "The Day That Is Dead," "Lead, Kindly Light," "A Japanese Tea Party," "For the Cause of the South," "The Cliff Dweller's Romance," "'Ostler Joe," "The Crusader" and "The Relief of Lucknow."

JUVENILE FILM CONSPIRATORS NOW!

No, it isn't Laemmle and Powers.
General and Kinetograph.
This faction and that faction.
This producer and that producer.
Just kids!

This atmosphere of meeting and conference—this general air of conspiracy—that has been so marked in the film business of late, has "gotten to" the juvenile film people. At last advices, the Thanhouser Kid and Leland Benham were seen conspiring (much after the fashion of their film-business elders) to oust an unpopular school mistress who had succeeded a popular one. And no conspiring film magnate ever worked more cleverly than they! Thanhouser releases the result, entitled "The Children's Conspiracy," on Sunday, April 20th.

SMITH'S OPERA HOUSE, GENEVA, N. Y., UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT.

Jerome Cohen has taken charge of the above place and through Mr. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," is installing a Simplex projecting machine, with Hallberg A. C. Economizer. A Simplex machine, with Hallberg Economizer, is also being installed at the new Clarendon Theater, 1105 Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., together with a full line of supplies purchased through J. H. Hallberg. This is a very fine, up-to-date theater, which will be run only with high-class pictures. Mr. Hallberg also reports the sale of two Power's No. 6-A machines complete for use in Panama.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs

By George Blaisdell.

THOSE who favor what Mr. Thanhouser once called the natural reel—i. e., letting a picture run where it should—will find in Biograph's "The Little Tease" material to fortify their position. This film made what one operator "guessed" was a reel and a half. Probably his guess was fairly accurate. Here was a picture it would have been a shame to shorten by a hundred let alone several hundred feet. As it was released, there was opportunity for the development of unusually fine situations—time given an actor or an actress to drive into the mind of the observer what the creator and the producer of the drama sought to there instill.

Why should there be an arbitrary one thousand or two thousand feet in a picture? Why should not the exchange man issue to the exhibitor each day film based on the number of feet rather than on the number of reels? It would amount to the same thing to the exhibitor. It would mean much to the picture followers. Too often a story is marred by overpruning to keep it in the thousand feet. So, also, sometimes—but rarely—is it overextended to make two thousand feet. It will be said, of course, that a change in the present system will work havoc in the distribution scheme. Maybe it will, for a while. The problem is of no special difficulty, however; means could be devised to attain such a desirable end.

It is not a matter for a lone manufacturer to take up. It is submitted, nevertheless, that it is worthy the consideration of manufacturing groups.

Recurring to "The Little Tease." The splendid work in this drama of William Christie Miller, the gentle and venerable actor, demonstrates that on the screen, as on the stage, there is no Oslerian limit.

The Photoplayers honored themselves as well as Mr. Miller when they made him an honorary life member.

Dropped over to the Reliance studio the other day. A hundred yards away saw out in front a familiar figure actively engaged in "warming up" for the baseball season. Line drives and bounding grounders were being eaten up with catlike agility and professional accuracy. The player was Captain and First Basemen Irving Cummings, of the Reliance Motion Picture Baseball Club. Mr. Cummings, it may not be generally known, was a member of the Milwaukee American Association team in 1904-5. His value to the team as a drawing card was enhanced by a previous appearance in Milwaukee in stock. The Reliance team is ready for engagements beginning May 5th. Applications for dates may be made to Captain Cummings at 540 West Twenty-first Street.

Mr. Cummings later showed to the writer a contract which had arrived in the morning mail containing an offer for a stock engagement with a well-known theater at a good salary. Mr. Cummings confessed it had no attraction for him.

So the president of The Photoplayers is to be at the Screen Club ball! It's a safe bet that the Screeners will make such a fuss over Fred Mace that he'll never regret the four-thousand-mile journey from Los Angeles.

The Kalem Company will release probably early in June a baseball drama in which Christie Mathewson and John McGraw will appear as co-stars. The outdoor pictures were taken in Marlin, Texas, and the studio scenes in Jacksonville. Kenean Buell was the producer. The Kalem officials have not yet forgotten the great success last fall of the Marquard-Joyce film.

Announcement is made at the Kalem offices that the rights of "The Octoroon" have been purchased from Mrs. Dion Boucicault. The picture probably will be in two reels.

Arthur Hotaling is bringing his Lubin company north, and will take it to Atlantic City, where it will remain until July 1. George Nicholls will remain in Jacksonville with his company until July 1.

The Excelsior company has returned to New York from Jacksonville.

At the semi-annual meeting of the Screen Club, Saturday night, saw a hearty handshake between William Shea of the Vitagraph and William Shay of the Imp.

The Edison company will release on April 28th "When the Right Man Comes Along." Its author is Mary Fuller. As it is a comedy-drama, are we permitted to assume that if it is a little facetious it is also a bit serious—just a little bit?

Sitting in the Savoy Theater, Saturday morning, looking at Pathe's two-reel "In the Days of War," the writer gradually engaged in conversation with a substantial-looking elderly man in the adjoining seat. The stranger was particularly interested in the destruction of a railroad by the soldiers. Rails were being torn up and after a sufficient heating over a fire made of burning ties the sections of iron highway were twisted around trees. "Very good," said the stranger. "I saw between Chattanooga and Atlanta twenty straight miles of railroad destroyed by the men under General Hood, and broken up in much that fashion. I have reason to remember it, for I was in the Federal military construction corps and was employed in rebuilding the road. These moving pictures are getting better all the time, don't you think?"

Lawrence McGill, Majestic producer, is back in New York from Jacksonville, and is hard at work at the local studio.

Los Angeles is said to have the picture craze—in the worst phase. Since the recent successful ball of The Photoplayers the condition has been aggravated. As an indication of the annoyances to which the picture players are subjected, a recent letter from the coast is eloquent. Here's an extract:

"Had a funny experience the other day. In a department store I was asked to call on the manager in his office. Had no idea what he wanted. Thought I was spotted as a shoplifter. 'Sore' was no name for it. With many excuses and apologies I was requested to phone in my orders in future, as all business was held up on the floors below by reason of a great part of the girls coming up on the floor where I was, to 'pipe me off.' I beat it like a thief. It came as such a complete surprise that it made me as nervous as an Iowa farmer with the ague. This town is mad about seeing the picture people on the street. They know a great number are here and are on the lookout for them all the time."

When Arthur D. Hotaling, the Lubin comedy producer, was in New York a few weeks ago he engaged six actor persons of color—equally divided as to sex. As it was his intention to use them in pictures he designed making in Jacksonville and in order to provide against any unseemly "gallivantin'" around in the Southern city he wisely selected three married couples. These were to do the real work of the pictures and to serve as the leaders of a hundred or more others of the same race. When the six arrived Hotaling's troubles began. The "stars" found much outside the studio to interest them. When it was seen the newcomers would not show up at the appointed hour an automobile was sent for them. This worked for a few days; then the machine had no charms. Well, the four comedies are finished. It is said Hotaling thinks he has earned a vacation for the work and worry he put in on his "colored" picture.

C. Oscar Apfel is on his way to Panama for a bit of recreation. Mrs. Marian Brooks Apfel accompanies him.

Epes Sargent showed me over his workshop—or bunkhouse, or scenario brainery or whatever it may be—the other day. It is a real place. Sticking out all over the room is System—don't forget that big S. That man is wasting time writing stuff to make people laugh. He ought to be efficiency expert for some big outfit.

Talking the other day with a film man as to the effect on a person of the posthumous appearance on the screen of a loved one, the name of a well-known actor some months passed away was mentioned. "Why," said my companion, "I am well acquainted with his widow. In fact, I was talking with her only last week. She told me that whenever there was issued a picture in which her husband appeared she made it a point to go and see him. She said she felt as if she had talked with him and was happier for having seen him."

Edgena De Lespine ("beautiful Edgena"), of the Reliance company, stirred up no end of talk last week when she wrote a letter to our good and much harassed Mayor asking permission to introduce a new dance at the Screen Club ball. The epistle sparkled with words familiar to those newspaper readers who follow the Mayor's published correspondence. It was a wonderful effort. Undoubtedly the Mayor rejoiced at the discovery of a kindred soul whose thoughts found expression in his own vocabulation. Appended to the letter was a glossarial index, ostensibly for the convenience of the mayoral incubent; but really, of course, for the benefit of those Gothamites not included in the Epictetian Circle.

Flickers

WE have with us this week Mr. Ira M. Lowery, general manager of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, Philadelphia. During my recent visit to Philadelphia, I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Lowery while at work, with his coat off and his sleeves rolled half way up his arms, inspecting negatives. One would naturally presume that the business head of such a large concern as the Lubin Company would have little time to attend to any other than the financial details of the plant; but such is not the case with our friend. He is here, there and everywhere, inspecting negatives, trimming positives, editing scenarios and, in fact, wherever help is needed, there you will find Lowery. That is the reason he is the most popular man in the Lubin plant. The accompanying likeness was obtained while Mr. Lowery was in his own office where, while always kept busy, he has an opportunity to look upon his little family occasionally, as you will see if you look closely. On his desk at the right is a photo of the Mrs., and two beautiful children look down upon him from the wall.

Ira M. Lowery.

Say, you should see my little Film Hound. It's a cute thing. I am going to show you a picture of it next week. Wait.

Albert Blinkhorn, manager of the Vitaphone Company of America, with offices in the Longacre Building, New York City, is tickled to death with the large amount of requests for prices and demonstrations for his new Talking Pictures He says that he has a shipment of five hundred on the way here from England, which will reach New York some time within the next ten days. Read his advertisement on another page.

Mr. William Sherry, of the firm of Sherry & Co., feature filmers, was in to see us this week, and though practically a new man in the film business, he has made out wonderfully well with his first State rights picture, "The Prisoner of Zenda," which he purchased from the Famous Players Company, for the State and City of New York.

I see from an article published in one of the evening papers, that a movement is on foot to do away with the old style of recording the facial expressions and actions of criminals by means of the Bertillon system, and installing moving picture cameras for the same work. The suggestion to date has met with favor.

I spent a very pleasant hour with Mr. I. Van Ronkel, manager of the Fourth Avenue branch of the General Film Company, New York, one day this week. I met Mr. Van while in Chicago last winter, so, naturally we could compare the two burgs, but he just refuses to see New York City. However, he is going to stay over for the Screen Club ball, and it is probable that he may meet some one that will make him change his mind. You know we are all that way when we are away from home.

President and General Manager F. A. Mackert, of the Knickerbocker Amusement Company, Braddock, Pa., called to see us this week. He was in New York to close a contract for talking pictures. They control four theaters and run pictures exclusively. The Knickerbocker, in Braddock, Pa., seating 700 in their largest house.

Mr. W. Arthur Northam, of London, England, advertising and publicity head of one of the largest and best known chain of strictly moving picture theaters in England, is visiting New York for the purpose of looking over the film business in general, and expects to be here for only a short time. Mr. Northam favored us with a visit this week. MAC.

VITAGRAPH STUDIO NOTES.

Miss Zena Keefe, of the Vitagraph Stock Company, will leave New York for Europe on Saturday, April 26th, on the Oceanic. She will travel with her mother and her aunt, and intends to spend probably three months there, visiting London, Paris, Berlin and possibly Vienna and St. Petersburg.

Mr. William Shea, of the Vitagraph Stock Company, is coming to the fore again. He will be seen soon in a Coster drama, showing the east-end Londoner as he really is. The title of the play will be "'Arriet's Baby."

The Vitagraph Bulletin of Life Portrayals for May will be published next week. The releases contain among their number some excellent comedies, and also the first of the photoplays sent in by the Vitagraph "globe-trotters," one of which, "The Wrath of Osaka," a thrilling Japanese drama, will be sure to arouse a great deal of attention.

"The Lion's Bride," which is now engaging the attention of the Vitagraph company, is an unusually strong drama founded on the well-known legend on which the famous picture of that name by Gabriel Max is based. Mrs. Julia Swayne Gordon will be seen in the title part. The Vitagraph lion, Nero, will be her fellow "lead."

Mr. Rollin S. Sturgeon, manager of the Vitagraph Western studios at Santa Monica, is turning out some fine work. He has sent in to New York some cracking good photoplays for release in May. In "The Sea Maiden," which was principally enacted at Catalina, Cal., there are some splendid scenic effects and seascapes served up with an interesting story of love and thwarted revenge.

HARRY WHITNEY'S BIG GAME HUNT.

These unique pictures of adventure and life in the great frozen regions are meeting with great success as evidenced by the large number of bookings already made by Northern Ventures, Limited, and the great demand for territory. The immediate dates played include Toronto, Canada, April 5th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th and 12th; Washington, D. C. April 17th, 18th and 19th; Baltimore, Md., April 24th, 25th and 26th, and Hartford, Conn., the following week.

In each instance a complete evenings entertainment will be given, consisting of a very interesting lecture accompanied by a few special slides and five reels of film. A special set of three reels is being arranged for smaller houses.

The Educational Society, 225 Fifth Avenue, New York, and other educational bodies are already demonstrating their interest in this series, inasmuch as the pictures are regarded as the most instructive photographic record ever taken of the animal and Eskimo life of the great Far North. In addition to wonderfully close-up pictures of Polar Bear and Seals, splendid views are given of the Midnight Sun, immense icebergs, Eskimo dog teams, the rescue of a shipwrecked crew, trading with the Eskimo, and a bright little comedy section that will appeal to all.

WOODWARD WILL REMAIN ANOTHER WEEK.

L. A. Woodward, general manager of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, makers of the Motiograph machines, has decided to remain in New York another week, owing to the large increase in business of his company in this territory, and the necessity of putting more men in the field. Among the recent installations of the Motiograph in the New York territory were two 1913 model with motor drive at the Colonial Theater, Stamford, Conn.

HETTIE GRAY BAKER VISITS SELIG PLANT.

Miss Hettie Gray Baker, of Hartford, Conn., author of many popular and artistic Selig photodramas, stopped off in Chicago last week, on her way to California. During her stay in the Western metropolis she was a much interested visitor at the Selig studios, where she witnessed the production of an elaborate picture by Oscar Eagle, the scenario for which Miss Baker recently wrote.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE HOODOO PEARLS" (Reliance).

Frederick Sullivan directed this exceptionally good Reliance film, and he was assisted by the clever work of several prominent members of the stock company.

Mason and Davis, employed in a large jewel concern, both love their employer's daughter, Helen. She prefers Mason, much to his rival's disgust. On the night that Mason starts on his vacation a string of pearls is delivered to the jeweler, with the request that he place it in his safe. He carelessly drops the necklace into his ledger and places the empty box in the safe. Next day the pearls are missing, and Mason is suspected of the theft. He is arrested and brought back to town. Davis finds the pearls and carries them home, as he wants to incriminate Mason in Helen's eyes. His sister, Edna, finds the necklace and, thinking it of no value, wears it to a dance. She loses it, and Davis almost goes insane—for the pearls are priceless. Edna's sweetheart rushes back to the ballroom and finds the necklace. Davis grasps it thankfully, and early next morning he is at the office and replaces it in the ledger, where he calls his employer's attention to it. Mason is released at once, and as Davis sees Helen rush to her lover's embrace he no longer feels the old jealousy, but just thankfulness that the pearls are secure in the safe.

Scene from "The Hoodoo Pearls" (Reliance).

Naomi Childers, as Helen, and Harry Spingler, as Mason, did excellent work. The cast also included Bill Sloane, Edna Cunningham, Hattie De Laro and Messrs. De Carlton and Sarno. This picture will be released April 23rd.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY NOTES.

Power's Cameragraph No. 6-A, with motor and mechanical speed control, has been approved for use in Houston, Texas.

The new Bunny Theater in Flatbush Avenue, near Sterling Place, Brooklyn, has been equipped with two Power's Cameragraphs No. 6-A, with motor drive.

The St. Clair Opera House at Greensburg, Pa., one No. 6-A complete, through the General Film Company, Pittsburgh.

The Princess Theater, Marlboro, Mass., one No. 6 complete, with dissolving view stereopticon through the N. E. Universal Film Exchange, Boston.

St. Patrick's Church, Toronto, Ont., has installed one Power's Cameragraph No. 6-A through Charles Potter, of Toronto.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE.

The R. D. Marson Moving Picture Company, of Boston, Mass., has installed in the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League headquarters in Boston one Power's No. 6-A complete.

"THROUGH MANY TRIALS" (Lubin).

This is a very beautiful and pathetic story. It is a Lubin two-reel special and cast from a selection of the best players in the Philadelphia studio. Doubtless it will be popular with the women, who really do like touches of pathos.

Guy Maurice, a young artist, goes to the country and takes board at a farm house. There he meets Emily Brown, the farmer's daughter, and they fall in love. Abner Brown objects to the engagement and turns Maurice out of the house, but the lovers elope and get married. They go to the city and live comfortably for a while, but eventually the artist returns to his companions of the cafe, and Emily is neglected.

Scene from "Through Many Trials" (Lubin).

A child is born and it brings out the better nature of Guy. He again applies himself to his work and makes a picture that wins a high award. Circumstances change at the farm, Abner's wife dies and the home is sold out by the sheriff. Silas Brown, the son, goes to the city and finds his sister. The father soon follows and is hurt by an accident. The children go to the hospital and when the old man has sufficiently recovered they take him to the artist's beautiful home to end his days in peace and comfort.

KINEMACOLOR FEATURE FILMS.

An interesting announcement is made with reference to the production of spectacular subjects on an impressive scale in Kinemacolor in the near future. These films will be based on the works of world-famous authors, and since they will be extremely costly, and at the same time make a world-wide appeal to Kinemacolor audiences, a subsidiary company, to devote its undivided attention to the production of feature subjects, will be financed. Exhibiting licensees will soon be able to include a feature film for each weekly service. The country in which the new company will conduct its operations is not yet settled; it is probable that it will have no regular home, but will travel the world in search of appropriate settings. There is no doubt that a scheme of this importance will attract the greatest talent in production, acting and scenario writing.

MARGARITA LOVERIDGE JOINS SELIG.

Miss Margarita Loveridge, who has appeared in a number of Selig pictures during the past year, has joined the Pacific Coast studios stock and will appear exclusively in the "Diamond S" brand of pictures hereafter.

"TOLD IN CONFIDENCE" (Great Northern).

In ye olden days of New England gossips were punished for their activities and the stocks and ducking stool were utilized to curb the tongues of the scandal mongers. In this Great Northern comedy we are given a "taste" of how gossip will spread and while the pictures are amusing they likewise teach a lesson that is calculated to prove of benefit. Dr. Miller is a mild mannered man and enjoys the companionship of his family consisting of his wife, mother and little girl. His next door neighbor is Mrs. Jones and she makes a pastime of peering into the doctor's dining-room. One evening as she is peeking through the curtains, she sees the doctor chide the butler and maid for placing a gravy-stained napkin upon the table. He is annoyed and shows his annoyance in his demeanor. Mrs. Jones hastens to Mrs. Brown and tells in confidence of the brutal conduct of the doctor toward his family. He is pictured as having shaken his little daughter to the point of strangulation, breaking furniture and otherwise playing the role of a brute. Mrs. Brown cannot resist the temptation for gossip and she hurries over to Mrs. Smith with another elaborated tale of the exciting doings in the Miller household. In this latest narrative Mrs. Miller and the butler are involved and the cause of the doctor's anger is ascribed to this. According to Mrs. Brown's version of the affair the doctor almost committed murder and threw the butler through a window, pointing a revolver at the supposed offender as the latter hung on a ledge far removed from the ground. And so the story spreads and is elaborated upon by each new listener. As may well be imagined, the little village in which the doctor spends his summer is in an uproar and the good townsfolk are all wrought up over the reported occurrences in the home of the mild mannered physician. A crowd of people assemble outside and while the three gossips stand in the foreground and point, while giving a description of what they thought they had seen, Dr. Miller and his family appear at the portal. Father, mother and grandmother are as happy as the flowers that grow in the spring and as they saunter forth for an outing, the three village gossips scamper off amid the jeers of the men and women who had been hoodwinked into believing that Dr. Miller was a fiend in human form. The gossipy versions of Mrs. Jones, Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Smith are included in the unwinding of the story and the photography and acting are up to the Great Northern standard.

Scene from "Told in Confidence" (Great Northern).

THE "OZONE PURE AIRIFIER."

"Ozone" is recognized as one of the best means of purifying the air we breathe and is a powerful disinfectant, working so rapidly as to make it highly useful in securing perfect ventilation. A method of applying it to the ventilation of picture theaters and other auditoriums has been devised by the Ozone Pure Airifier Company, of Chicago, which makes a machine that has the power to accomplish the desired results, it is claimed. In a certain New York picture theater an "ozonator" was installed after all other systems of ventilation had failed to remove the disagreeable odors. By passing the incoming current of air through this device an instantaneous result was obtained. The theater was entirely deodorized, even in the hottest weather. The matter is one that is worth investigating. The Ozone Pure Airifier Company makes many interesting claims for its device and will be glad to discuss the subject of its use with theater owners. Address the company at Rand-McNally Building, Chicago, Ill.

"THE MOTE AND THE BEAM" (Majestic).

This picture, directed by Lawrence McGill, with all its scenes laid in a picturesque Florida setting, is particularly good. The scenario, by George Henessey, tells the story of a narrow-minded country deacon who punishes his son for a petty falsehood, yet does not scruple to keep a purse he finds, knowing that it belongs to a poor widow.

Scene from "The Mote and the Beam" (Majestic).

His son is taken ill and the deacon thinks this a punishment for his sin. After a fierce battle his better self prevails and he returns the purse, confessing his temptation. A young man who had been arrested on suspicion is freed and the deacon forgiven. He returns home to find his boy safe on the road to recovery.

This photoplay was released on April 20th.

Double Exposure Scene in "The Dead Secret."

A remarkable demonstration of what the camera can do to deceive the eye is given in the Monopol Film Company's latest Marion Leonard feature release, "The Dead Secret." In many scenes Miss Leonard plays two different characters—one the mother and the other the daughter. Unlike some other attempts at double exposure, where the performer appears in two different characters in one room and merely poses, in the double exposures in the scenes of "The Dead Secret," where Miss Leonard appears as both mother and daughter, the room is filled with other characters who move about the stage. Quadruple exposures, showing the characters gazing into a glass globe and seeing themselves at another period, proves weirdly fascinating. Visualizing thought and conscience in a manner that leaves no doubt of what the picture tries to convey is another of the attractive features of this production.

Scene from "A Dead Secret" (Monopol).

Manager J. V. Ritchey, of the Reliance, has acquired the rights to Forrest Halsey's "The Bawler Out," which will be produced in three reels under Oscar Apfel's direction on April 30th.

CORRESPONDENCE

PHILADELPHIA.

TOM BIBLE is organizing a baseball team, which will be composed of members of the trade in Philadelphia. Already Tom is booking games with some of the fastest teams in this section.

W. B. Reynolds has just returned from a successful trip throughout the state in the interests of the Crown Feature Film Company.

There has been a report current in Philadelphia for the past week that the Adelphi and the Opera House may be turned into moving picture houses after the close of the present season. Both of these theaters, it is said, will be reopened and the Edison talking pictures exhibited, along with high-class vaudeville. No confirmation of the report could be obtained from the managers of the houses, but it is taken for granted that something is about to happen that will stir the theatrical business in Philadelphia.

The Orpheum Theater, of Williamsport, was reopened on April 5th, after having been closed almost the entire winter, undergoing repairs and alterations which make it one of the most up-to-date houses in Central Pennsylvania. The manager and owner is John A. Fourney, Jr. Mr. Fourney and his father own the largest skating rink in Pennsylvania, which is also located in Williamsport.

H. J. Paradis, manager of the Lumina Theater, of Wilson, N. C., was a local caller among the trade in Philadelphia last week.

Walter C. Lamade, manager of the Lycoming Opera House and the Family Theater, of Williamsport, was a local visitor recently.

Harry Davis, of Milton, Pa., who owns one of the finest little theaters in the country, and which shows without a doubt the very best in the picture line, was a recent visitor in Philadelphia, making numerous calls on members of the trade.

Motor-driven projection machines are now allowed in Philadelphia, much to the joy of a large number of the exhibitors. After much hard work on the part of the exhibitors, the Department of Public Safety was convinced that there was no danger in using the added equipment, and thus the order was issued that motors could be used.

The Moving Picture Operators' Club of Philadelphia will hold a second annual ball on April 26th, and from all present indications this year's festivities will far surpass those of last year. The committee in charge is working overtime in order that there will be no "fall down" of any kind.

Many residents in the neighborhood of Broad and Thompson Streets appeared in Judge Barratt's court last week to protest against the establishment of a moving picture house on the southeast corner of the streets. Work has already been started on the picture house. Just what the result of the case will be to have the place built into something other than a moving picture theater remains to be seen.

Several members of Local 37, I. A. T. S. E., operated a show for the benefit of the inmates of the St. Vincent Home recently, much to the enjoyment of the people who are confined there. The films and machine were furnished by the Messrs. Lubin and Brubran, Sr.

J. E. McEllroy, who was recently in the employ of the Philadelphia city government, has accepted a position with the Calehuff Supply Company.

E. Latisch, of the Keystone Feature Film Exchange, announces that he has dissolved partnership with W. Rosenbach, and his former partner will continue the above exchange as sole owner.

Students of history and kindred subjects in the public schools of Andnbon, N. J., will have motion pictures instead of text books, if the $30,000 bond issue asked by the Board of Education be authorized at the next special election. Films based on these subjects will be shown in a room specially constructed for the purpose, and all classes will make this a part of their regular work.

The Union Features, of New York, City have established offices in Philadelphia, at No. 15 North Tenth street.

Marcns A. Benn, of the A. B. C. theater, located at Nos. 3321-3323 Chestnut street, gave the entire day's proceeds of April 2, as a benefit for the flood sufferers of the Middle West.

The Scarlett Motion Picture Company, has been recently organized and is now producing feature films at its new studio, Twenty-third and Vine streets. W. T. Jones, formerly producer and director, is the general manager of the company. The concern has been fortunate in securing as its leading lady the dainty and versatile motion picture actress, Miss Eleanor Caines, formerly of the Lubin Company. Jerold T. Hevener, also of that company will direct the productions with a company of twenty-two persons. The first release was "Lost Identity," a thrilling western drama in two parts. The company proposes to release its features through the leading independent feature exchanges.

The M. B. Dudley Film Company has recently been incorporated under the laws of Delaware with a capitalization of $50,000.

The Plaza theater in South Broad street was sold by the Plaza Realty Company to a syndicate of investors headed by Jamea J. Springer, which will make extensive alterations to the building. The theater was built about six years ago and has a seating capacity of about 1700. It was proposed to enlarge it last year, but the plan was never carried out.

A new theater is now under construction at 835 Morris street, which will cost about $5000. Just who is back of the new enterprise has not been learned but it is rumored that a syndicate is the promoter.

M. Rittenhouse is having a store room located at Nos. 303-7 North Fifty-third street altered into a moving picture parlor at a cost of $4,000. This new play house is located in a district now fairly well supplied with motion picture shows, but competition is the life of trade and another new one will perhaps increase the standard of the shows.

Michael Stiefel, is the owner of a new theater which, upon completion, will be one of the finest in the North East section of the city. The building will be of modern fireproof construction, and will contain all the latest devices to make it a first-class picture theater. The cost of the theater will be about $50,000. The seating capacity will be more than 1500.

The Eureka Amusement Company has purchased a plot of ground at Fortieth and Market streets on which it wil have erected a picture theater. The assessed valuation of the ground is $16,000.

Cape May, N. J., is about to have an open air theater for its summer crowds and from the present plans it wil have a seating capacity of about 1000 persons. This theater will be part of an amusement park which will be called Marine Park. Other attractions will also be added.

A $10,000 motion picture theater will be erected at Twentieth and McKeen streets for James McMonigle. Work has already been started by the contractor and the new house will be opened to the public in the very near future.

Much interest was created in Vandergrift by the owners of a new theater by holding a prize contest for the best name submitted, the winner getting as a prize $10 in gold with a season ticket to the theater. When the judges made their decision the name of "Mar-Mac" was chosen.

Added improvements have been made to the Bijou Dream theater at 1205 Market street, which is under the management of Frank Buhler. It is the intentions of Mr. Buhler to make this house the most attractive in Market street.

Messrs. Levich, Woldow and Kapmer, have taken an option on a plot of ground located at 2215-23 North Twenty-ninth Street, where they will erect a motion picture and vaudeville theater at a cost of $185,000. The theater will be ready for occupancy about September. It will have a seating capacity of 2,200.

Several of the exhibitors in Philadelphia have showed an earnest effort to do something for the flood sufferers of the Middle West. In a number of the theaters the entire day's receipts have been turned over to Mayor Blankenbnrg, and he in turn has forwarded it to the governors of the stricken states.

Lieutenant J. P. Anderson, the Baltimore representative of Union Features, is now located with the United Features, 15 North Tenth Street, where he will book all Eclair subjects for Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, District of Colombia, North Carolina and Pennsylvania.

The Pelham Amusement Company has taken title to a plot of ground at the southwest corner of Germantown Avenue and Hotter Street, 45 feet by 150 feet on which will be erected a moving picture theater. Plans for a model house will be made by a local architect and it is expected that the theater will be one of the finest in the northwest section of the city.

The proposed moving picture theater, which is to be built at Seventeenth Street and Susqnehanna Avenue, is meeting with many difficulties. This theater will occupy a plot of ground next to a public school and the populace contend that if the picture house is built it will interfere with the children in going to school. A delegation of business men of that section headed by Charles L. Fluck and Dr. Russel H. Conwell, of the Temple Baptist Church, appeared before the School Committee and asked that the ground be bought for a public playground, and thus keep the backers of the moving picture theater from building the house. Just what action the School Board will take is the subject of conversation among exhibitors and the people who are opposing the erection of the theater.

CONGDON.

BUFFALO.

ACCORDING to plans recently filed at the Bureau of Buildings, in this city, Buffalo is to have several new moving picture theaters in 1913. Mitchell H. Mark, head of the Mark-Brock Theatrical Enterprises will build a moving picture theater at Grant and West Ferry Streets at a cost of $100,000. The Erie Holding Corporation will build a similar house and office building at 1367 Main Street, at a cost of $70,000. John R. Oishel is to spend $15,000 on a moving picture house at 257 Virginia Street and John J. Maher will erect one at Rhode Island Street and West Avenue, at a cost of $15,000.

A permit has been issued to Martin Pleuthner to build a moving picture theater at 943 Jefferson Street at a cost of $13,000, and G. A. Nichols will erect one at 378 Oak Street at a cost of $2,000.

Michael Shea, who features Edison's talking pictures with high class vaudeville at Shea's Theater in this city, is interested in a hippodrome to be erected at 580 Main Street at a cost of $150,000. It is expected that moving pictures will be among the attractions to be offered at this house. The theater will seat 3,000 persons. The work is to be done in the name of the McNaughton Realty Co.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Local No. 6, of Buffalo, recently called a meeting of proprietors of motion picture theaters of this city and Western New York. The members agreed to oppose any legislation unfavorable to their business. Proposed laws requiring the closing of motion pictures on Sunday, the use of concrete floors in these houses and similar subjects were discussed.

"Satan" is the title of a moving picture attracting great crowds to the Strand Theater this week. Harold Eidel is proprietor of this house.

Manager Henry Marcus of the Academy Theater is featuring Dayton flood pictures this week.

Keith's Columbia Theater of this city recently celebrated what Manager Bowe termed a "gala week." These pictures were shown: "Heroes, One and All," "A Prodigal's Return," "The Spy's Defeat," "What Happened to Mary" and "Detective Burns."

The Mark-Brock Theatrical Enterprises of Buffalo contributed to the fund recently collected here for the Ohio flood sufferers. The theaters which are owned by the company here and which sent money to the stricken districts are The Academy, Strand, Family, New Lyric and Victoria. These houses feature moving pictures.

Proprietors of moving picture theaters in Canadian towns near Buffalo are watching with interest the campaign recently begun by the Toronto, Ont. Methodist Ministerial Association against certain moving picture houses of that city. The ministers claim that they disapprove of the method alleged to be employed by certain managers. It is claimed that some of the pictures put on by these managers frequently tend to impair the minds of young patrons. It is also reported that those proprietors who conduct clean shows will receive the endorsation of the ministers.

"BILLY BISON."

PITTSBURG.

THE co-partnership lately existing between Geo. H. Smith, Fred M. Smith and Edward L. Smith, under the firm name of Smith Brothers Company, which conducted a moving picture theater at 2726 Penn Avenue, this city, has been dissolved by mutual consent, Edward L. Smith retiring and Geo. Smith taking over his interest in the firm. The business will be conducted at the old address.

A Pennsylvania state charter has been applied for by Pierre Dannals, A. H. Berg and E. L. Stillwagon for an intended corporation to be known as the McKeesport Amusement Company, which will conduct and operate moving picture theaters and entertainments.

Operations on the new Harris Theater, at Center and Sheridan Avenues, have been started. The new theater will be one of the most attractive in the city and will cater to the residents of the East End.

The Kenyon Opera House now runs continuous motion pictures and vaudeville as the afternoon show, the addition of moving pictures proving a profitable experience. The regular evening show, consisting of vaudeville, is then put on. The local vaudeville houses are running more and more motion pictures all the time, and the action of the Kenyon is expected to be followed by several of the other vaudeville houses.

The East End Amusement Company has received a Pennsylvania charter to do business under that name and to conduct moving picture theaters and other places of entertainment. The members of the company are David Adler, Harry Adler and H. F. Reidenback, all of this city.

Letters to the Editor

"WORLD GIVES EXHIBITORS CREDIT."

Dundee, Mich., April 3, 1913.

Editor Motion Picture World, New York:

Dear Sir—I am just an exhibitor in a small country town; have been in the business four years, and during that time have read the M. P. World as David Harum did the good book, "From Kiver to Kiver." Facts and Comments claim my attention first of all. Especially gratifying is the stand you take in behalf of the helpless exhibitor. Unlike the manufacturer and exchanges, you give us credit for intelligence, ability to conduct our own business, and an earnest desire to bring it up to a higher standard by showing only pictures that appeal to a high class of patronage, those seeking instruction as well as entertainment.

High class comedy is wholesome and necessary for variety, but many coarse, if not actually disgusting pictures which are put upon the market by some of the best companies should not be tolerated. I do not wish to cater to the class of people who prefer them. They will patronize me any way, and their taste can be educated up; but the really refined people never enjoy them. But what are we going to do? We are treated only as inanimate parts of a huge machine, necessary, of course, but simply playing a game of chance; brains, ability, a knowledge of the business. and earnest endeavor, count for nothing under the existing condition of affairs. We have no chance of establishing a good reputation for our houses when we cannot exercise any judgment of our own; and the worst feature of it is, we take the people's money first of all, many times knowing they will be neither pleased nor satisfied. A few of the charitably inclined ones will say, "You cannot expect to have good pictures all the time," and I wonder why when I know there are plenty and to spare. Even the booking of features according to the system of my exchange gives me no variety and no choice in the matter. If I could choose my programs my friends would never have to make any excuse for me. An invitation would always be extended to the clergy, members of the Board of Education, etc., and the worst enemy of the photoplay could never find anything to censure or condemn. I believe I am voicing the sentiments of the majority of exhibitors and hope the day will soon come when we can stand on equal footing with those engaged in other lines of business and have the same chance of pleasing our patrons. In the meantime I shall keep looking for the "Handwriting on the wall" in the pages of your valuable magazine. Yours for better times,

Mrs. S. J. Gilman,
Electric Theater, Dundee, Mich.

"KEEP UP THE FIGHT."

Ironton, Ohio, Feb. 25, 1913.

Moving Picture World, New York City:

Gentlemen—Permit me to encourage you in your good work in striving to elevate the moving picture business. Your criticisms and reviews of films, I think are the most important features of your work. I rely on the reviews of your able critics and find them great aid in advertising, and my only complaints are that occasionally a film is skipped and that the reviews on regular releases are not indexed as are the synopses.

Keep up the fight for more educationals.

The Scenics and Travelogues would be in greater demand if they had more explanatory sub-titles. I firmly believe the Educational film is the backbone of the future prosperity of the motion picture as an entertainment.

It tickles me when I read your criticisms of the untrue-to-life Western and un-Indian pictures. Yours truly,

A. J. Wellmann.

ABOUT ADVERTISING SLIDES.

Fort Myers, Fla., March 18.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—I beg to call your attention to a thing that in my humble opinion, will soon be a great drawback to the motion picture exhibitor, unless you, as the press of the industry, begin a campaign in no uncertain terms of warning. I refer to the advertising slide, and I realize how hard it will be to prevent this source of revenue from seriously injuring the motion picture theater, as you are no doubt aware that already various advertising agencies, are realizing this effective way of getting their wares before the public, and exhibitors are not slow in accepting their slides. And unless some steps are taken to warn them, it will be only a short time when patrons will begin to fall off, and we will be asking ourselves why? perhaps little dreaming that the patron is wearied with reading advertisements.

I am speaking from experience, and while I have never taken but a limited number, yet I have oftimes heard unfavorable comment from regular patrons. I am, most truly yours,

Jno. T. Henday,
Manager Hendry's Grand.

See a Simplex at Our Expense

ASK your exchange or dealer to order one for you to look at. Don't let him talk you out of it.

Perhaps his profit is greater on some other machine.

He runs no risk if you don't buy it, for we will take it off his hands and pay the transportation charges both ways.

We want every exhibitor and operator to see a Simplex projector. Compare it, part for part, with the others. Judge for yourself of its merit.

Catalogue A fully describes the Simplex

You are under absolutely no obligation to buy it if you don't like its design and construction, but for your own satisfaction see it before you buy another make of machine.

If your dealer hesitates about ordering one, write us, and we will give you the name and address of a dealer or exchange who will gladly supply you.

The German Emperor the Latest Moving Picture "Fan"

That the fascination of the "movie" has made an enthusiast of Kaiser Wilhelm is a handwriting on the wall—he who runs picture shows should read with pride.

That the motion picture holds the center of the stage as the favored amusement of the American public there is no doubt. Make your show the Mecca for American aristocrats by equipping your machine with

Bausch and Lomb
Projection Lenses

The choice of wise picture men everywhere. They know that Bausch & Lomb objectives and condensers insure pictures that are bright, clear and steady—the true to life kind that attract the crowds and keep them coming.

The Edison and Nicholas Power Machines are regularly equipped with our lenses. They can be procured also through any film exchange.

It will pay you to read our interesting free booklet 62D.
It contains much of value to owners and operators.

THE HAUNTED HOUSE (April 28).—There is a common superstition that the picturesque old home of James Chilton, a millionaire, is haunted. One night as the nurse is telling the ghost story to Chilton's little daughter, Adelaide, Spider Pete, a notorious thief, is about to enter the window. Spider overhears the weird tale and becomes so terrified that he abandons all professional thoughts in a spectacular flight.

Chilton has married a second time. His bride, Isobel, devotes her life to society and has scant interest in her stepdaughter, making little Adelaide very unhappy by her fault-finding.

Spider reads in a paper that Chilton has presented his wife with the famous Hepworth sapphires. "Ghost or no ghost, I'll get them stones," exclaims the crook, and when the house is clothed in darkness, he enters the window.

Isobel punishes Adelaide for some trifling disobedience by locking her in a dark room. When the wife retires to her boudoir she is horrified to see Spider's reflection in the mirror. The crook is about to resort to violence to prevent Isobel from giving the alarm, when a series of strange sounds issue from the adjoining room. Adelaide, angered at the injustice of her punishment, is throwing things about. Superstitious Spider crouches in terror and Isobel, grasping his revolver, is master of the situation. Chilton returns from a late engagement and summons an officer, and Adelaide, who has unconsciously impersonated the celebrated Chilton Ghost, wins the love of Isobel.

THE EIGHTH NOTCH (April 30).—The seven notches on the handle of Ed. Grigg's gun—one for each Danver—present a grim story. For years the Griggs and Danvers have been engaged in a deadly feud. One morning as Bill Danver is hitching his horse to the plow, the animal runs away and Danver, who is dragged over the ground, suffers a broken leg. The horse returns to the stable and Mrs. Danver, full of apprehension, goes in search of her husband.

Grigg's little son, playing with a jackknife, cuts the eighth notch on the gun handle. When Mrs. Danver comes to the Grigg cabin, with rifle in hand, she sees the newly cut notch and surmises that her husband has been added to the list of Grigg's victims.

Danver makes his way painfully over the field and is picked up by a farmer. Grigg, despite his protests of innocence, is arrested and is about to be dealt with severely when the injured man reaches the scene and explanations follow. The bland looks of the two enemies soften when they discover that their innocent children are playmates.

A COUPON COURTSHIP (April 30).—Ruth finds a catalogue issued by the Smokem Tobacco Company, announcing that a grand piano will be given for one million coupons. She declares that she will marry the man who secures the piano and soon a "smoky battle" takes place. But alas, when Tom and Dick have accumulated the required amount of coupons, a law is passed prohibiting their redemption, and Harry, who has never acquired the tobacco habit, wins the day by purchasing the coveted piano.

FATTY'S BUSY DAY (May 2).—Dissatisfied with farm life, Fatty decides to visit the city and find employment. His loquacious appeal so impresses the proprietor of a metropolitan drug store that Fatty secures the position of soda-fountain attendant. Then things begin to happen. Mary, a charming young patron of the establishment, is nearly drowned by the amateur clerk, who is summarily dismissed. A confidence man sells Fatty a piano tuning outfit and when a pedestrian is injured, the crowd mistakes the country boy for a doctor. When it is discovered that the supposed medicine case contains nothing but tools Fatty is dealt with severely and he takes refuge in a house, where he claims to be a paper hanger. Cruel fate again asserts itself. It is Mary's home which Fatty has entered with such little ceremony and when he is driven away he is corralled by Jennie, who is giving an entertainment, and whose piano is out of tune. More things happen and Fatty hastens back to the farm, sadder but wiser.

OLD WOMEN OF THE STREETS OF NEW YORK (May 2).—Old women of the poor, touched by the hand of time and unable to toil longer, must make their own living in the streets. Tucked away in odd corners are many sidewalk peddlers. Odds and ends of dress goods provide a living for some, while others cry the penny papers at the subway entrances. The apple woman, the shoe-string vendor, the seller of penny cakes and candies and many other picturesque types are visited.

THE WAYWARD SON (May 3).—William Cartwell, a wealthy manufacturer, is an industrious, self-made man, and it is a source of sorrow, as well as vexation, to him that his son, Wilfred, is opposed to any kind of work. Driven to extreme irritation by his son's continued indolence, Cartwell orders Wilfred from the home, telling him, in no uncertain language, that the door will be closed to him until he has made his way in the world.

After a month of shiftless existence, Wilfred becomes a vagabond. Unaccustomed to work of any sort, he can neither find nor do any profitable labor. Discouraged, hungry and footsore, he reaches his native town. "Red," a fellow vagabond, conducts him to a cheap resort, where food is bought.

Two toughs in the place see that Wilfred has a watch—the only keepsake of his former happy life which he has been able to retain—and when they attempt to secure it, a fight ensues and Wilfred, badly bruised, is thrown into the street.

Sally, a pretty young working girl, discovers Wilfred's plight and secures quarters for him in a tenement building. During the evening Wilfred overhears a conversation between the two toughs who occupy the adjoining room and is startled to learn that a plan is being made to rob his father's office. Wilfred's presence is detected and after being mistreated by the toughs, he is left, bound.

Sally, bringing Wilfred's supper, releases him and by a daring act they thwart the thieves, who are arrested. The elder Cartwell gives Wilfred a new start in life and the young man begins to work with a will.

EDISON.

WHEN THE RIGHT MAN COMES ALONG (April 28).—Anyone seeing the handsome suite of offices on Wall Street would think the owner, J. Green, was one of the Napoleons unchanged, but they would not think that this same J. Green was a woman so thoroughly immersed in the intricacies of the Bulls and Bears of the Exchange that all other considerations were forgotten.

Her people, happily married and scattered to the four winds, wrote insistent but vain letters to her to abandon money grabbing and enjoy the felicity of normal married life. These letters she treated with contemptuous indifference. No man interested her until Arthur Roydon was brought directly under her notice.

During business hours she finds her mind straying to him, and when he enters her office one day, the warm spring tide of love fills her heart. He is all business, cold and aloof, places a check in her hands for stock investment and leaves abruptly. She resolves to win him, but though their meetings at the club are frequent, he remains unchanged. Spurned and lonely, she returns to her apartment late one night and after the expiration of many hours and the consumption of many cigarettes and brandies and sodas, she solves the question. She is too mannish. A phone message to a woman's outfitter's, a change of clothes and manners, and Arthur Roydon falls completely under the feminine charms of J. Green, his Julia.

THE ORPHAN (April 29).—John, the black-faced sheep of the Hallet family, is ill in a Western mining town, and finding that he is about to die, writes to his younger brother, Will asking him to take care of his little motherless girl. Before he can finish and mail the letter the cold hand of death stills his heart and he is found dead in his cabin by a miner friend. The miner reads the letter and takes it, with the child, back East to Will Hallett, who is a young bachelor and society man, engaged to a wealthy and beautiful girl, Betty O'Moore.

Will's first impulse is to refuse the bequest, but the winsome little three-year-old tot, with her golden curls, worms herself into his affections at first sight, and he decides to keep her.

An incident in the park the next day shows him that Betty, his fiancée, does not care for children, and he puts off telling her of his little charge.

The baby proves a trial as well as a delight to Will, as she is the cause of his breaking an engagement with Betty for the opera, then another for a luncheon, which so angers Betty that she gathers his numerous presents together to return to him.

The little Rose is suddenly taken ill and Will telephones an employment agency for a nurse, who, when she finds the patient is a child, refuses to stay. Will, in desperation, leaves the house to find a nurse, and during his absence Betty, who has decided to return his presents in person, arrives at his rooms, and finding the sick baby, realizes that here is the innocent cause of her lover's apparent remissness as to his engagements.

The real woman heart of her is awakened by the sweet helplessness of the little one, and she gathers her into her arms and comforts her in the way that only a woman can do and thus Will finds them upon his return.

He sees the presents on the table and Betty's engagement ring at the top of the heap, but as she takes this from him and coyly replaces it on her finger, he realizes that his little orphan ward has now found a mother as well as a father.

A RELUCTANT CINDERELLA (April 30).—Grace Walker, a young Miss, attends a dinner dance in slippers that are so tight they pinch her feet beyond endurance. At the dinner table she kicks off one slipper to give her foot temporary relief. The uneasy feet of some of the guests accidentally kick the slipper along until it is far out of her reach.

When the hostess gives the signal for the ladies to rise, Grace finds herself in an awkward predicament. In vain she waves her foot in all directions under the table, and is finally compelled to rise and leave the room in her stockinged foot.

In the dancing room she seats herself in a secluded corner behind some potted plants, in the hope of resuming her search as soon as the gentlemen vacate the dining room. Dick Evans is the young man who finds the slipper. He hides it in his pocket and makes up his mind to find the owner, resorting to all manner of tricks to get a view of the ladies' feet. Finally he comes upon Grace sitting behind the potted plants with one foot visible. "Here is my pretty Cinderella at last," he murmurs, producing the slipper. But the embarrassed young lady loftily denies all knowledge of it. His efforts at trying to get a glimpse of her foot prove fruitless and the situation develops into a battle of wits. He is about to give up when he conceives a brilliant idea. He goes down into the kitchen of the house and gets a servant to get him a mouse in a trap. Returning to the dancing room, he lets it loose, causing the panic-stricken ladies to climb chairs, and thus Grace reveals her stockinged foot, and is forced to admit ownership of the slipper which Dick deftly slips on her foot, enabling her to join in the merry whirl.

LUBIN

IN THE HAREM OF HASCHEM (April 28).—Maisara, a collector of revenue for Haschem, the caliph, wrongs a widow. She appeals to the caliph, and he orders that Maisara shall repay her a hundredfold and lose his place. Vowing vengeance, Maisara seeks his kinsmen, the tribal spirit being an Arabian characteristic. They counsel with him and decide that Maisara shall send his daughter, Amina, to the caliph as a peace offering, but in reality that she may assasinate him. She falls in love with Haschem and fails to redeem her promise. Maisara warns her that unless she carries out the undertaking he will do so himself. She throws the dagger from her and this is taken to Maisara by Zied, his cousin. Under pretense of seeing Amina, Maisara gains entrance to the harem, where Haschem is not closely guarded, and where the blow can be struck before help can be summoned. Amina is horror-stricken at his appearance. Her distress is secretly observed by Haschem, who is on guard against the treachery, and takes the dagger from Maisara. On Amina's plea, Maisara's life is saved, and Amina finds happiness in the arms of the caliph.

GRANNY (April 29).—During a rehearsal of his new play, Peter Richards recognizes in Mary Walters, a well-known leading woman of twenty years before. She has met with reverses and is now employed as wardrobe woman in the company which is to produce his play. On the opening night the play is a failure, and the manager who financed it decides to take it off immediately. Mary Walters is the only one in the theater who has feeling enough to show sympathy for the author in his misfortune. Through a chance remark of an extra girl Peter gets an idea for another play, which he writes and calls "Granny," and he has enough confidence in Mary Walter's ability to offer her the leading part, which she gratefully accepts. Confident of its success, Peter's ambition is to produce "Granny" at the same theater where his former play met with such complete failure, but the manager refuses to produce it and Peter is forced to sell his home in order to secure enough money to put the play on. During his days of trouble Peter sees the worth of Mary and as he walks with her to the theater on the opening night, they pass a quaint little church and Peter asks her to share the future with him, no matter what the night may bring to them. Mary consents and they enter the rectory and are quietly married, after which they go to the theater for the opening performance. Peter's judgment is vindicated and the play is a hit.

THROUGH MANY TRIALS (Special, 2 parts, April 30).—Guy Maurice, a rich young artist, goes to the country and takes board at a farm house. He is shown around the farm by Emily Brown, the farmer's daughter, and he takes her for a drive. They fall in love and Maurice asks her to marry him. Abner Brown, the farmer, is very angry when he finds Maurice making love to his daughter and turns him out of the house. They elope and get married. The farmer turns Emily's picture to the wall.

The artist and his wife live at their city home. After a time he starts to go out with his old friends while his wife sits home waiting for his return. He neglects his work and they become poor. A child is born and Guy's better nature makes him try to bring back her love. He paints another picture, which is put in the art gallery and is given honor. Mary, the farmer's wife, is still crying for her child. Silus, the son, tells her he will find her, and he leaves home. The old home is cleaned out by the sheriff and the farmer turned out of his home; his wife is dead. The son finds his sister and they are now well-to-do after getting the prize for the picture. The old farmer comes to the city to hunt for his daughter; he meets with an accident; the notice of it is read by the daughter, who, with her husband, go to the hospital and bring the old man home.

THE VEIL OF SLEEP (May 1).—In order to secure a change of scene after a nervous breakdown, Louise Gray goes to Silver City, and obtains employment in the office of the Good Hope Mining Company, where Tom Price is cashier. Tom and Louise fall in love. Louise's happiness is clouded by worry over her mother and sister, who are very poor and in ill health. A large sum of money for the payroll is received and placed in the safe, the combination of which is known by both Tom and Louise. Carlton, the manager, is called away from the town, and during his absence word is received of some trouble at the mines. Tom starts for the mines, saying he will return the following day. After Tom's departure, Louise hears of a gang of outlaws operating in the region, and becomes much concerned for the safety of the money. In her nervous state this effects her so strongly that, in her sleep, she goes to the office, removes the money from the safe, and conceals it. Tom, hearing of the outlaw gang, has returned and sees her take the money. He thinks that she has been unable to resist temptation and has stolen the payroll. Being unable to secure the money and restore it to the safe, Tom, determined to protect the girl, declares himself to be the thief when the loss is discovered. Both Tom and the girl are heartbroken, each thinking the other a thief. The outlaws attempt to raid the town, and in a fight with the sheriff and citizens, are killed or captured. The elimination of danger from the outlaws acts upon Louise's subconsciousness, as did the original fear of them, and that night she again walks in her sleep, restoring the money to the safe. This time she is seen by the sheriff, Tom's friend. The sheriff explains to Tom and Carlton the facts, but, to save her feelings, they are kept secret from Louise, she being told that it was all a mistake, that the money was at all times in the safe. Louise gets well and all probability of a recurrence of somnambulism is removed by the elimination of worry over her mother and sister. When she returns from her honeymoon she finds that Tom has brought them West to live with them.

THE GIRL BACK EAST (May 2).—Ed. Rand and Ed. Carroll lived in Boston, and without any knowledge of each other, met and fell in love with a fickle and calculating girl named Betty Brown. To both she gave a photograph lovingly inscribed: "From your sweetheart, faithful and true." Each, with a desire to win her, went West in search of wealth. One day Carroll, who owned a cabin in the hills, started out to work his claim. He was ill from mountain fever, but overcoming his weakness, continued on the trail. During his absence, rand, who was out of water, stopped to ask for supply. Finding the cabin empty, he entered and discovered an exact duplicate of his photograph of Betty on Carroll's shelf. Realizing the girl's duplicity, he was about to leave when Carroll, who had become delirious from the fever, managed to drag himself from the claim to the cabin, where Rand, with the assistance of the country doctor, nursed him back to health, keeping from Carroll his knowledge of Betty's duplicity. After his recovery, Carroll by an accident, learned of Rand's secret and jealousy prompted him to challenge Rand to a duel. Through the accidental finding of a news paper article showing a notice of Betty Brown's marriage to a multi-millionaire in the East, both men became reconciled.

CLARENCE AT THE THEATER (May 3).—One of the clerks in the office where Clarence Lusk is employed, tells him to be sure and see a musical show that is playing in the city. Clarence hurries through the business of the day, rushes to a restaurant, eats hurriedly and arrives at the theater door just as it is opened. He is the first one in the house, but the theater gradually fills as the curtain rises. His first view of the stage is obscured by late arrivals and, when he finally gets a clear view of the stage, the curtain falls. He leaves in disgust, tearing up his programme and seat check, vowing "Never again."

FIXING AUNTIE UP (May 3).—Miss Bayne is much perturbed because her nieces, Bertha, Bess and Nan, are beating her badly at the game of hearts, and she strenuously objects to their getting married until she secures a husband. Jack Carson has a widowed father and he coaxes dad to keep an eye on the spinster. He tells him that she is rich and beautiful, but when old man Carson sees her he is much disappointed. The girls see what is the trouble and they determine to doll auntie up. By many little arts they improve her every day until she looks perfectly human, and it is not long before the old man capitulates. When he proposes, of course, auntie says, "This is so sudden," but she is too wise to lose her chance. Jack Carson is rewarded with the hand and heart of Bertha, George Radnor wins Bess and Ray Hewitt gets Nan, and the path is paved for four happy marriages.

SELIG.

ROSES OF YESTERDAY (April 28).—John Ralston, and his nephew, John Ralston, Jr., familiarly known as "Jack" live in a New York suburb, but have their business in the city.

One day Jack finds a pretty fan on the seat of a street car. Upon looking, he discovers the owner's name, "Cyrilla Drew, Glenridge, N. Y.," written upon the stick. Imagining Cyrilla to be a pretty young girl, he writes her a note suggesting that he return the fan in person. Miss Drew is a refined, pretty woman, in the prime of life, but still retains the love for romance. She lives in a rose gardened home with her eighteen year old niece, Margery. Miss Drew answers Jack's note, telling him that he can call and return the fan.

Without telling his Uncle John, Jack "dolls up" for the occasion, and departs for his romantic call. In the meantime, Miss Drew, prompted by memories of her youth, dresses in a simple gown, which she had last worn on the evening, twenty years before, when she quarreled and parted from her lover.

Jack, approaching the Drew home, sees Margery and, thinking her to be Miss Drew, falls in love with this vision of loveliness, and is much disappointed when he is introduced to the real owner of the fan. He makes the best of the bad bargain, however, and is polite to the elder woman; but when the occasion offers, he declares his love for Margery, much to the joy of that young lady. Miss Drew, later writes Jack a note asking him to meet her at "Lover's Bend." She, however, forgets to add the "Jr." to the name of Ralston, and the letter falls into the hands of lonely old Uncle John.

Uncle John, scenting a flirtation, keeps the appointment and finds Miss Drew to be his "rose of yesterday." They walk again in the old rose garden, and as memories of their youth, their love and their last parting prove overwhelming, they gladly answer to the call of cupid. Explanations are forthcoming, and the two couples agree upon the day for the double wedding.

HIRAM BUYS AN AUTO (April 29).—Hiram Hunt, a rube farmer of the very verdant variety, decides to buy an automobile. So he fills his pockets with greenbacks and visits town, accompanied by his wife and daughter, and his old chum and neighbor, Jacob Smith. The automobile agents soon learn of Hiram's presence and his desire, and they fairly mob him in their efforts to get his trade. The day's excitement finally ends disastrously for Hiram's pocket book, and almost so for his life. He purchases the cheapest little old wheezy machine in town, and from the moment he starts off with it, his career is suggestive of a deliberate intention to murder his family and neighbor, and suicide away his own life. He finally runs the machine through a stout fence and into the side of a barn, where the whole works blow up; Jacob disappears skyward with the debris. Soon he falls from the sky, and is followed by various parts of the shattered auto. Hiram dolefully gathers up such parts of the machine as he can carry, and starts to walk home, a sadder, but wiser rube.

THE BURGLAR WHO ROBBED DEATH (April 30).—A promising young physician has an inherent weakness for drink. He is devoted to his wife and child. At one full swoop, diptheria takes from him both wife and child. He loses his nerve, yields himself up completely to liquor, loses his practice, his friends and his self-respect. He finally arrives at the bottom of the ladder, where, weakened and penniless, he falls in with a gang of yeggs and is persuaded to undertake a burglary. He spots the Harrison home, observes that Mrs. Harison has been left alone this particular night, and enters by the upper balcony, first cutting the 'phone wires. He comes face to face with the mother endeavoring to save her child from dying in a violent fit of sickness which has attacked it. She can't get the doctor on the "dead" 'phone, and dares not leave the child to summon help. The burglar throws aside the rich haul of jewels he has just pocketed, trusts his fate in the hands of the woman, and works over the child with all his old professional skill. He robs death of the child. A night watchman discovers the severed 'phone wires, becomes suspicious and commences an investigation. The way in which the grateful mother shields the burglar as the latter labors over her little one, and the effect which the good woman's faith has on the unfortunate man, from the intensely sympathetic conclusion of the story.

ABSENT-MINDED MR. BOOB (May 1).—Mr. and Mrs. Algernon Boob are discovered breakfasting in their country place at Lonesomehurst. He is as small and insignificant as she is buxom and important. He is consuming the contents of the "Pup Edition," occasionally thinking of himself and taking a bite of solid food. The whistle of the train reminds him and he jumps into his overcoat, but neglects to put on his hat. He is followed to the station by the fleet and faithful maid of all-works, who jams the head-piece on him just as he climbs in the train. He has forgotten his commuter ticket so he pays cash, and then he keeps tromping his partner's ace in a friendly game in most exasperating fashion. His wife is invited to come to the city and have their child photographed. It requires a photographer and a corps of assistants to scare the baby into an attitude of restful content for a picture.

Mr. Boob arrives at the station an hour before his train is made up, so he buries himself in his newspaper. His wife comes in with the infant, but he is too much engrossed to see her. At that moment a pickpocket relieves her of her chatelaine. She grabs the man, but burdened with a baby, cannot hold him. She rushes to her absent-minded hubby and throwing the baby in his lap, starts hot foot after the thief. The big policeman outside, has happily nabbed him, but insists she must go to the station with them and lodge complaint. Mr. Boob suddenly burdened with a baby does not recognize it as his own, and trots off to the stationhouse where he leaves the waif. In the interium his wife goes home and is surprised to find he has not reported. He comes along on a late train, babbling of his remarkable experience. His wife tells him it was his own baby and consternation ensues. They spend a restless night locating the darling, finding it finaly in Bellion Hospital.

SOME CHICKEN (May 1).—An educational showing the output of an incubator.

THEIR STEPMOTHER (May 2).—Nina hardly has finished reading a fairy story to Trixie, her little sister, in which there is a horrid mean stepmother, when their father enters and announces to them that they are about to acquire a stepmother of their own. This is more than self-respecting children can be expected to endure, and taking their treasure with them, they flee from the house. They are finally found on the street by a policeman who questions them. At this moment, Constance, the sweet young woman who is betrothed to their father, rides up in her auto, recognizes the children and stops to hear their tale of woe. She is fairly aghast at their explanation to the officer that they are about to come under the away of a horrid stepmother who will beat them, starve them, and work them to death. Of course, Nina and Trixie have never seen their father's fiancee to know her as such. Constance seizes her opportunity to win the children. She tells them she will play their fairy godmother and take them to her home where no bad stepmother can ever get them. She gets them home and informs their father by 'phone of the plot she has conceived; he enters into the "game," and is overjoyed with the tact and sweetness of her attitude toward his little ones. Finally the kiddies grow homesick for Daddy, and Constance sends for him. Torn between their two loves, they make Daddy promise to marry their fairy godmother so they will not have to part from her; and thus everybody in the househod is made happy.

ON THE MOTIOGRAPH the film is guided over the film sprockets by A FLANGED IDLER ROLLER (Patented and Controlled by us) which touches only the outside edge of the film and does not come in contact with any other part.

Do You Know The Motiograph? Does Your Operator Know It?

Unless you are both familiar with this machine you are not only NOT UP-TO-DATE, but you are doing injustice to yourselves, to your patrons who are paying for good projection, but also to us, the manufacturer who has spent thousands upon thousands of dollars in yearly improvements to furnish you with a "QUALITY MACHINE" where an exchange of dollars brings you an equal amount of value.

ESSANAY.

COUSIN JANE (April 29).—Tom Allen visits his sister at boarding school where he meets Jane McArthur, and falls desperately in love with her charming beauty and personality. He spends a very pleasant week, taking the girls to the theater, skating, and making himself congenial generally. Some time later, Jane returns home to the country to spend the holidays with her mother. Jane discovers by reading the paper that the grand opera season has commenced in New York. Mrs. McArthur writes to her sister asking if Jane may visit for a few days. Mr. Lawrence, the uncle, is very enthusiastic about it, while his wife and daughter, are displeased. Mr. Lawrence finally gets the consent of his wife to write Jane asking her to come on. Jane astounds her city relatives by appearing as a country yokel. That night at the party, Jane meets Tom Allen. To the surprise of everybody the young couple are married on the spot. The clever situations leading up to the climax are unique.

COUSIN BILL (April 30).—John Steppling borrowed $3,000 from his father-in-law. He promises his wife never to speculate again. That afternoon a broker friend of Mr. Steppling's, gives the latter a good tip in corn. Bill, the idiotic office boy absorbs the conversation. Through persuasion on Steppling falls a martyr to the demon gold, and is induced to go home and get the money he has locked in the desk that morning. This he gives to Bill with instructions to deliver it to the broker. Instead of delivering the message immediately, Bill assists a young lady by giving her a stamp to mail a letter, gives a handle to an errand boy, so that he might be able to carry a heavy package. He proved himself to be a good samaritan to several, which took up a considerable amount of time. In the meantime, Steppling buys a paper which informs him of his loss. Mrs. Steppling having discovered that the money had vanished, rushes to her husband's office. Steppling confesses his speculation to her. Bill returns and is thrown bodily out of the office. He enters again, hands his employer the note which had been delivered too late to be any good and is rewarded with a crisp bill for his tardiness.

THE STORY THE DESERT TOLD (May 1).—One who has not traveled across a desert barely realizes what a trying and dangerous thing it is. The sheriff of Desert Valley, California, received a letter from Mrs. Tom Decker, requesting the former to send Marjorie to her. A volunteer is called for to risk his life in escorting the four-year-old child across the sandy plain. John Hartley steps forward and promises to protect the child with his life. That day, Bill Barratt, an outlaw, is arrested and lodged in jail for the murder of Jim Ellis' child. That night, the sheriff is informed that the men of the village are going to lynch Barratt. Sheriff Mackley handcuffs the prisoner, places him on a horse, and takes him to the desert, for safe keeping. In the meantime, John Hartley's mule succumbs to the heat. Being out of water he tells Marjorie he will go for some and return shortly. Hearing a child's cry, Mackley and his prisoner are quick to find the thirsty infant. Mackley returns to his horse, which had been left a few rods away, only to discover that the animal had galloped off. Without water, they are in a hopeless condition. Jim Barratt promises to guard the wagon, they discover the lifeless form of the outlaw, Jim Barratt, who had kept his promise.

A CHILD'S PRECAUTION (May 2).—Mr. John Cartleigh presents his four-year-old daughter, Dorothy, with a doll for her birthday. That day Cartleigh collects several hundred dollars for his employer. Finding the bank closed he takes the money to his home, unaware that he is being followed. That night, Cartleigh places the money in the buffet drawer. The child, fearing that her doll will be taken from her, gets up in the middle of the night, and places it in the buffet drawer, taking the wallet out and placing it under her pillow. Having seen Cartleigh place the money in the drawer, the robber waits until the household is in darkness. He forces the window open, looks into the drawer, but discovers the wallet missing. He is so furious that he takes the doll and smashes it on the door which awakens Dorothy. She runs into the room, just as the would-be thief is making his exit. The child's precaution saved John Cartleigh's employer's money. Dorothy is rewarded with a new doll.

CINES.

A FUGITIVE AT BAY (Special, 2 parts, April 16).—Vanni Lupo, a young villager, returning from a hunt with Baron Torrie, is introduced to the Baron's beautiful daughter, Minerva. A feeling of mutual attraction immediately springs up between them. Remembering her desire for a live pheasant, he is about to trap one when he is confronted by a gamekeeper. In his attempt to wrest the bird from Vanni, the gamekeeper is mortally wounded. Hardly had Vanni presented Minerva with the gift, when two officers appear with a warrant for his arrest on the charge of murder. Vanni seizes an opportunity to over-power the officers and makes his escape to the mountains. Incensed at the killing of the gamekeeper and provoked at the failure of the police to cause Vanni's arrest, the populace is only too ready to bring the guilty one to justice when a reward of $5,000 is offered for his capture, dead or alive.

Lending a deaf ear to all precautions, he goes into the village under cover of darkness and places bouquets on the ledge of his sweetheart's window. One day he is discovered by a couple of goat-herders, who immediately notify the townspeople. A posse is quickly formed and a vehement vengeance is their plan. Minerva learns of this and prompted by her love for him, she throws on her cape and determines to reach him before the posse arrives. The race is on! Although Minerva has chosen the more hazardous route, she courageously wins. She crawls to the entrance of the cave where her cry is heard by Vanni. He tenderly picks her up and carries her into the cave where she is revived, but, almost at the same time, he learns of his own predicament. Fumes of smoke soon penetrate the place and Vanni realizes he is caught in a trap. He runs to an exit in the cave where he can look out upon his captors. He frantically appeals to them, telling of the presence of Minerva, the daughter of the Baron Torrie, in the cave. They assure him her safety, but he must not escape and to save the life of the woman he loves, he complies with their demand and jumps from the cliff onto the rocks of the chasm below, and into eternity.

A HEART OF STEEL (April 22).—Albert Graham is very happy with his wife and little daughter, Lottie. His rich father, although strenuously opposed to his son's marriage, loves his grandchild.

Albert entertains, and is persuaded by his persistent wife to enter into a stock speculation with a number of friends. He is unaware that the United Mine Stock, which he contemplates buying, is the very stock his father has given his broker instructions to sell.

A lively market in stocks causes the inquiry, "Who is selling, and who is buying?" This question is answered when Lottie, visiting her grandparents, tells of her father's gain of fifty thousand dollars on the Exchange. This fact is verified when their maid tells them: "The one who ruined you is your own son!"

Albert learns that he has bankrupted his father, and attempts to repay him. The father, believing his son implicated in a scheme to cause his downfall, refuses, and orders him from the house.

Albert's frequent quarrels with his wife are heard of by the father. One evening, Albert and Mrs. Graham attend a Society Tableau, and Lottie, left at home, writes a letter asking her grandparents to forgive her papa and mamma. The lamp upsets, and the house is soon on fire. Lottie's life is in imminent danger. She is saved by her grandfather, who is seriously burned in the rescue.

Albert and his wife, when informed of the fire, hurry home, where they fall on their knees at the father's bedside. He rejects their advances, however, and raising himself upon his elbow speaks his last words to his son: "I will not forgive, and the only reason that I remain in your house is because I die.

FORGOTTEN (April 26).—Roger is a butler to the Duke de Melao. One day, while off duty, he comes upon Countess Ardenti and her daughter Sylvia. The Countess has sustained a slight injury to her foot. Roger and Sylvia assist her home, where he is royally treated.

Sylvia is a beautiful girl, and it is needless to say that Roger falls in love with her, but how to keep from her the knowledge of the true position he holds constantly worries him.

Meanwhile, Sylvia finds herself falling more deeply in love with Roger. Their romance, however, is short-lived, for, upon accepting an invitation to tea with the Duke, Sylvia and her parents learn of Roger's deception. Upon the protest of the Count, Roger is discharged.

Heartbroken, he leaves for Australia, where he hopes to forget the past.

Sylvia's pride, accompanied by her social pleasures, soon tends to dismiss all thoughts of Roger, and like a blessing from heaven, he meets a sudden death while at his work.

VIEWS IN LIEGE, BELGIUM (April 26).—These views are from the more important surroundings of the picturesque little city of Liege. Among the sights shown are the Hotel Curtis, St. Jacques Church, monuments of Belgium's great men, and glimpses along the River Meuse, including the famous Exposition Bridge.

THE NEW ARRIVAL (April 29).—Mr. Stout and his family learn through the papers that he is a candidate for election of County Judge. His daughter and Alfred, of a neighboring family, are sweethearts. Mr. Stout receives a letter from his cousin advising him that his Nellie is now the proud mother of a little one which will soon be brought him to see.

Mrs. Stout reads the letter when Alfred's mother calls, and in her anguish urges her to read it. Alfred's friend, a reporter on a radical newspaper, takes advantage of the assumed scandal and a degrading article against Mr. Stout appears in the next issue. Mr. Stout is censured by his political constituents, while Mrs. Stout is obliged to resign from a charity society.

Amid all the turmoil that follows, Alfred and his sweetheart are still true to each other. His father and mother disapprove of their love affair and go to the Stout home where Alfred had been seen entering. They arrive to take away their son, who is soon found with the girl. During the heated discussion between the two families, cousin Frank arrives with the innocent cause of all the trouble. "Nellie's little one' is a pretty, little Spaniel puppy."

SCENES AND RUINS NEAR ROME (April 29).—This is an interesting series of scenes of the ruins of castles and aqueducts in the Campagne Romaine, Southern Italy.

JERRY'S REBELLION (May 3).—Jerry is an unfortunate married man of small statue, and possesses an unmerciful mother-in-law. Sent to the market, he meets pretty Kitty; an appointment is made, and he returns home late to receive their usual blessing. How to keep his appointment with Kitty worries him. The Superintendent of Police, a friend of his, aids him, for on that night Jerry is arrested in his own home and set free outside of the house.

While waiting to be served in the Tip Top cafe, Kitty and he write postals. Jerry writes a pathetic letter of his suffering to his mother-in-law, while Kitty informs a girl friend that she is at that time dining with Jerry in the Tip Top cafe. Too much gum sticks the postals together when mailed, and Kitty's postal falls into the hands of the mother-in-law. She and the wife immediately set out to the restaurant and Jerry is brought home in a much dilapidated condition.

THE RIVAL LOVERS (May 3).—In which appear two young men, a girl and her irritable eccentric father. The young men, Tom and Jerry, denied the privilege of calling, resort to strategy. Disguised as a butler and governess, they are accepted by the father when the latter advertises for help. Their love-ventures in these capacities are successful until jealousy on Jerry's part brings their joke to an end. Tom feels the wrath of the father, and Jerry is found in such a ridiculous position that the father's wrath, in spite of himself, gives way to the ludicrous spectacle and a general hand shake follows.

ECLIPSE.

GERMAN CAVALRY MANEUVERS (April 30).—Aided by the excellent photography for which the producers of these pictures are famed, the Eclipse Company through George Kleine, present the Crown Prince of Germany reviewing and commanding his world-famous regiment in all its cavalry maneuvers.

GRANDPA'S REJUVENATION (April 30).—That the waters of the Fountain of Youth could be purchased in bottles at $5.00 each is the belief of Mr. Waggs after he had read an advertisement in the local newspapers. While Mrs. Waggs is sent to purchase a bottle, Mr. Waggs falls asleep. In his dream he is once more living in the age of his boyhood, and is awakened by the return of his wife just as he is playing in a sandpile. After having lived the past over again, he is only too glad to find it all a dream. Horror that his dignity would be lessened to such an extent arouses in him the abhorrence to the idea of it all, and when his wife returns, he violently throws the bottle and its contents away.

A PICTURESQUE JOURNEY IN WESTERN FRANCE (April 30).—These pictures were taken on a trip from Annecy to Chamonix, and comprise possibly the most magnificent scenery to be found in France.

A FOUR-FOOTED DETECTIVE (April 23).—The mysterious Mr. Raffles walks into a bank with his gang. A clever hold-up is effected, and a clean get-away is made.

Detective Keene is notified, and soon arrives with his dog, "Spot," which, after having been given the scent, starts out to locate the gang, while Keene most unconcernedly saunters off.

"Spot" successfully finds Raffl and shadows him to his home, but there he finds himself shut out. He resorts to strategy, and pretending to have been run over, lies down on the pavement. In his feigned plight he is seen from the window, and is tenderly carried into the house by Raffle's woman accomplice.

When left alone, "Spot" procures some valuable clues, including an addressed envelope and some keys.

The detective returns from the theater to find "Spot" waiting for him. Together they start out, and with the aid of the keys gain an entrance to the home of Raffles.

Here lively scenes occur. Keene, desirous of capturing not only Raffles, but his whole gang, pinions Raffles down, and sends a letter to the police headquarters by "Spot." However, he allows the woman to escape. She tells the gang of Raffles' situation, and they hurry to his assistance. Keene pretends to be fatally shot, and as they leave the house they are confronted by the police, and a clean sweep is made.

"Spot," the four-footed detective, is again a hero!

MELIES.

A BURIED TREASURE (May 1).—At a boarding house in Sidney, Australia, Franz, a young artist, holds himself aloof from his fellow boarders. In vain do they try to induce him to join their picnics and frolics. Secretly he is in love with the young and pretty Dolly, but dare not make advances because of his poverty and her wealth. Secretly she loves him.

At length, peeved at the artist's reserve, the boarders decide to play him a joke, a la Edgar Allan Poe's "The Gold Bug." Even little Dolly joins in the plot, lest by refusing she betray her secret. They ingeniously steal from the artist his large, soft, black hat—his inseparable companion—which they place carefully in a large box and bury among the rocks on Mosman Point. While the artist is busily at work on a picture of Sidney Harbor, a rag blowing at his feet attracts his attention. It is supposedly an old note written by a dying sailor to his pal, giving directions to a buried treasure at Mosman Point. The artist bites.

Not a moment does he lose to seek the spot, and not a moment do the boarders lose to follow him. But on opening the box and discovering the joke, the look on his face is so pitiable that Dolly deserts the jokers, runs to Franz and confesses her love. That is revelation Number One. Number Two is in the form of a letter the artist finds in his hat, which he had neglected to open. It contains a check for 1,000 pounds in payment for a painting. The drinks are on the boarders.

THE HOME OF TERNS (Australian sea-birds)—(May 1).—The Tern, or Australian sea-bird, finds its breeding place on the little island of Oyster Key, situated about thirty miles out at sea from Cairns, North Queensland, Australia. They are so numerous that, when flying, they form a sort of fog, and are so tame that the grinding of the camera does not in the least scare them.

VITAGRAPH.

O'HARA AND THE YOUTHFUL PRODIGAL (April 28).—Denis O'Grady, Tom and Ailleo's son, is eight. His grandfathers, O'Sullivan and O'Grady, are jealous of each other, and each tries to win the child's affection and to object to everything the other does, but O'Hara, his god-father, is really the child's favorite. One day while his mother is out, Denis tries to steal a pot of jam. Aileen is going to whip him, but O'Hara pleads for him and he is pardoned. For a while he remembers his promise, then one day, near Christmas time, when he is over at his grandfather Sullivan's, he is tempted to steal some tarts. He does so, and at the same time breaks a pet pipe of his grandfather's. Sullivan would forgive the theft, but not the pipe, so he takes Denis home and tells his mother. Aileen whips him soundly and shuts him up in an outhouse. Denis resolves to run away. He climbs out of the window, steals a ride on a cart and gets out into the country. Night comes on, and he is lonely and frightened and wishes he was home.

In the meantime, his flight has been discovered and his mother blames herself for her harshness. O'Hara starts out with Larry, the policeman, to find him and they discover him curled up by a small fire, which follows out the tactics of his favorite heroes. O'Hara restores him to his mother and all ends happily.

TWO'S COMPANY, THREE'S A CROWD (April 29.)—Sadie is the favorite typewriter of the establishment. Both Binks and Bingles lay siege to her heart. Both invite her to go to the theater. Each reserves seats. Bingles, to put one over on Binks, gets the rest of the employees to make believe that he is ill. They all tell him that he is looking terribly, until poor Binks decides to go home and go to bed. Just as he is leaving, he overhears Bingles tell the boys that the scheme has worked to perfection. On his way home, he stops at the theater, and tells the ticket-seller that he can cancel two of the seats for that evening, and reserve only two for Binks.

That evening, Bingles, thinking that the coast is now clear, stops for Sadie and takes her to the show. When he and Sadie arrive they find that his seats have been sold. Sadie is distressed. Binks puts in an appearance in full dress suit and high hat. He offers to share one of his seats with her. She accepts, and Bingles, crestfallen, stands aghast.

STREET SCENES, YOKOHAMA, JAPAN (April 29).—The novel sights which these scenes portray, bring before us the activity and business thrift of a nation which has astonished the world, and shows us one of the leading thoroughfares of Japan during the busy hours of the day.

A WINDOW ON WASHINGTON PARK (April 30).—From his apartment, where he lives a cheerless widower's life, overlooking Washington Park, Alan Dale sees a refined, but poverty-stricken old gentleman on one of the park benches. Calling his butler, he instructs him to go down and tell the old man he would like to see him. When the butler approaches the elderly man the old fellow is somewhat skeptical, but finally consents to go with him. Alan receives his guest cordially and tells him why he has requested him to come and invites him to dinner. During the meal the old man tells his life's story; how he married a young woman, and after the birth of a little daughter, she died. How his daughter had married a young fellow and gone to live in New York, and how he had lost his money. The last news he had received of her was of her death. As he recites his story visions of the events appear before us and we have no trouble following them.

Alan, at the conclusion of the story, eagerly grasps the old gentleman's hand and tells him that he is his daughter's son.

BUNNY VERSUS CUTEY (May 1).—The college boys enjoy another joke on their friend, the lady-killing Cutey. John Bunny is at the play with Lillie, a girl whom he knows slightly, and Cutey makes up his mind to cut out Bunny. After the play, Bunny introduces the young lady to some of the boys. While he is talking, Cutey persuades Lillie to go to supper with him, much to Bunny's disgust. Cutey tells the boys about it.

In order to reduce his weight, Bunny is taking a series of flesh-reducing exercises and is seen by Cutey, who rushes off to tell his friends about it. Thinking that Bunny's awkward antics will amuse her, Cutey and the boys rush off to Lillie and bring her along. By no means a finished athlete, Bunny has a good deal of trouble with some of the exercises. He drops dumb-bells on his toes, hits his head with the Indian clubs, etc. With laughter, the boys watch him, but Lillie is annoyed at their ridicule. When, on entering the room, she sees Bunny humiliated by their taunting him, she gets highly indignant and orders the immediate departure of Cutey and his friends, telling them that John Bunny is quite good enough for her. The boys enjoy a good laugh at the crest-fallen Cutey.

USES OF DYNAMITE BY U. S. ENGINEERING CORPS (May 1).—Dynamite has many uses in times of peace as well as in warfare. The Engineering Corps are shown using it in stumping and felling trees and for a variety of other purposes. The ease with which this violent explosive may be handled and its enormous power when exploded in close quarters, are most strikingly illustrated.

CINDERS (May 2).—Cinders, the furnace man in a large tenement building, has no friends, with the exception of his dog, Mutt, and Katy, a poor little girl. One day Mutt is away for a long time. When he comes back he brings with him a note from little Katy, saying that she is sick in bed. Cinders goes up and she tells him that she would like some real flowers instead of the artificial geraniums that form her only garden. When he goes to buy them he finds that he has not enough money and decides to sell his dog. After speaking to several men he at last finds a purchaser, who pays him a dollar. Cinders spends the money on flowers and takes them to Katy. A few minutes later, a man comes in bringing Mutt with him. He is the man who had bought the dog and is none other than Katy's father, who had long been missing.

CAPTAIN MARY BROWN (May 3).—Plans of the new fortifications around New York have been entrusted to Colonel Brown, who keeps them in a safe. He and his secretary, Captain Kingsley, are the only persons knowing the combination, but by an ingenious trick with a mirror, the assistant secretary, Deland, really a captain in the Belgian Secret Service, manages to learn it and steal the plans. This he does on a Saturday night, thinking to return them before either the colonel or Kingsley reach the office on Monday.

On Sunday, however, the colonel receives an urgent call for the plans and he telephones to Kingsley. Kingsley is with his fiancée, Mary Brown, the colonel's daughter, when he is called and she takes him in her car to the office, waiting outside for him. When Kingsley opens the safe and announces that the plans are not there, the colonel accuses him of stealing them, knowing that the young man has recently been spending a good deal of money. Mary comes into the office, and hearing the accusation, declares that her lover is innocent and that she will find the real culprit. Meanwhile, Deland brings them back to replace them in the safe. Mary is alone there, her father and Kingsley having gone, and she guesses the reason for Deland's visit. When he leaves the office, she follows into the room occupied by the two spies. They discover and bind her, but not before she has been able to get a message conveyed to her father, who arrives with Captain Kingsley just in time to prevent the spies from making their escape.

HEARTS OF THE FIRST EMPIRE (Special, 2 parts, April 28).—In the spring of 1810, the Peninsular War begins, and fearing that the Austrian Army may again take the field (he having ignominiously defeated them the previous year), Napoleon arrests the Count de Mauperg, high in the favor of the Austrian Emperor, Francis. Mauperg is to remain in Paris for six months as a hostage for the good behavior of his sovereign.

Emperor Napoleon's wife, Marie Louise, one day when driving, intervenes in behalf of a poor girl named Beatrice Dupreil, who is being cruelly beaten by an old hag, Mere Pignoue. The empress compensates the woman with a bag of money and takes Beatrice to the castle. On account of her awkwardness and unsophisticated manners, her first appearance causes much laughter.

Directly after Count de Mauperg's presentation to the courtiers by Napoleon, the empress, with her ladies, enters. Beatrice is presented to the emperor, and instead of making a courtly bow, she acts in a hoydenish manner. This arouses laughter from the court, but her part is taken by Mauperg, who conceives an admiration for her, and the emperor orders that the court dancing master instruct her in French etiquette.

Six months have nearly passed and Beatrice, now well acquainted with the French court manners, is sought after by the courtiers and Count de Mauperg, whom she favors. This arouses the impassioned jealousy of Duc de Beaufort, a courtier, who reminds Napoleon that Mauperg's hostage has nearly expired, thinking that by this way he will get rid of his rival.

Just as Mauperg is about to leave he is secretly handed a note in which he is commanded, as a true servant of Austria, to slay the tyrant emperor. Beaufort, hearing of this, arrests Mauperg's servant, obtains the note, which he brings to the emperor. Hearing that Beaufort is commanded to arrest Mauperg, Beatrice encounters the courtier in the corridor and, after a tussel, kills him with a rapier. Beatrice divests the dead man of his outer garments, goes to the apartment of Mauperg, tells him what she has done, and together they flee from the country.

PATHEPLAY

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 17 (April 21).—Oakland, Cal.—Mayor Frank K. Mott, of this city, inspects the new street sweeping device, which gathers the dust instead of scattering it.

New York, N. Y.—Fire Commissioner Johnson has accumulated the evidence of his having obtained $127,000 worth of insurance on household furniture worth $3.96, with which he hopes to influence insurance legislation at the State Capitol.

London, England.—Mrs. Pankhurst leaves her solicitor's office to go to her trial in Oold Bailey Court, where she is sentenced to three years' penal servitude.

San Francisco, Cal.—Mayor Rolph pitches the first ball at the opening baseball game of the season here.

St. Augustine, Fla.—The landing of Ponce de Leon is re-enacted here on the occasion of the 400th anniversary of the event.

Madrid, Spain.—The King and Queen attend the laying of the corner-stone of the College of the Naval Officers' Orphans.

Jersey City, N. J.—One hundred and seven contestants take part in the Modified Marathon race held on the Hudson County Boulevard.

London, England.—The King goes in state to the Embankment to open the Parliament.

Washington, D. C.—The suffragettes parade up Pennsylvania Avenue to the Capitol, where they present their plea for women suffrage.

Comic Section.—Mutt and Jeff try their hands at settling the revolution in Mexico.

THE CORMORANT (April 29).—A sea-bird, purely and simply, and dwelling in the crevasses of steep cliffs, the Cormorant's chief prey is fish. Consequently, it is an expert angler and whenever a fish nears the surface of the water, the Cormorant is waiting for it. The Cormorant immerses its head and in the twinkling of an eye the fish is captured. Fishermen use these birds to help increase their daily catch. The men fasten a strap on the neck of the Cormorant and the bird, after catching the fish, is unable to swallow. When its neck is full of fish the Cormorant returns to its master and leaves the fish at his feet, then goes back for more.

ALONG THE RIVER EURE, FRANCE (April 29).—A scenic film of rare beauty and harmonious coloring.

HIDDEN LIFE IN SEAWEED (April 29).—A most interesting study of various almost invisible creatures that infest even the commonest seaweed is obtained by means of a planktonograph.

THE MEXICAN'S DEFEAT (April 30).—Out of revenge, a Mexican army captain "frames up" upon an American and his wife evidence of a conspiracy against the Mexican government. The captain, with a guard, calls to search for the evidence that he knows is in the house. The Americans seem to submit to the search, but a moment later and by clever maneuvering they have the advantage over the Mexican guard, and before the latter really knows what has taken place the Americans are fast disappearing toward the shelter of an U. S. army post over the border, where they arrive in time to dare the Mexicans to pursue them further.

THE PANAMA CANAL TODAY (April 30).—The most gigantic engineering project in the world's history is almost completed. The Milaflores locks and the spillway are opened for the first time and in this film the camera gives a comprehensive idea of the enormity of the undertaking which will link the Atlantic and Pacific.

THE PARTING ETERNAL (May 1).—When he never received her letter, Donald Morley took it for granted that Mary Leonard did not love him and left his old home. Some years later he is ordained a priest and celebrates his first Mass in a convent chapel where Mary is a nun. After the service and alone before the altar, they meet. Mary explains the circumstances of the misunderstanding, but they love each other well enough to put their worldly emotions aside (in a strongly dramatic scene) and hold faithful to the vows which their consciences tell them cannot be violated and then they part—for eternity.

LIQUID AIR (May 2).—In one of the experiments in this film two eels are placed in a tank of liquid air. When taken out they are frozen solid. One of them when placed in water comes to life, but, with a hammer, the other is easily broken into small pieces. This is done to prove that liquid air merely suspends life for the time being. Together with other experiments this demonstration has a message of interest to the masses who do not number a knowledge of scientific matters among their accomplishments.

WINTER IN UPPER ENGADINE, SWITZERLAND (May 2).—A view of the Alps in all their wondrous and glorious beauty holding the spectator spellbound by its very magnificence.

GENERAL SCOTT'S PROTEGE (May 3).—When her lover's life is sacrificed to pay the penalty for a crime committed by the chief's son, Red Wing, an Indian maiden, leaves the camp and goes to live with the family of General Scott, who is in charge of a frontier army post. The Indians do not bother her while General Scott is alive, but when he dies and the funeral procession is journeying to the cemetery the Redmen demand the return of Red Wing. She refuses to go, whereupon the savages attempt to take her from the soldiers. In as pretty a fight as one would wish to see, they are defeated and the heroine of the battle is little Red Wing, General Scott's protege.

BIOGRAPH

BLAME THE WIFE (April 28).—When the Smith family missed the train, it was the wife's fault—that's what Smith said. But the next day at train time his wife hurried off, leaving him alone. Then there was no one to answer his questions, "Did you see my collar?" "Where's my hat and coat?" Thus it was that Smith learned who really was to blame.

THE DAYLIGHT BURGLAR (April 28).—Harry returns from the club in a somewhat jagged condition and is surprised by finding a burglar in his room, who is quick-witted enough to take advantage of the situation, finally handing Harry over to the policeman as the burglar.

IF WE ONLY KNEW (May 1).—A careless nurse-girl allowing the child to wander away, made the mother realize the poignancy of the little verse:

> If we knew the baby's fingers,
> Pressed against the window pane,
> Would be cold and stiff tomorrow,
> Never trouble us again,
> Would the bright eyes of our darling
> catch the frown upon our brow,
> Would the prints of rosy fingers,
> Vex us then as they do now?

But a higher destiny watched the child and saw it safely home.

THE WANDERER (May 3).—This story is somewhat in the nature of a poetical fantasy, and may be construed as the spectator pleases. It is the story of a wanderer who prefers to seek, through his flute, the spirit of truth, that he may give it out into the world as he passes through his various journeys and experiences in life and thus make earth a better and fairer place. He prefers this to the perpetual strife for gain.

STRANGERS IN A STRANGE LAND (April 30).—Tony, his wife and little Rosa start for America. The wife dies and is buried at sea. Tony knows no English and has difficuffilty in obtaining work. He gets a job with a road gang. One day he sees a pretty flower, he picks it and his child is so pleased with it that the next evening he picks another, but is pounced upon by the irate owner of the garden. He is taken to the station and is unable to make them understand that he did not know he was doing anything wrong.

Eventually, he is brought to the night court, but all he can say is "I no steal'a da flower, I pick for lettle Rosa." The judge, noting the genuineness of the man's efforts at explanations, sends him with two policemen to investigate the truth of his story.

In the meantime, Rosa has made the tea and has set the lamp in the window. But her Daddy does not come, so she sets out to find him. She comes to the street excavation and falls in and is rescued by the watchman, who soothes her and carries her home. They arrive as Tony, crazy at her loss, is fighting desperately with the policemen to get away and hunt for her. The passionate warmth of the reunited Italian and his child convinces the policemen.

THE TURN OF THE TIDE (May 1).—Quarrelsome Jack gets into a brawl with some ruffians in a saloon; he knocks one down and, thinking he has killed him, rushes off to his boarding house, packs his grip and goes to another town. Arriving there he is walking along the dock when he sees a simple fisher girl waiting in the porch of a hut for her father. Old Joe, a fisherman, passes and nods to Jack.

Old Joe is on his boat in the docks and finds his man, Jim, asleep. He is tired of his lazy ways, awakes him and discharges him. Jack overhears the conversation and applies for the job which Joe gives him. Jim is angry and tries to prevent Jack from entering the boat, but Jack knocks him down and leaves him on the sand threatening vengeance.

Jack and Joe return and Joe points out a boarding house where Jack can stay, he engages a room and starts to go upstairs, but is tripped up by a drunken sailor. A fight commences while Jim, who has planned it, looks on.

Jack has fallen in love with Peggy, but she does not approve of his quarrelsome ways, although she likes him. One day he is walking along the cliffs and falls over; he is seriously hurt and is carried to the cottage where Peggy and her father live, where she nurses him back to health, and gradually gets to care for him.

Peggy's father is an invalid and dies suddenly leaving Peggy all alone. Jack, returning from his work, learns of her father's death and is told that Peggy is on the cliff; he goes to find her and, holding out his arms, she goes to him.

THE CUB (April 28).—The cub reporter loved the owner's daughter. He learns by chance of a plot to sell the paper's power by the managing editor to a pair of crooked contractors. The owner refuses to listen to his discovery, but the girl does and believes him. Together they plan to force the owner to take some action. The dinner at the owner's house is spoilt by the girl who compells them to dine in a private room at Musceveys, where the managing editor has an appointment with the contractors. The cub plants a dictograph in the room where the contractors are and puts the receiver in the room where the owner and his party are ushered. Their entire conversation is heard by the owner. The cub is dragged from the fire escape where he has been concealed; a terrible fight ensues; the police are called in and the managing editor and his crooked friends are taken into custody. The cub is rewarded with the managing editor's position and the girl's hand.

PEARL AS A DETECTIVE (May 4).—Chester is engaged to Grace. He had just received a letter at his office from Laura Gaines the sister of a chum of his. The letter was on two sheets asking Chester on the first sheet to help her in a business deal and arranging for an appointment on the second sheet, which bore her signature. Chester knocks this last sheet off his desk. Grace visits him and finds the compromising paper. She goes home. Chester telephones her that important business will keep him away that evening. She waxes suspicious and calls up Finder and Pinchem Detective Agency. They assign Pearl, the girl detective to the case. She trails Chester and reports to Grace that he dines at a hotel with a woman. She then goes to Chester's office and gets a job there as stenographer. The next day Chester gets a letter from Miss Gaines, asking him to meet her again. Pearl gets the letter and immediately takes it to Grace. Grace, when Chester calls that evening is very cold to him and he is at a loss to understand. Pearl believing her mission accomplished, wants to resign from her job, but Chester won't let her. Grace sorry for the way she treated Chester, decides to call at his office. However, Pearl and Chester have grown very fond of each other and when Grace calls, they are in each others arms. Grace is angry and gives Chester back his ring. He gives it to Pearl. Grace goes around to the detective office to complain about Pearl, and Preal, who is there, resigning submits her bill, which is $2. Chester meanwhile has discovered Pearl's real identity by finding her notebook, but when she confesses his heart goes out to her and all is well.

O! WHISKERS (May 4).—Mr. Baldwin was the possessor of an unusual pair of side-whiskers. He was very proud of them. He calls on Miss Hegg and presents her with his photo. She is very fond of him. His next call is on Miss Lucy Oining, a friend of Miss Heggs and he also gives her a photo of himself and his glowing face adornments. He cannot make up his mind which old young lady he likes better, on general principles he strolls into a barber shop to get spruced up. The barber, a Frenchman, misunderstands Baldwin's order, but Baldwin, who has fallen asleep is not aware of the fact until he is awakened by a frightful pulling on his face, and then he sees that the unknowing barber had cut off one of his whiskers. There is nothing left for him, but to have the other one cut also. He rows with the barber and gets kicked out. He goes on the street and meets Miss Hegg. He accosts her, but she runs away from him, not knowing him. He then runs across Miss Pining and attempts to speak to her, but she does the same as Miss Hegg. The two ladies meet a policeman and tell him of the strange man. Just then Baldwin comes up and they point him out to the cop and he chases him through the streets. The ladies go to Miss Hegg's house. Baldwin had sought refuge in her garden and climbed through the window. The ladies see him and beat him up with their fists and sofa pillows until Baldwin is all in. He at last gets them to understand and he exits vowing never to see them again, at the same time bemoaning the loss of his beautiful whiskers.

NESTOR.

WHEN FATHER WAS KIDNAPPED (April 28).—Jack, a young artist residing in the west, paints a portrait of Nell, a ranchman's daughter. He falls in love with her, and she with him. The irascible old father has somebody else in view than a beggarly artist. There is a neighboring rancher, Porter, who has ranched wisely and well and his income is far more handsome than his features. The father sees the young couple in an artistic lover's embrace and promptly breaks up the pretty picture. Nell is marched home to be lectured and Jack goes back to his mother and sister. Sister Dolly persuades Jack to dress in her clothes and fool the father. Jack demurs, then accedes.

Mr. Porter chokes himself into a hard boiled shirt and collar and nearly twists his neck off getting his tie straight. On the way he sees a dainty dame tripping along. He raises his hat and the disguised Jack in Dolly's clothes and some of the false curls leads him on. Porter gets familiar and gets a slap on the cheek which makes him curse the athletic training of the up-to-date girl.

Mr. Porter calls upon father, who, seeing him coming, runs in and acquaints Nell of the joyful intelligence. Porter dismounts and as he and father talk, the dainty dame trips by, bows and smiles and enters the house.

Jack runs in to Nell and pulls off his bonnet and curls in order to complete the surprise. They hear father and Porter coming and Jack hastily dons the bonnet again, omits the curls. Porter sees them, sizes Jack up and puts the curls in his pocket. He says nothing to Dad. Jack leaves and on the way home meets Pedro, a half-breed. Happy thought! He will write a note and send it by Pedro. He does so, telling Nell to meet him at a fixed place at a certain hour and gives Pedro a dollar to take it to Nell.

Porter meets Pedro outside and gives him a dollar to see the note. Nell receives it and gives Pedro a dollar for the good news. She writes a note back saying she will be there. Again the miscreant Porter parts with regrets, from another dollar and reads Nell's reply. Jack gets it and in joyful ecstacy gives Pedro a dollar. Pedro departs to spend the five.

Porter makes arrangements with some cowboys to kidnap Nell at the meeting place. Father catches Nell in the act of departing and locks her in her room. He dons some of Nell's clothes to give Jack a surprise.

Jack sees the cowboys and side-steps them, and father is kidnapped, while Jack runs to Nell's home, gets her out and, going to a parson, marries her. Father is taken to Porter. Mutual surprise, when the disguise is removed. They rush home—the birds have flown—they run to the parson's, who blandly tells father he had the pleasure of marrying his daughter to a real nice young man. Father has only one thing to do and he does it gracefully. Porter exchanges his hard boiled shirt for a comfortable woolen one.

THE GREATER LOVE (April 30).—A band of outlaws are worrying the ranchmen and farmers. The sheriff and a posse are sent out to round them up. One of the band secures a position with Ranchman Worth in order to watch the comings and goings of the young heiress, with an eye to detaining her and forcing a big ransom. He is able to ride off and tell the outlaws that Mabel is going out riding in a certain direction with Farnum and King, two cowboys who are much devoted to her.

The three riders pass the outlaws, who fail to ambush them as planned. Farnum, King and Mabel manage to reach a deserted shack and bar themselves in. They hold the outlaws at bay, hoping that relief will come. They run out of ammunition and one of them must get relief. They persuade Mable to go into an inner room, when they take a pack of cards and decide that the highest poker hand dealt shall determine which of them shall make the hazardous attempt. Farnum draws a high hand. He knows that Mabel has leanings toward King. He throws his hand away, declaring that King has him beaten, shakes hands with his pal and kisses Mabel's hand and, despite her protests, he sets out upon his hazardous errand. He fails to get far, for the outlaws concentrate their fire on him and he falls. The sheriff and posse ride up, having tracked the outlaws, who are captured. King and Mabel look up their friend and sorrow over his body who sacrificed himself for "The Greater Love."

THE INGRATE (May 2).—Bill and Bess are engaged, but as Bill drinks heavily, the girl's brother, John, and his wife, together with Bess' father disapprove of the engagement John is going to the "gold country" to further work his claim and Bill asks to go. John is persuaded by his wife to agree, after she learns that Bill has promised to stop drinking. They go—months pass and nothing is heard of them. Finally they start back; but their pack mule gets away as they are passing through the desert. John goes after him and while he is gone, Bill leave the camp with the gold, he is unable to find the canteen of water—the only one left—as John had carefully hidden it. John returns, finds the gold and Bill gone, and starts to search for him. After a couple of days, the mule returns home and the father obtains a horse from a friend and starts out in search of the boys. He finds John, water gone, but still alive, they revive him and then hasten on for Bill, but death has claimed him and in his hand is a note which reads: "May God forgive me for what I have done." On the following page is written: "Tell Bess my last thoughts were of her. Bill." Taking the gold, they start back, but instead of showing Bess the entire note, he merely hands her the second page.

THE RETURN OF CRIME (2 parts—April 30).—Martha Elliot, a young music student, meets and falls in love with Lucien Grey, who is just entering upon a promising career as a physician. After a brief interval of happiness, Grey deserts the girl. Martha soon afterwards finds herself forced to provide a living for two. She is deeply embittered against the perfidious father, and this bitterness she communicates to her son. The boy reaches manhood, and proceeds to carve out for himself a career in the law. Martha, by this time a middle-aged and chronic invalid, lives only for her brilliant and successful son. Her joy in him is gloriously crowned when he is elected to the office of District Attorney.

The sensation of many weeks comes to a finish one morning when the newspapers print in full-page headlines the story of the arrest, on a criminal charge of the eminent and wealthy surgeon, Lucien Grey. Elliot, who knows the man to be his delinquent parent, inflamed as he is with hatred against the man whom he holds responsible for his mother's years of disgrace, hardship and want, and for the resulting illness which has blighted her later life, resolves to prosecute the case in person. His passionate hatred seems to inspire him, so that he carries out his intention with such relentless skill and astuteness, that although the evidence is flimsy, Grey is soon lodged in the death cell awaiting execution.

The harrowing days during which the case is in progress so tell upon Martha Elliot's condition that her malady is seriously aggravated. At last she succumbs to the strain. A consultation of experts declare that the woman's one chance for life lies in a piece of surgery which none of them has the skill to attempt. Lucien Grey, who is awaiting the law's extreme penalty in the state prison, is the only man who can perform it.

When Elliot discovers the fact, he goes secretly to the prison and, relying on his close resemblance to his father to shield them from detection, he releases the latter and sends him to the dying woman's bedside. He himself takes the prisoner's place in the cell. Grey arrives in time to save Martha Elliot's life. But just as he is in the middle of his delicate task the lights go out. There is no moment to be lost. The hour is approaching when the warden will open the cell door and lead the occupant forth to death. Grey gropes his way to the switchboard in the hallway, but can do nothing. In despair, he prays. Instantly his hands find out the right switch in the darkness. He finishes his work and rushes back to the prison. But Elliot's fiancee, Alice Lee, fearing the truth, namely, that the young lawyer's successful prosecution was actuated by a sense of legal justice than by personal animosity, has already secured a reprieve for the prisoner from the Governor. Grey finds his cell empty and himself a free man.

FRONTIER.

THE WORD OF JOSE (May 1).—Blessing steals a horse and doctors the brand. Jose, who is a friend of the sheriff, Smiling Chrley Buck, is suspicious of the brand on the horse, but as Ynez, his sweetheart, insists upon it he buys him for her. Jose and Ynez visit town, Ynez riding in on the horse. Burns, the brand inspector, sees them and finding the horse to answer a description posted some time before, takes the whole party in charge. They go to the sheriff's office, and there Jose succeeds in having Buck, as a favor to him, free Ynez, Jose himself telling the story of his having bought the horse from Blessing.

Several loungers who saw Burns arrest Jose and Ynez rush into the hotel and declare that Buck has caught the horse thief for whom the reward was offered. This causes a large amount of excitement, and Blessing entering in time to observe it, decides to turn it to his own advantage in fastening the guilt upon the innocent Jose. He therefore incites the mob to riot, and when they are ripe for it, starts a lynching bee with Jose as the intended victim. Warned by Burns, Buck has prepared for this, sending Jose away. Jose has pledged his word to return when sent for and the sheriff tells him he will send word to Ynez when to come.

The mob comes to the sheriff's office, and after a while finds that Jose is gone. Buck and Burns, however, delay them until Jose has a good start. Jose rides to Ynez's home and there she conceals him on the roof to such good intent that the pursuing mobsmen do not find him. They return to town disgusted.

Buck sends for Jose. Ynez gets the letter and is torn by her love of Jose and her desire to have him prove the man he seems. Love wins, and she begs him to fly with her. Mindful of his word, Jose hesitates. Ynez is stung by his hesitation and tells him to keep his word to Buck then, since he has failed in his vows to her. Jose, despondent, starts for town and trail.

Ynez decides to follow Jose and seek forgiveness. Jose though has a long lead, and she does not catch him. Blessing attempts to kill Buck with whom he has had trouble and Jose arrives just in time to prevent it. An exciting chase follows, ending as it should, in the clearing of Jose from the charge of theft and the fastening of the guilt upon Blessing, its rightful owner, who however, has been killed.

Jose and Ynez are united and she loves him more than ever because he had held his word so highly.

AN EASTERN CYCLONE AT BLUFF RANCH (May 3).—Miss Bluff, boss of the ranch owned by herself and her brother, undergoes a series of interesting and humorous adventures at the ranch in which her younger brother gets mixed through his efforts to pacify the cowboys for her abuse of them. Miss Bluff decides that the ranch offers far too small a career for her brother, however, and sends him to the city to school. The welfare of this brother is her only care.

Bluff, on his arrival from the country, speedily assimilates city ways, but fails to lose his country chivalry. When he sees a drunken man attempt to force attentions upon a charming young lady he interferes. The drunken man is vanquished with ease, due to Bluff's magnificent physique and he advises the young lady to learn boxing that she may protect herself in the future from insulting persons. An introduction to the lady's parents follows the encounter and Bluff becomes a regular caller at her home. Meanwhile Miss Bluff consoles herself with Perona.

The young lady's father gets her a boxing instructor. She proves an apt pupil, for after a few lessons she defeats her instructor. Brimming with roguishness, she assaults her father with a glove, and he engages her in a match. She quickly puts him to scorn. Before she has time to remove her gloves Bluff calls on her. A love scene and the plighting of their troth follow, Bluff experiencing some difficulty in fitting the ring over the gloves.

Bluff writes his sister that he is bringing back a present which will delight her beyond measure. She dances wildly at the news, but when he brings home a wife she is disgusted and angry to such an extent that she abuses her partner in the peruna episodes, the negro wench. Bluff and his bride try expedients to escape from her continual surveillance, but Miss Bluff is always on hand and working when there are any honeymoon activities in progress.

Bluff must be gone all day on business one day soon after they have arrived, and his wife weeps at the mere thought of being left alone with his sister. This is justified in a short time by the action of Miss Bluff in locking the new Mrs. Bluff into a dark closet. Miss Bluff then inaugurates a round of peruna oblations and invites guests for a dance that evening. Mrs. Bluff tries to get out of the closet for a long time, but when the cowboys and girls arrive and are ready to dance, she can stand it no longer. By a great effort she breaks down the door of the closet and rushes forth just in time to see her husband arrive.

Miss Bluff is dancing at a great rate to the enjoyment of the guests when Mrs. Bluff enters and begins a repetition of her fistic triumph over her boxing instructor. Her husband interferes and finally succeeds in restraining her; but not before Miss Bluff has been whipped so thoroughly that life will hereafter be bearable for Mr. and Mrs. Bluff, at Bluff ranch and the cyclone having tamed the western whirlwind.

OIL ON TROUBLED WATERS (2 parts, April 28).—PART ONE. Old Miser Benton called upon his widowed sister and her charming daughter, Bernice. When he saw the daughter in the arms of Ralph Conway, geologist, he ordered him from the place and severely lectured his aged sister. A lawyer called and made over to him a legacy to be equally divided between him and his poor sister, but the miser carefully hid the true value of the property. Bernice's mother finally died and on the day of her death Bernice became the bride of Ralph. Together they started off to the land given them by the penurious uncle, who chuckled as he thought of the barren patch of beach he had given her. Imagine their disgust and despair when a slovenly hotel-keeper pointed out the barren tract. Bernice fled, crying, while Ralph sunk to the ground thoroughly discouraged. After a time he noticed the smell of oil, took a sip of the water at his feet, straightened up with a new look in his face—for the scraggly, rocky coast had oil!

PART TWO. Several months passed—Summerland became a boom town and Ralph and Bernice were the richest of the rich. Meanwhile old Benton had trouble with the railroad. To fight them he mortgaged every piece of property he had and soon the news came that he was bankrupt. Aged, disheartened, without a friend in the world, Benton started on foot for Summerland. In the interim, Ralph had worked industriously and one day, with Bernice, walked over his oil field. He pointed out to her that this was the only region in the world where oil was mined from the ocean's bed; he showed her the long string of oil wells, in the water, their frames rising ghost-like in the sinking sun; how a 25 horsepower engine operated the forest of wells by means of an eccentric cam; how each barrel of oil contained 40% asphalt; how the railroad charged exorbitant rates for shipment, and how the oil well owners built a long pier into the ocean to transport the crude oil by boat. When a child came their happiness was complete. Then, one day an aged, care-worn figure slid, face forward into the grass on his property. He and Bernice ran to the prostrate figure and turned up the face of Benton. And then good was returned for evil and Benton found a home with the couple he had tried to wrong.

THE TATTOOED ARM (May 1).—Ben Hart, the youthful mining expert, arrived at Red Rock and promptly sought out pretty Mabel Whitaker and her mother, who had inherited a map purporting to lead to a gold deposit. Ben made an appointment to look at the deposit and did so—quite unaware that Jim Halliday, with two bad pals, kept close watch of his every movement. They met him on the road going back and remarked that it was a bad town for experts, to which sally Ben merely smiled.

That night Mabel was awakened by a scratching noise. Rising from bed she seized a butcher knife and hurried into the other room. A hand was slowly appearing through a freshly made opening under the cabin. Only the ghastly arm could be seen, but in that fleeting glance Mabel saw n American flag plainly tatooed on the outstretched arm. Without an instant's hesitation, she plunged the knife through the arm—there was a howl of pain, hurried footsteps and all was silent again. Next morning when Ben called, he was told of the nocturnal visit. He quietly mounted his horse and rode off in the direction of the claim. In the bushes he saw Halliday standing, with back toward him, an outstretched bare arm resting on a convenient tree-trunk. Ben drew his gun, Halliday faced quickly about and a few minutes later was safely lodged in the local jail. Then Ben rode back to the Whitaker cabin and his thoughts turned toward softer things.

THE ROAD TO RUIN (May 3).—The road to ruin was dismal and dreary and strewn with failures. On a great boulder, head sunk in hands, sat Jim Hathaway, when the bent figure of John Radway entered. They fell to talking and Jim soon learned that a faithless woman had pointed the way to the road to ruin for Radway. He went in search of her when Radway told him that his wife had deserted him for another. Jim saw her in the garden—saw her kiss her affinity and after he had gone, turn to the garden gate to admit a younger man.

Jim, knife in hand, sped down the path, touched the elder man upon the shoulder and led him back to where the younger man and the woman were wrapped in each others' arms. With a gasp of horror, his companion broke away and confronted her. She merely laughed—and, beat and broken, like the man he had destroyed before him, he turned away toward the road to ruin. Then Jim sought out that younger man and warned him and he, wiser than most of his kind, bade farewell forever to the faithless woman. Alone, she turned about and started with hesitating steps toward the road to ruin—and all the wrecks that strewed that dreary way smiled as she entered.

THANHOUSER.

THE CHILDREN'S CONSPIRACY (April 20).—All the children at the little village school loved their teacher, but this fact did not insure her holding her job. The most influential man on the school board was the chairman, and he found himself saddled with a middle-aged relative whom he heartily disliked. Under the circumstances he believed he was justified in shifting the burden to the shoulders of the dear public, so the lovable little teacher was turned adrift while the unpleasant old maid was given her place.

The children didn't like that: the school board did not care what the pupils thought. The son of the village banker and his little sister failing to accomplish anything by arguments, determined to try strategy. There were two persons in that village they thoroughly detested, one the new teacher and the other an old miser who continually growled at them. Consequently they determined to make both of these individuals thoroughly unhappy, and believed they could best accomplish it by matrimony.

The miser was walking along the street one day when he noticed a bankbook lying on the pavement. He picked it up and discovered that it certified to the fact that the new teacher was worth $15,000. He would have committed murder for half that amount, so he lost no time in courting the pedagogue, who accepted his attentions gratefully, but insisted on an elopement because "they are so romantic." After the marriage the bridegroom suggested that his better-half transfer her money to him, then he found to his consternation that he had been tricked and she wasn't worth a red cent.

He never knew that two children had killed two birds with one stone. The fact of the matter was that the banker's son secured a blank passbook, filled it up in the way he wanted it to read and left it where he knew the miser would find it. By doing so he made all the children in the village happy, for the teacher they loved came back to them, and remained as long as she desired to.

AN AMERICAN IN THE MAKING (April 22).—This story deals with a young Hungarian emigrant, whose brother in America writes to him, telling of the many wonders of the new world. The young man finally comes to America, and secures employment as an unskilled laborer at the Gary works of the United States Steel Corporation. He works hard, attends night school, gradually learns the language and ways of the country, becomes a skilled laborer and marries. His happiness as the prosperous head of a family is shown, and also the interest which the great corporation takes of its employees and their willingness to advance those who are ambitious and competent.

The many safety appliances which have been installed at great expense to prevent laborers from being injured are shown, and the new laborer is seen as he is instructed in his duties.

FOR ANOTHER'S SIN (April 25).—A young bank clerk lived beyond his means, associated with vicious companions and finally attempted to pay his debts by borrowing the funds intrusted to his care. His fate was the usual one, and ten years later when he emerged from prison, a physical wreck, he realized that his follies were not worth the price he paid. He was practically penniless and old friends shunned him. After many struggles he secured a subordinate position in the bank where he formerly had been employed, and for a time worked diligently, unheeding the snubs and sneers of the other clerks, who were either honest or had not been found out.

Among the employees was a young teller, the only person in the bank who was decently civil to the ex-convict. The teller, sad to relate, was in rough waters himself. He dearly loved his wife, and longed for the day when she would have silks, diamonds and a retinue of servants. Hoping to realize his dream, he thought of speculation, and like the other man, "borrowed" the money over which he was guardian.

That very day his crime found him out, for the bank examiner paid an unexpected visit. The teller was called in, questioned, and was on the verge of making a confession when the ex-convict entered the room and said he was the guilty man. The only one who could not understand was the teller, for he had the money in his own pocket at the time. A second later the ex-convict slipped a note into the teller's hand. In it he explained that a prison term would make the teller "a friendless wreck like myself." The ex-convict knew his days were numbered, and was willing to sacrifice himself to save another from becoming an outcast. The teller accepted the sacrifice, for he had a wife dependent upon him. The other man was lonely and friendless, but the good deed he did lived after him, for the teller never forgot that the liberty he enjoyed was won by his pledge to be an honest, upright man for the rest of his days.

RELIANCE.

THE SHE WOLF (April 19).—Jules, a trapper, is in love with Toinette, wife of Pierre. Pierre goes to the trading post, leaving Toinette and her little girl, Marie, alone. Jules tries to force an entrance into the cabin, but Toinette bolts the door. Later, thinking him gone, she sends Marie outdoors to gather chips. This is his chance—for, he argues, "Take the cub and the she wolf will follow." He picks up the little one and races through the woods with her. Toinette, gun in hand, follows. But she dares not shoot, as he uses the child as a shield, protecting himself with her body. Then suddenly Jules steps into a bear trap and is held captive. The mother catches the child to her heart and rushes home.

Pierre passes on his way from town and seeing Jules, he frees him. Toinette puts her baby to bed. Taking her gun, Toinette goes out to shoot the man who is caught in the bear trap. To her surprise she finds her husband with Jules. She explains the terrible ordeal of the afternoon and in awful fury, Pierre turns upon the other man ready to kill. Then it is that her baby's prayer softens the mother's heart. She stays her husband's hand. They return home, leaving Jules' fate in the hands of Providence.

THE HOODOO PEARLS (April 23).—John Mason and Fred Ellis are in love with their employer's daughter. She prefers Mason. On the day before Mason leaves for his vacation, a string of pearls is delivered to their employer, Dallas, with the request that he keep these so-called "hoodoo pearls" in his safe. By some accident the pearls are dropped into the big ledger and repose there snugly while Dallas places the empty box in the safe. When Dallas leaves the office, Mason enters to finish his preparations for going away on the morrow. Next day, Dallas finds the empty box. Mason was the last man in the office and suspicion points to him. Ellis, glancing through the ledger, finds the pearls. Resolving to disgrace his rival, he takes them home. His sister, unknown to him, wears them to a ball and loses them. Ellis is almost crazed, but the necklace is finally discovered.

Early the next morning, he places the "hoodoo pearls" where he found them in the ledger and calls Dallas' attention to them. The employer remembers then that it was all due to his own carelessness. Mason is released and as Ellis sees him take the girl he loves into his arms.

EXCELSIOR.

THE MAN FROM THE CITY (April 21.)—Virginia Lewis receives word from her relations in the city that her grandfather has left his entire estate to her, providing she claims it within a certain date. She prepares to go to town at once and, in a letter to her aunt, states that she should have her cousin meet her at the depot, wearing a white carnation.

Ralph, her grandfather's disinherited ward, hears of this and sets about to find some way in which he can hold her until it will be too late to claim the estate which will then revert to him. The cousin's motorcar, on the way to the depot, suffers a breakdown and in consequence, is much delayed. Ralph arrives first wearing the white flower and the girl willingly goes with him. Once in his home she realizes the trap. She tries to escape, but Ralph and his wife prevent this. One day she writes a note and throws it out of the window. It is found by John Davis, a city fellow, who knew Virginia in her country home. He rushes for assistance, but Ralph has seen him and takes Virginia away in a motorcar. John's car is soon flying after them and there is an exciting chase through the town. The girl is finally rescued and enabled to claim her estate in time, while Ralph and his wife are arrested. And the man from the city resumes his romance with the girl from the country.

MAJESTIC.

THE MOTE AND THE BEAM (April 20).—A sanctimonious deacon punishes his young son for going swimming and not telling the truth about it. Taking the boy into his room he walks down to the village. A woman recently widowed, goes to collect her insurance money. On the way home she stops to do some shopping and drops her purse.

The deacon, who has come to town to beg for an extension on his mortgage, is refused and is returning home in a very dejected frame of mind. He sees the purse at his feet. Knowing to whom it belongs, he cannot withstand the temptation. He takes the money and throws the empty purse away. This is found by a young chap, who picks it up to take to his wife. The widow informs the sheriff, who finds the purse in the young chap's possession. He knows nothing of the money and is arrested on suspicion. When the deacon arrives home, he finds his boy dying of pneumonia. He thinks this is a judgment upon him for his hypocrisy and deceit. He takes the money and rushes with it to the widow, confessing the temptation.

NOT FOR MINE (April 22).—Betty is engaged to Bob and everything was running smoothly until Betty went to spend a couple of days with her married cousin. Elsa had three children. Betty, for so long used to a quiet life, found it very hard to stand their noise and pranks. Finally, unable to hear it any longer, Betty catches the last car for town. In the car she discovers that Elsa's youngest child, who had been playing with her urse, abstracted all the coin. She hasn't even enough to pay her fare. The good-looking young chap who comes to her assistance proves a masher, and in this incident adds to her discomfort.

Arriving home, her first act is to call Billy up to notify him that marriage is not a state of bliss and she has decided not to enter it!

Billy, utterly disheartened, resolves to commit suicide. He has a rope about his neck, a bottle of poison in one hand and a revolver in the other, when the 'phone rings. It is Betty who has called up to say that she has changed her mind again. With a whoop of joy, Billy fires the gun and pitches the bottle through the window!

The young fellow is released and exonerated and the widow, out of pity, prevails upon the hard-hearted rich man to give the deacon the time he needs on his mortgage. It is not long before the boy is on the road to recovery, to his father's great joy.

MUTUAL EDUCATIONAL.

THE OLD INVALID (May 1).—Mr. Ducorimer, a professor of the violin, is married to an extremely jealous woman. He flirts with Miss Lucette, one of his pupils, and Mrs. Ducormier, thinking that the lessons are too numerous, suspects her husband.

One day she finds a letter from Lucette that Mr. Ducormier had forgotten, in the violin case. Naturally, she doubts him no more.

Lucette, believing that Mrs. Ducorimer is suspicious, disguises her servant as her father, and as an old invalid.

Mrs. Ducormier calls on Lucette and is assured that she is mistaken, but the servant, thinking that he is not paid well enough for his services, writes an anonymous letter, and even calls on her and explains everything to her.

Without losing any time, Mrs. Ducormier goes to Lucette and finds her husband, who in the absence of the servant, and hearing that his wife is here waiting to be admitted, disguises himself as the old invalid. But all in vain, he is recognized. Luckily Mrs. Ducorimer is fond of jewelry and consents to forgive and forget everything when her husband presents her with a beautiful bit of jewelry. They return home and Mr. Ducorimer promises to be good for ever more.

TACHKENT, ASIATIC RUSSIA (May 1).—Tachkent has been the capital of Turkestan since 1867. The city is comprised of two sections, the old and the new. The new Russian town, with its beautiful gardens, presents the appearance of an immense park. The ancient part of the city is almost entirely surrounded by a great, crumbling wall. Mutton, wool and camel's hair are among the many articles produced here.

WHAT EXHIBITORS SAY

The pictures are proving one of the strongest box office attractions ever at this theatre.—Samuel Tauber, Colonial Theatre, New York City.

I congratulate you on the success of the Kinetophone. Never have I witnessed more enthusiastic or well satisfied audiences.—H. A. Bailey, Bronx Theatre, New York City.

This is our third week of the Kinetophone. They always hold the closest attention of the audience and close to big applause.—Benedict Blatt, Bushwick Theatre, Brooklyn.

The Kinetophone has caused more favorable comment at this theatre than any feature ever before presented here.—William Mausad, Orpheum Theatre, Brooklyn.

After six weeks the interest is still maintained and the picture subjects are getting better each week. Their value as a drawing card has never been exceeded by any headline vaudeville act.—Harry M. Jordan, Keith's Theatre, Philadelphia.

Expectations more than realized in the Kinetophone. They are the talk of the town and unequalled as a drawing card.—G. E. Raymond, Orpheum Theatre, Minneapolis.

The Kinetophone is a big success. Synchronism, the vital thing, has been perfect from the first day.—Jules Bistes, Orpheum Theatre, New Orleans.

During the week of February 24th all records of attendance and receipts were broken. Over twenty-four thousand people saw the pictures—they are still a sensation.—James A. Higler, Majestic Theatre, Milwaukee.

The Kinetophone has proven a greater success than was anticipated. We are having record-breaking audiences for this time of year.—George Ebey, Orpheum Theatre, Oakland.

The Kinetophone is a huge success and unquestionably a new era in motion pictures.—C. E. Willard, Orpheum Theatre, Sioux City.

In the five weeks we have been showing the Kinetophone the working of the machine has been perfect. Motion and sound are made to synchronize and a perfection of illusion is attained.—H. D. Buckley, Columbia Theatre, St. Louis.

WHAT THE PAPERS SAY

At the Orpheum Theatre yesterday we heard a moving picture make a speech! Sounds unbelievable, but with Thomas A. Edison nothing seems impossible. It was the first real test in Los Angeles; was a great success.—Evening Herald, Los Angeles, Cal.

The Kinetophone is the greatest novelty on the bill at Keith's and will undoubtedly prove to be the sensation of the year.—Providence (R. I.) Journal.

The great crowd was amazed as they saw the picture and heard the voices with almost as much clearness as if the players were actually on the screen.—New York Press.

I confess I was skeptical regarding the success of the Kinetophone. I saw its perfect working. It was beautiful; it was magnificent and I do not think any critic can say contrariwise.—Motion Picture News.

When the display closed it was so real, so vivid and so stirring that the audience rose to its feet. It was a spontaneous tribute to the actuality of an event that has genuine scientific importance.—Munsey's Magazine for March.

Overshadowing almost every other feature on the bill, the Kinetophone takes precedence from the viewpoint of curiosity and rises to the importance of a star act.—New York Dramatic Mirror.

The value of the Kinetophone is too obvious to be emphasized or discussed. What would we not give for such a record of Lincoln's Gettysburg address?—The Outlook.

The Edison Kinetophone proved a startling success. Through it the notes of the singer as well as her personality may be sent to every hamlet in the world; the prophecies of the statesman may go thundering down the ages and the orator may now speak to an audience of millions.—The News Scimitar, Memphis, Tenn.

Do not be confused by the numerous stock-selling Talking-Picture schemes or by resurrections of past failures, but remember that THE EDISON KINETOPHONE is the first and only Talking-Picture that has been so widely distributed and proven a practical and assured success.

HIS CHUM, THE BARON (April 28).—Smith's chum is a very poor Baron. Smith and the Baron are invited to a ball, and the Baron, not having evening clothes of his own, "borroys" Smith's dress suit. He is having the time of his life when Smith arrives, thoroughly angry, and taking the Baron in a room takes the clothes away from him. The Baron is in a terrible predicament, dodging around from room to room, as people intrude upon his hiding places. He tries to hide his face with a handkerchief, and a lady catches a glimpse of him as he dives under a bed. She screams in terror, thinking he is a mad man, and then the poor Baron is chased all over the house. Some one telephones for the police and they assist in the capture and lead him away.

THAT RAG TIME BAND (May 1).—The members of the rag-time band are rivals for the affections of Mabel, and lively altercations take place at rehearsal. They appear at an amateur night at the theater, and Krause, the leader, is bombarded with vegetables. He finally gets the hook, and in revenge he reappears upon the stage with a hose which he turns upon the audience. The results are indescribable.

SOLAX.

HIS WIFE'S AFFINITY (April 23).—A young husband deceives his wife as to his occupation and has taken up the stage. On his first night in the role of the hero, his divine lovemaking to the heroine affect the hearts of his wife and her lady friends, who have attended the performance unknown to him. He receives an invitation to tea after the performance, recognizes his wife's handwriting, but stifles jealousy, and accepts the invitation, and is the "pet" of a tea party at his own home with his wife and friends.

The ladies are called suddenly away, leaving him alone with his wife, who imagines her "husband" is coming and hides the "hero" in a closet and leaves the room. Husband removes "hero" disguise, gets out of the house and comes in the front door as the husband and accuses his wife of a lover in the house, and after a pretended search accuses wife of the lover being in the closet. To the terror of his wife, the husband fires a revolver at the closet, causing her to faint. She comes to, thinking the "hero" is dead, and shrinks from her husband, who finally unfolds the trick and they make up; the wife convinced that she does not have to go to the theater to find a "hero."

A SEVERE TEST (April 25).—Daisy Jones had been married just a year when her husband failed to kiss her one morning, and she decided that he did not love her any more. She wrote a note to her friend, Ella, telling her that she was going to leave her husband a note telling him that she had jumped in the lake. She would leave some of her clothes on the pier to make it look more plausible, and she and Ella would hide themselves by and see how he took it.

She got the notes in the wrong envelopes. Ella's went to her husband and vice versa. Ella was horrified and rushed to the husband's office, where she learned the truth. The husband and Ella carry out the plan and he decides to teach her a lesson.

Daisy took a suit-case with some clothes in it to the pier. Ella met her. They placed the clothes on the pier. The husband came down, looked at the clothes, acted horrified for a moment, then kicked the clothes, stuck his thumb into his vest and walked away whistling a tune. Daisy saw him and cried bitterly; then became indignant. She went home with Ella.

Jones decided to carry the joke further. He went to his printer friend and had him make out a wedding invitation announcing the coming marriage of Frank Jones to Isabelle Smith, daughter of Mr. & Mrs. Thomas C. Smith.

By a mistake in the composing room it got into the paper. Jones was frantic. So was Mrs. Jones. Jones looked in the directory to see if anyone by the name lived in the city. Sure enough, there it was, Smith, Thomas C., Mrs. Smith, and Isabelle. Jones rushed to Smith's to apologize. Daisy rushed to Smith's to punish Isabelle.

Isabelle happened to be Smith's cook, and she was a big negress. She greeted Mrs. Smith with a rolling pin, and when Mrs. Jones saw her she sank into a chair. Jones, in the meantime, was on his knees begging Mr. and Mrs. Smith to forgive him. They were elderly people and a little deaf, but they understand that Jones wanted to see Isabelle. They showed him to her room. The negress turned on Jones. Daisy aroused and protected him—then turned on Jones to give him a good round scolding, when he pulled the note meant for Ella from his pocket and his wife wept and pleaded for forgiveness. They made up and his wife learned that Frank still loved her.

THE SILVER CROSS (April 30).—John Smith leaves the little country town in which he was born and comes to New York to earn enough money to keep his old parents from becoming dependent upon the charity of neighbors. Before leaving home, his old mother gives him a silver cross to wear as a keep-sake.

Ten years have passed since John Smith left. He has been successful and has forgotten his aged parents. He is host at a banquet given to his friends at his own palatial home. As his guests depart, the orchestra plays "Home, Sweet Home." The strains of this familiar melody touch his conscience. He decides to return unannounced to the old homestead. He comes to the cottage. His old mother is blind, and his father does not recognize him. When the son sees that even his own parents do not recognize him, he decides not to reveal his identity until the morning. He tells the old couple that he is a traveler in search of a night's lodging. Congratulating themselves that they have an opportunity of making a few cents, they bid him enter. He eats the scanty supper prepared for him and thinking that perhaps the old couple might be in immediate need of money, he pays for the supper in advance, from his well-filled purse. The old man, watching him narrowly, is very much impressed with the stranger's display of wealth. He thinks over his own poverty-stricken condition, and decides to steal the stranger's money. When the stranger is not looking, the old man dopes the stranger's coffee with a sleeping powder. The "stranger" then retires. The old man enters the room, candle in one hand, the hunting knife in the other to kill the sleeping traveler. At this moment he is interrupted by the old mother, who intuitively feels something wrong and tries to shield the stranger. Her hand touches the stranger's bosom and the silver cross.

A HOUSE DIVIDED (May 2).—Gerald Hutton goes to his office, where a salesman spills cologne on his coat. Diana helps Maggie clean house. The milkman forgets his gloves. Rough gloves and delicate perfume—a combination begetting trouble. It arrives. Gerald and Diana agree to live "separately together." There is no divorce, but Diana and Gerald will never speak to each other again. If Gerald wants his clean pajamas, he uses Maggie for a telephone. If Diana expects company, she writes Gerald a note.

Gerald finds office work a curse without somebody to work for. A message arrives from Diana. They have forgotten the wedding anniversary and mother and other guests are coming. And it is Maggie's day out! Gerald closes the office and hurries home. Diana's mother arrives. In five minutes she has heard both sides of the story. Mother decides to remain impartial. Other guests arrive, and Gerald and Diana have a hard time keeping the scandal to themselves and mother and Obediah, the lawyer. Suddenly, Diana hears a noise in the cellar. Burglars! Without alarming the guests she hands Gerald a note informing him of the catastrophe, and Gerald hurries downstairs. Diana gets him the revolver and they wait in the kitchen for the burglar to come upstairs. The door opens. Maggie has forgotten her key, and dropped in through the cellar window. Gerald recollects the quarrel, frowns and enters the dining-room to throw the milkman's gloves out of the window. Diana follows him to beg for a reconciliation. Instead, it is Gerald who "backs down." And they had a real wedding aniversary after all.

KAY-BEE.

A BLACK CONSPIRACY (2 parts, May 2).—The story opens with the agitation just preceeding the secession of the South. John Rivers, a Union sentimentalist, is forbidden by Colonel White, a staunch Southerner, to call upon his daughter, Grace. At the slave market the following day, Old Sam and Mammy, man and wife, are bought by Rivers and Grace, respectively. War is declared and Rivers is appointed to a captaincy in the Union Army. Sam goes to the front with Rivers, and there are some amusing scenes when he is ordered by Rivers to buy some chickens, but gets away with them "in the natural way." General Butler, under whom Rivers is fighting, receives word from McClellan that Colonel White's army is concentrating at Bethel, Va. The opposing armies meet, and the Unions are victorious. Colonel White is badly wounded and Rivers sends for Grace before her father passes away. After the death of her father, Grace leaves for home. When the War is over, Rivers returns to his Southern home and Old Sam and Mammy plan to bring Grace and her erstwhile sweetheart together again. Rivers learns that Grace is having trouble with her creditors and in order to appease their wrath, her property is to be sold. He instructs his lawyer to purchase the property. The old negro parson, who has been taken into the conspiracy by Sam and Mammy, writes this letter to both Rivers and Grace, the one supposed to be written and signed by Rivers, the other by Grace. "My foolish pride has caused us a world of suffering. I have been all to blame. Will be at the old elm at noon. Please meet me and let us talk it over." Each receives the letter, they keep the appointment and in a moment they are in each other's arms. The auction sale takes place and Rivers finds the note purporting to have come from him in a sugar bowl, where Grace has hidden it. He is puzzled for a moment, and then understands how "the black conspiracy" worked out.

BRONCHO

BREAD CAST UPON THE WATERS (2 parts, April 30).—Col. Hamilton takes pathetic leave of his daughter, Edna, and his young son, James, and goes to the front to fight for the Southern cause. The opposing armies are seen in thrilling battles. One day Capt. Blake receives orders to go on a foraging expedition, and arrives at the Hamilton home. The soldiers make short work of the chicken coop, and Don—little Jimmie's pet horse—is taken. The old negro servant puts up a stubborn fight to save his young master's pet, but is knocked down by a soldier. Further punishment is prevented by Capt. Blake, who arrives upon the scene. Jimmie rushes to the captain and begs and pleads for his horse. The tenderhearted young officer is touched by the tears and grief of the boy, and finally gives him back the animal.

Edna sees Capt. Blake about to take a drink at the well and, nerved by her hatred of the North, rushes out and dashes the shell from his hands. Amused by the little spitfire, Blake solemnly bows and says: In the North our men are gentlemen, and the women, ladies," and walks away. Edna, ashamed of her conduct, battles with her emotions for a few moments, and calls the Captain back, offering him a drink with her own fair hands. After his departure, Edna learns of his kindness in saving Jimmie's horse, and the captain did not suspect the impression he had made on her heart.

Some time later the Union Army is in desperate straits, being attacked by a heavy force. The troops fight against tremendous odds, refusing to surrender, and Capt. Blake volunteers to pierce the enemy's lines and deliver a message to the Union general commanding the other wing to come to the rescue by consolidating the forces.

Blake makes a thrilling ride, pursued by Confederate soldiers, who shoot his horse and wound him. Weak and staggering, he finds himself near the Hamilton home and drags himself to the door. Edna and Jimmie do everything in their power to make him comfortable, and he is saved from capture by a clever trick, blacking his face and hands and putting him in the negro quarters. The pursuing soldiers are told by old Mammy that he is her son who has been shot by the man they are searching for.

The booming cannon in the distance greatly distress Blake, who realizes the predicament of his comrades. In desperation, he asks Jimmie to do him a favor and makes him promise on his word of honor not to tell any one. The grateful boy is staggered by the request Jim makes—of riding to the Northern general with the message—and refuses at first, but in splendid dissolving scenes visions of his pet being restored to him are seen—and he agrees.

The boy makes a daring ride, and the Union forces are saved. The Confederates are driven back through the town, and Col. Hamilton, to save himself from capture runs into the negro cabin, where he is astounded to find his daughter and a Northern officer. In an instant his gun is in his hand, but he is stopped by Edna, who explains the situation. The pursuing Northern soldiers arrive at the door and Blake hides Hamilton behind the bed, and informs the soldiers that no one is there. He rejoins his command, and rides away.

After the war is over Blake comes back to the Hamilton home and is joyfully received by Edna.

WATER BABIES—A realistic natural history subject, containing pictures of a number of wild beasts under conditions approaching those in which they live in a wild state.

KEEPING UP WITH HUBBY.—A wife has neglected her husband and her personal appearance in her devotion to her children. The husband has found his pleasures elsewhere. When this state of affairs has nearly reached the breaking point, a friend arrives. She takes the wife out and returns with her so beautiful that the children hardly know their mother. As the husband has invited his typewriter to lunch, his partner takes the now beautiful wife, and across from the table where sit husband and typewriter the wife enjoys herself with the partner.

The girl friend writes her brother, who takes the women to dinner and a masked ball. Husband returns early to dine with his fascinating wife, only to find her gone. Flowers and present arrive from the husband, but the girl friend takes the wife away for a visit. Husband and doctor play a trick on their own account, telegraphing that husband is sick; wife hurries home and nearly catches the tricksters enjoying themselves. All end happily.

LES MISERABLES.

Eclectic Film Co.

LES MISERABLES—Part One—Jean Valjean.—The story begins with Jean Valjean as an humble worker endeavoring to provide for his invalid mother. They live in a squalid home, made more wretched by his inability to provide sufficient food. He goes out in search of work, but is unsuccessful. Finally, in desperation, he steals a loaf of bread regardless of consequences. He hastens home with it, pursued by a crowd, and gives it to his mother. Valjean is arrested for the theft and sentenced to five years at hard labor. He with other convicts, is put in a stone quarry, and there makes his first acquaintance with Javert, a prison guard, who appears prominently throughout the story. The first notice Javert takes of Valjean is on account of his great strength in lifting a stone that no other prisoner can lift. In the prison dormitory word is whispered about that there is a chance for one man to escape, and among themselves the prisoners decide that they will draw lots to determine the one who shall make the break for liberty. The lot falls to Valjean, and with the aid of a small saw, he is soon in the open. The alarm is given and pursuit is begun, but Valjean eludes his pursuers. Javert is greatly vexed at the escape, for he is an automatic creature in doing his duty. He performs his duty like a machine, and his duty comes before everything else with him.

Like a hunted animal, Valjean reaches the town of Digne, in southern France. He begs from door to door, but meets with many rebuffs, until one kind hearted woman directs him to the house of the parish priest, Myriel. The good priest takes him in, feeds him, and provides him with a cot for the night. In the night Valjean yields to temptation. He steals a pair of silver spoons, and departs. On the road he meets two "gendarmes" who take him back to the town, and before the priest. To his surprise Valjean is given a pair of silver candlesticks by the priest who dismisses the police, pretending that Valjean is an old acquaintance. Myriel then gives Valjean a letter to his brother, a manufacturer of glass beads in Montreuil. The action of the priest touches Valjean's heart and he repents bitterly of his wrongful act. He goes to Montreuil and is given a position by the priest's brother and is thenceforth known as "Mr. Madeleine."

PART TWO—Fantine.—After several years, the priest's brother dies and leaves the glass bead factory to Valjean. By this time the latter is a well respected man and has been elected mayor of the town. Fantine, a factory girl, having been absent from her duties for eight days, returns to work. She is nervous about a note she has received from Thenardier, a country innkeeper, demanding payment for the keep of her baby. Fantine is shown into the office of "Mr. Madeline" and discharged on account of her absence. Rather than reveal the secret of her child, she prefers discharge to exposure.

Meanwhile, Javert, the prison guard, has been promoted to the post of Police Inspector of Montreuil. In reporting to the mayor, "Mr. Madeleine," he is struck by that man's resemblance to the prisoner who escaped from him, and makes a mental note of it. Fantine has drifted into poverty, and in order to raise funds for her baby's keep, is obliged to sell her beautiful hair. Shorn of her hair she becomes an object of derision among her associates. This leads to a quarrel among the women of the poor quarter and Fantine's arrest by Javert, the man of duty. The mayor, "Mr. Madeleine," happens to enter the police station after her arrest. He learns from the note taken away from Fantine when she was searched, the reason of her absence from the factory and her subsequent heroic self-denial in submitting to discharge rather than give away the secret of her child. He is deeply moved and now orders her to be released. This action Javert considers an affront to the majesty of the law, personified in him. He becomes all the more determined to unmask the mayor by establishing his identity as Jean Valjean. Fantine confides to "Mr. Madeleine" the story of her misfortune, and he, seeing that she is suffering with a fatal malady, has her placed in the hospital belonging to the bead factory where every possible care is shown her.

An accident, that of an old man pinned beneath a wagon, reveals to Javert the great strength of "Mr. Madeleine," as the mayor lifts the wagon and releases the man. This Javert connects with the feat of the convict who lifted the stone in the prison yard, years ago. It convinces Javert that the mayor is Valjean, and he makes a report to the authorities. Fauchelevent, the man hurt under the wagon, becomes a cripple and is helped to a position as gardener in a convent near Paris by the mayor. Just at this time Javert reads a news account of a criminal caught recently in Paris whom the police believe to be Jean Valjean. After reading this, Javert feels that he has done "Madeleine" a wrong in supposing him to be Valjean. He resigns his position giving "Mr. Madeline" his reasons. A new torment comes into "Mr. Madeleine's" life as he thinks of another man being sent back to prison for his own deed. He pictures an innocent man being condemned, and is severely conscience stricken. Rather than allow an innocent man to suffer, the mayor decides to reveal his idetity and goes before the court to confess, prepared to take the consequences. In proof of his assertion he shows the court the prison brand upon his arm, "T. F." (Travaux Forces), meaning "hard labor."

Valjean, in his few last hours of freedom, hastens to the bedside of the dying Fantine. She begs him to protect her daughter, Cosette, who is still in the care of the Thenardiers. He promises to raise her as his own, and as Fantine dies, he is led away by Javert who does not comprehend the pity of the scene, but sees only his stern duty before him. Valjean easily makes his escape from the police station, where he has been locked up by Javert, awaiting transportation.

PART THREE—Cosette.—The Thenardiers and their small daughter, Eponine, and young son, Gavroche, are seen at their dingy country tavern. Here little Cosette, the daughter of Fantine, is seen performing drudgery and menial tasks. The Thenardiers are treating their own children kindly, but are cruel to Cosette. One day she is sent for water with a heavy pail. On the way she passes a toy store, and longingly admires a doll. On her way back she meets Jean Valjean, who asks her the way to the Thenardiers. Cosette leads him toward their place. On the way she looks longingly at the doll once more, and her action is observed by Valjean. He has learned by her talk that she is Fantine's child, whom he is seeking.

Cosette runs ahead, and Valjean enters the tavern while Cosette is being scolded. He remonstrates with the Thenardiers, and goes out to the toy store and buys the doll for Cosette. Returning, he informs the Thenardiers that he has come to pay the child's board bill, and take her away. They gleefully accept the money and Valjean departs with the little girl. Thenardier, thinking he might have got more, follows him, but Valjean shows him the note that Fantine had written before she died, telling him to take care of the child.

Valjean realizes a sum of money on securities, and decides to live in an obscure house in the poor quarter of Paris with little Cosette, away from the prying police. But the janitress of the house becomes suspicious of her new tenants and calls in the police after peeping and observing Valjean counting money, an unusual thing in that quarter of Paris. Javert by this time has been appointed to the detective force of Paris. He considers this case worthy of his personal inspection and goes to Valjean's lodgings and secrets himself in the garret above Valjean's room. Valjean takes alarm at Javert's boring through the ceiling. He leaves quickly, carrying Cosette, but is followed by Javert and his men. He is cornered in a blind alley, but makes his escape with a clothes line by the thrilling and dramatic feat of scaling an almost perpendicular wall. After a night of suspense he finds himself hiding in the grounds of a convent. Here he meets the old gardener, Fauchelevent, whom he assisted from under the wagon and obtained for him his present position. The old man shows his gratitude by giving them asylum and getting Valjean a position as assistant gardener. The old man introduces him to the nuns as his brother, and thereafter Valjean is known as "Fauchelevent." Javert gives up the hope of capturing Valjean.

Years after, Valjean still known as "Fauchelevent," is living in quiet ease with Cosette, now grown up, as his daughter. The Thenardiers have moved to Paris and are living in poverty, under an assumed name. In the next room to them dwells Marius, a student. Thenardier frequently appeals to him for money, and usually gets some. Eponine, Thenardier's daughter, also grown up, has fallen deeply in love with Marius, unbeknown to him. Marius walks and studies in the park, and there for the first time sees Cosette, sitting with her "father" Valjean. The two young people are attracted by each other at once. A little later Valjean is accosted by Eponine who is begging. She tells a pitiful story and Valjean and Cosette decide to go to her home and investigate the condition she has told concerning her family. Arriving there, Valjean leaves his coat and money, but neither he nor Cosette are recognized by any of the Thenardiers. As they leave the place, Marius is just returning home and he again comes face to face with Cosette, an incident which Valjean does not seem to like. Cosette accidentally drops a rose, Marius quickly picks it up and presses it to his lips. This action is observed by Eponine who becomes intensely jealous. Valjean has left his address with the Thenardiers in case they should need any further assistance. Marius demands of Eponine to give him the address, and this she does in a spirit of self-sacrifice. Marius starts at once to the house where Valjean and Cosette reside. He writes a note declaring his love, and puts it on a garden bench where Eponine has informed him Cosette lingers every evening. At this moment Cosette appears, reads the note and is surprised by Marius who has stepped behind the bushes at her approach. Valjean coming, suspects something, though Marius gets out of the way, and Cosette is taken to task by her foster father for the first time in his life.

Marius has a wealthy grandfather who dotes on the lad provided his wishes are followed. The young man writes him of his love for Cosette and begs his sanction to an early marriage. The grandfather sends for Marius and tells him he cannot consent. Marius repudiates him then and leaves in high anger.

PART FOUR—Cosette and Marius.—The rebellion of 1832 is on. There is rioting and barricading in the streets. Marius in despair, and in the hope that a bullet will soon end his life, joins the mob and becomes a fighter in the ranks of the insurgents. Javert gets orders to investigate the extent of the insurrection. He assumes a disguise, and goes to a tavern, the headquarters of the rebellion. He is quickly recognized and seized. They search him and tie him to a wooden pillar. Documents on him reveal his identity, and the rioters condemn him to die if the barricade is taken. Martial law is proclaimed, and the people are ordered to disperse. They refuse, and a volley is fired. Eponine, in the mob, dies at the first fire. Marius thinking his death to be at hand, writes a note to Cosette, telling her where to find his body in case he is killed. Gavroche is sent with the note, but Valjean gets it at his home. He sees that this love affair is deeper than he had supposed, and he goes to the scene of the rioting to find Marius. Gavroche is killed while trying to secure ammunition for the revolutionists in searching dead soldiers for cartridges. Fierce fighting follows and the rioters, realizing that they are losing ground, order the execution of Javert. Valjean interferes and tells them that Javert's life belongs to him. Taking Javert outside, Valjean frees his hands, fires a pistol in the air, and lets Javert go, thereby sparing his life. The military take the barricade by storm. Marius badly wounded, is picked up by Valjean, who disappears into a sewer opening and escapes with him underground. Javert, in the streets, comes upon Thenardier, robbing the dead. In pursuit of this man, he comes upon Valjean emerging from another part of the sewer. Javert drops Thenardier and arrests Valjean. Valjean shows him the note of Marius to Cosette concerning the disposing of his body, and he begs permission to take Marius to the home of his grandfather before submitting to arrest. Javert consents, but accidentally drops upon the ground the order of arrest for Jean Valjean, which he has carried on his person. Thenardier pounces upon the order and keeps it for future blackmailing purposes. He also follows Valjean and Javert to the home of the grandfather of Marius. Javert observing the God-like character of Valjean, is overcome with remorse, and for the first time in his life departs from his path of duty and allows his prisoner to escape. He then writes his resignation to the police, and, as a public acknowledgment of his mortification and weakness, he ends his own life. The grandfather of Marius is deeply grateful for the boy's safe return. He sends for Valjean and asks the hand of Cosette for Marius. This Valjean grants, and transfers his property to Cosette. The lovers are married at the church, at which time Valjean shows the first signs of failing health. Thenardier thinks the time now ripe to commence blackmailing with the order of arrest. He negotiates with Marius, who buys it from him for a good sum. Marius goes to see Valjean to question him about the paper, but finds him low in health, and fondling Cosette's little dress of other days, the place lighted with the good priest's candlesticks. Marius hands him the order of arrest. Valjean feebly acknowledges it, and tells the story of his persecutions. Cosette arrives as Valjean is dreaming of the good priest who helped him to be a better man, and soon he expires peacefully in the arms of his two children.

which she finds among the water-lilies. It reads: "Dear Maud, I know that you will never betray your husband but without you I have no desire to live. I shall be waiting for you tonight at the little gate in the park in the hope ———. If not —Goodbye. Jack Treharne."

Sir John with a servant is in the woodland after game. He sees a veiled woman approaching hurriedly. Her garments are those of his wife. Astonished at seeing her in this lonely place at night unattended, he draws back into the bushes and watches. He follows. He sees her meet a man, who was waiting at the cross-road with two horses. They embrace. The woman doesn't lift her veil.

The baron pursues. Changing horses at an inn, he gains on the elopers. Arriving at a road house, outside of which stands the horses on which the runaways had ridden, he is told that the man and woman are in a private room. In he dashes, disregarding the strength of the lock. There he confronts the veiled woman and the cavalier. He strikes the man. A fight is about to ensue. Sir John then snatches the veil from the woman's face. He starts back in surprise. "My sister!" he gasps. It is with a sense of relief as well as of pain to find that his sister is the runaway. He is glad, however, to know that it is not his wife, and that this action is remedial. He tells the Cavalier, who is also amazed to see whom he has met, that English convention is imperative and that he must marry Victoria, having thus compromised her. The Cavalier, believing that the worst can be the best, capitulates.

GREAT NORTHERN SPECIAL FEATURE FILM CO.

THROUGH THE TEST OF FIRE (3 reels).—Count Hardegg is faced by ruin. He obtains an interview with Goldstein, a factory owner and money lender, endeavoring to obtain a loan. But Goldstein, remembering past transactions, refuses to help Hardegg unless a certain condition is complied with. The condition is that the Countess Helena, Hardegg's beautiful daughter, shall marry Goldstein's son, Henry. Sorrowfully the count acquaints his daughter with the ultimatum, and Helena, in a spirit of filial love, agrees to make the sacrifice. Over the telephone, Hardegg accepts Goldstein's condition, and the usurer gleefully tells his son to prepare for the wedding. So, a month later, the marriage takes place, and amid the acclamations of their friends, the pair drive off. But the horses are restive, and at length, getting out of the control of their driver, they dash madly along. Just about this time, the employees of one of Goldstein's factories are trooping home from their work, and one of their number, Jack, seeing the runaways, makes a dash at their heads and effectually arrests their career.

Eight days later, Helena sends for Jack in order that she may thank him for his action. He comes sullenly enough, for, discontented with his employer's harsh methods, he has been advising his comrades to strike. Helena's whole-hearted thanks and genuine admiration completely soften him, and he becomes henceforth her devoted slave. About this time, Goldstein is killed by an explosion that occurs during an inspection of his factory. The blow of his father's death has barely fallen upon Henry Goldstein ere another comes to join it. A strike is declared at the works. A deputation waits upon Henry, who refuses, however, to accede to their demands, and Jack, the leader of the deputation, is badly humiliated before his fellows. Meanwhile, Baron Hardegg has been left a vast fortune, and now that he is no longer in pecuniary difficulties, endeavors to persuade his daughter to divorce her husband. This Helena refuses to do, declaring that to leave her husband when he is in such distress would be an act unworthy of the basest woman. Truth to tell, Helena was gradually falling in love with Henry, who, on more than one occasion, had proved his worth. While out riding, Helena and Henry are attacked by a party of strikers, but are defended by Jack, who enjoins his companions not to harm them, and so, a second time, Jack proves his worth.

The count makes another attempt to aleniate his daughter from her husband, but without success. Then comes an incident that brings the realization upon Helena that she is really in love with the man who at the outset she was prepared to hate.

A fire breaks out in one of the villager's cottages and is soon out of all control. Suddenly, with a cry of alarm, a woman in the crowd remembers her child. Henry, who arrives at this moment, volunteers to save the little one, and flinging off his coat, rushes into the burning building.

A moment later he appears at a window, the child in his arms. A pair of willing hands catch the little one as it is thrown down from above. Henry turns to make his escape, but finds all progress barred by a sheet of flame and smoke. Gradually the smoke overpowers him and he falls unconscious. Outside, Helena learns what has happened. She bethinks herself of her friend, Jack, and implores him to save her husband. So Jack follows Henry into the burning cottage, and by a superhuman effort, succeeds in bringing the unconscious man out into the open, and overcome, falls dead at his feet. So, after all, Helena and Henry realize that they love one another, and we leave them in the last scene wrapped in love's embrace.

GREAT NORTHERN.

TOLD IN CONFIDENCE (April 26).—Dr. Miller and his family, consisting of his wife, a little daughter and his mother live happily in their own home and have in their employ a faithful butler and a serving maid. Mrs. Jones, a middle-aged busy-body and gossip occupies apartments in an adjoining house, which gives her a view of the Miller dining-room. During the family repast, Dr. Miller chides the maid and butler for spilling gravy on one of the napkins and plainly shows his annoyance. Thereupon Mrs. Jones hurries over to Mrs. Brown and tells in confidence that the doctor has upset furniture and is about to chastise the entire family. The doctor is pictured as brute, pure and simple and both Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Brown are horrified. The latter loses no time in rushing off to Mrs. Smith and by the time she arrives she has enlarged upon the original story to such an extent that Mrs. Smith is led to believe that the disturbance in the doctor's family was caused by the fact that the latter's wife was caught making-love to the butler and then it was that Dr. Miller became furious and tried to murder everyone in the house. His little child, she is told, was most violently handled and his wife was tossed about like a rag doll. No sooner had Mrs. Brown departed than Mrs. Smith donned her hat and cloak and hurried to another nearby neighbor to whom she imparted the information that the infuriated Dr. Brown had thrown the butler out of the window and while the unfortunate man was clinging to the ledge, he was shot by the doctor. And so the story spread and became enlarged upon until a large crowd assembled in front of the doctor's home. Imagine the surprise of the curious ones when Dr. Miller and his family appear at the portal in merry mood preparatory to taking a drive. The three gossips slink away amid the jeers of their neighbors. The incident of the napkin and the stories told by the women are depicted in the unfolding of the story.

A SAFEGUARD FOR BACHELORS (April 25).—Showing what kept the fair sex away from the bachelors.

THE TRUANT HUSBAND (April 25).—After having a rather one-sided discussion with his wife, Smithkins decides that t'would be better to leave that talkative lady, and go in search of happiness which he will never attain in her company. He therefore locks her in the bedroom and sallies forth. His wife, however, is waiting for him on the balcony above, and he is promptly lassoed and brought back home by the indefeatigable dame. Smithkins's next move is to pack his box and go to live at a hotel. His wife, however, gets wise to this scheme and packs herself in her husband's box. When hubby comes to open his box at the new "digs," he finds his wife waiting to open fire upon him as usual. Wifie then determines to put hubby in the box and take him home again. A porter of the hotel enters the room at this moment, and in the confusion he gets put in the box, whilst hubby gets away free. Wifie has a horrible surprise when she gets home.

Better Pictures At Less Cost

The use of a G-E Rectifier to furnish direct current for a projector not only greatly improves the quality of the pictures, but in addition it materially reduces the current consumption.

Even with the best economizers, the alternating current lamp is so much less efficient for projecting pictures than the direct current lamp, that the use of the rectifier will make a substantial saving in the cost of electricity.

When no economizer is used, to produce the same amount of light the alternating current lamp requires four times as much current as the direct current lamp and rectifier.

Write our nearest office for Booklet B-3107 giving results of tests of comparative current consumption of alternating current lamps with and without economizers, direct current lamp with rheostats and direct current lamp with a rectifier taking current from an alternating current circuit.

Our New Improved Bells

Are Simply Wonderful

We have spent thousands of dollars during the last year in order to get these bells perfect.

The Result is Most Satisfying

We want every exhibitor in the country to investigate the merits of this, the greatest and least expensive attraction for motion picture theatres.

The New DEAGAN'S

MUSICAL ELECTRICAL BELLS

Are remarkable for their sweet and mellow tone.

They are played from an ivory keyboard just like a piano. They can be played either

Soft or loud, single stroke or vibrating at the will of the operator, merely by pressing buttons conveniently located on the keyboard.

Deagan's "Class A" Musical Electrical Bells are mounted on a floor rack, completely wired ready to play. The sets of bells here shown range twenty-five notes, two octaves chromatic from C to C, and are connected to the keyboard by a twenty-five-foot flexible cable.

We can also supply these bells to be mounted separate, round your theatre, and some very novel effects can be produced that way.

Write us today for Catalogue "F," just off the press. A postal card will bring it, and it will tell you all about these wonderful bells. Our Catalogue "D" describes 126 kinds of Orchestra Bells. Our Catalogue "E" lists 160 different kinds of xylophones. Altogether we manufacture 240 novelty instruments, most of which are suitable for motion picture theatres.

MOVING PICTURE ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT

Used and Highly Endorsed by the United States Army.

BIGGEST SENSATION IN THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Can be operated by a boy 10 years old. One customer writes: "Plant running like a top and delivering the 'juice' right along every day for our moving picture house. Costs us about one-tenth as much as public service. Also pumps water to all our buildings 2,000 gallons per day."

Write to-day for Bulletin 101. It is a mighty interesting booklet

As the Operator Looks at it

As the Operator Looks at It

Just notice how easy this operator takes it. He doesn't have to work over a dangerous juice consuming rheostat at furnace heat anymore since the was installed.

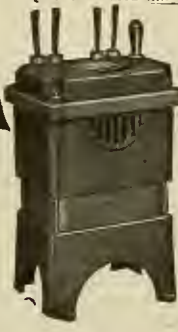
He can control the machine perfectly now with one hand--gets a clearer, whiter, steadier light and can adjust it to any of the three intensities without even the faintest flicker.

When we sold this machine we guaranteed it would absolutely

Cut 2-3 from the Monthly Lighting Bill



That sounded almost too good to be true, but they put one in on our 30 day free trial plan.

Did the machine "make good?" Well, the first month it reduced the bill from $22.70 to $9.24 and they operated more hours and got better light than ever before.

We can do just as well for you regardless of what voltage you are using and if you will send for our little free booklet, we'll explain how we do it.

Remember you are paying the Lighting Company 66 2-3 per cent more than you need to every day you wait.

FIRE cannot affect J-M Transite Asbestos Wood Booths

No matter how many films explode or catch fire, the flames positively cannot spread if your machine is enclosed in a J-M Transite Asbestos Wood Booth. It is a positive insurance against loss of life and property from film fires.

These booths are constructed of Asbestos Wood and are absolutely fire-proof.

Recent tests show that heat up to 2,000° (intense enough to melt iron), has no effect on J-M Booths.

They also prevent transmission of the noise of picture machine, and cannot become grounded or charged with electricity as is the case with metal booths.

Approved by Fire Underwriters.

Made in portable and permanent styles.

Here is Your Library, Mr. Exhibitor.

The Motion Picture Annual, published by the Chalmers Publishing Company, is a small encyclopedia. The exhibitor can always turn to it with confidence. It has been prepared by practical moving picture men, who know and understand the needs of the exhibitor. Add this to your library forthwith, for it costs but one dollar and twenty-five cents in paper covers or $1.50 in cloth boards. It is fully worth it. The best writers in the motion picture field have provided the literary matter in it. The complete list of releases for 1912 (Licensed and Independent) and the classified trade directory are worth something to you, many times the price perhaps.

Gentlemen:

We beg to advise that the Curtain I installed in the Rex Theater, Syracuse, is giving great satisfaction.

The Curtain installed in the Standard Theater, Syracuse, on approval, is simply great; the management, Mr. Bastable, states it cut the juice bill 50 per cent. Still gives a brighter picture than previously obtained on direct current.

Yours very truly.

The Machine That Wears Well
Produces Perfect Projection

Two important qualities in a moving picture machine are:

1—DURABILITY

All parts must be of the very best for the purpose—your machine is subject to hard usage; it must wear well; it has got to back you up.

> "On the 22nd day of April, 1911, we installed Power's Cameragraph. It has run for over 2,000 hours without one cent cost for repairs. What can an operator want with any other machine when he can get this result with Power's?"
> Yours truly,
> BEN ST. CLAIR,
> Palace Theatre, Martin, Tenn.

2—PERFECT PROJECTION

Without this you cannot please; pictures must be clear, without flicker.

> "In the reproduction of the Paul J. Rainey African and Arctic pictures, perfect projection has been absolutely necessary.
> "After carefully comparing the merits of Power's Cameragraph with other machines, The Jungle Film Co. decided on the Power's Cameragraph. We are using over 30 machines in our various shows, where they are giving entire satisfaction."
> Yours truly,
> J. C. HEMMENT.

GETTING 3 3 A WEEK?

THE THANHOUSER THREE-A-WEEK

BEG TO OFFER (LATE IN MAY) THE ONLY GENUINE THANHOUSER "CARMEN"

With A Notable Thanhouser Cast. Easily worth waiting a couple of weeks for! In Three Handy Reels! A Regular Release at That!

ROSIE'S REVENGE Sunday, April 27

She attempted to be a stenographer and found herself "at liberty" so quick it made her head swim; but she got a job as cook and made her first employer rue the day he had discharged her. It was all in the meal she cooked for him!

THE GIRL DETECTIVE'S RUSE Tuesday, April 29

The prize female counterfeiter had been liberated; she slunk out of the prison yard and into a waiting automobile that—as soon as the driver was certain none watched—whizzed her to the counterfeiter's headquarters. But she wasn't the counterfeiter; she was a detective and the close resemblance make-up was her ruse!

THE WIDOW'S STRATAGEM Friday, May 2

She appealed mightily to the young farmer. She was from the city, you see, and there was a city charm to her that was new and irresistible to him. But the coldness of the city was not with her when his first love came and asked her to give him back; indeed, her stratagem was simply in aid of this country girl rival.

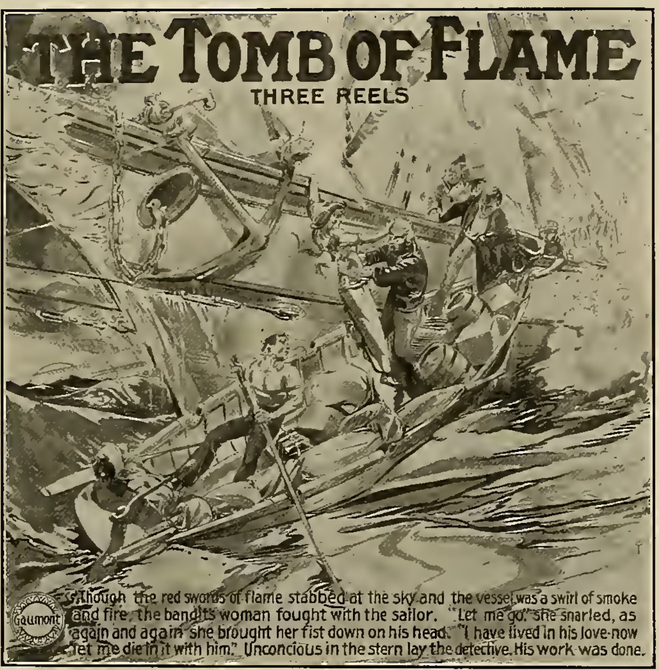
THREE REELS OF THRILLS

How the seemingly hopeless task of bringing back to his life-long cell a desperate malefactor was accomplished unwittingly by way of a woman. The fight on the ship and the deed of the man who would not be taken alive, will send chills down your back.



"Though the red swords of flame stabbed at the sky and the vessel was a swirl of smoke and fire, the bandit's woman fought with the sailor. "Let me go," she snarled, as again and again she brought her fist down on his head. "I have lived in his love-now let me die in it with him." Unconcious in the stern lay the detective. His work was done.

THIS PICTURE IS NO GAMBLE

Besides being the biggest production ever made it is the most adaptable for any kind of entertainment purposes. It is not limited to the theatre alone, but enters into the broader field of school and church work. One of the handicaps to motion picture exhibiting is the lack of advance sale. Here is a picture that can be shown as a whole or in parts on consecutive days, with special coupon tickets for the course. In this way the exhibitor is insured against bad weather and assured of a full house at each exhibition. "Les Miserables" is the first big all around feature ever made. With proper billing and circularizing it will pack any house. We have various styles of 1-3-6 and 8 sheets. Also 12-16-24 sheets.

IT'S A GILT EDGE INVESTMENT

Progressive and successful State right buyers always consider the permanency of public interest. Here is a standard work; one that all can understand. It is good for ages to come, therefore this production is an investment, not a gamble. No pains or expense have been spared to make it the king of all features. It has been passed and praised by the National Board of Censorship. For this production we have gone the limit in providing proper lithographs, elaborate heralds, lobby photographs, etc.

General Film Service is the magnet that draws the crowds

WHEN you were a kid you had a magnet. Every youngster had. You marveled at the way objects of steel were attracted to it. You didn't worry much about the principle of the thing or attempt to analyze why they fairly jumped at the magnet. They did — and that was enough.

General Film Service is the magnet of the exhibiting business. It draws the crowds right in your door. The reason is easily explained; but here again you needn't worry. The continued popularity of General Film Service is dependent upon our maintaining its present high standard. And that standard will be maintained so long as motion pictures are exhibited. We put the stuff in our programs that insures the success of your show. About all you have to do is arrange for the service.

Just the other day an exhibitor in Kansas said: "We have tried out other services, but the General beats them all." His case is not unusual by any means. The staunchest friends General Film Service has to-day are exhibitors who first tried some other service, and, in some cases, several others! Why not investigate now?

We have printed a little booklet that we'd like you to have. It's a concise review of the things that stamp General Film Service as superior. The colored cover alone is worth the stamp it will cost you to get it. Mention the World when you write.

Facts and Comments

Mr. W. Stephen Bush, of the editorial staff of The Moving Picture World, is making a business tour of England and the Continent. He sailed April 12th, and will remain abroad from six weeks to two months inspecting productions and making a study of the European market generally. It is expected that Mr. Bush will contribute some interesting stories upon the various phases of the motion picture business in Europe as presented to his critical eye for the benefit of readers of The Moving Picture World.

As is already well known, The Moving Picture World has declared itself as unalterably opposed to any sort of official censorship for motion pictures upon the ground that the very idea of censorship of anything we do is distinctly un-American, and should, therefore, be repugnant to all true Americans. So far we, citizens of the United States, have successfully combatted all attempts to impose this paternal institution upon the body politic as it relates to the press, the drama or the rostrum. It is true that we have laws calculated to regulate individual action and, in some instances, these laws seem to approach censorship; but careful analysis will prove that their purpose is to establish and protect the rights of the individual, not to circumscribe them. By this means public morals are amply protected, and anything else would be an invasion of that freedom of speech and action which is guaranteed under our constitution. For these reasons and an abiding faith in the ultimate good sense and judgment of the American people in whatever community they may abide we have opposed and shall continue to oppose any and all forms of official censorship as applied to motion pictures.

Notwithstanding the deep-seated feeling against censorship that exists in this country, there has come from a source influential in the moving picture trade a distinct demand for official censorship of pictures. So insistent has been this demand that, in the State of Ohio in particular, a law has been passed which provides that all motion pictures shown in that State shall first be approved by a board of censors appointed by the Governor of the State. Action of a similar nature has been taken in other States, but in this case it was taken at the instance of the proprietors of motion picture theaters, the text of the act being drawn by the president of their trade organization. Other States have followed suit, and there promises to be a crop of laws, more or less burdensome to the exhibitor, enacted by the lawmakers of the several States of the Union. While disclaiming all desire for censorship the sponsors of the Ohio law allege that they were compelled to appeal to the State to head off the multiplicity of local censorship boards with which they were threatened; that, if they did not secure a State board, they would have to accept numerous other boards of censors appointed by the police authorities of each city.

Without questioning the motives of those responsible for the laws passed in Ohio and other States, The Moving Picture World is inclined to disbelieve the allegation that there is a general demand upon the part of the public for a censorship of pictures. There is no evidence in the public press or in the wide and voluminous correspondence that reaches this office to indicate such a demand. On the contrary, wherever the exhibitors have united to oppose proposals to establish boards of censors, either by State or local authorities, the opposition has been successful, for it has been proved time and again that there is no real need for a distinct official censorship of pictures, and once the public has been fully advised of the true conditions it has failed to support the few who have urged the necessity of such measures.

The Moving Picture World is inclined to the conclusion that where the exhibitor has become, or appears to be, sponsor for official censorship, he is acting upon a mistaken conception of the attitude of the public toward motion pictures or has been deceived as to the true state of affairs and has thus been induced to invoke the assistance of political power that is certain to prove more troublesome and burdensome in the end than local censorship, which is, in the main, an imaginary menace. In the instances where censorship laws have been forced upon the trade the fine hand of the politician is plainly discernible seeking to provide a lucrative position for some henchman. Reference to the provisions of such acts as have been printed in these columns proves this contention. With that evidence at hand The Moving Picture World feels justified in branding every attempt at official censorship as a distinct effort to levy political toll upon the motion picture business. In no sense are such efforts calculated or intended to protect the morals of the community; they are, in fact, but the reaching out of the grafting politician for more spoils, and should be fought to the last ditch.

Our sympathies are with the exhibitor who opposes all such invasion of his rights, and our congratulations are for the exhibitor who has been successful in defeating such measures. We regret that some have been cajoled or dragooned into giving consent to the passage of censorship laws, but we believe that there is still a legal remedy and hope that remedy will be invoked in all cases.

A FRIEND and correspondent of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD writes to us from California complaining of a film which shows the torturing of a horse for apparently no other purpose of giving a touch of "realism." It appears that the horse was taken to the top of a hill, where there was a grade of sixty per cent. A number of men, supposedly in the employ of a motion picture company, then threw the animal to the ground and tied his legs in such a manner as to render him entirely helpless. Leaving the saddle on his back, these inhuman persons pushed the animal over the edge and started him rolling down the hill over stumps and stones, while the cameraman turned the crank. Our correspondent encloses a newspaper clipping, from which we quote the following:

"At every turn the horse would bound off the ground and strike it again with a sickening thud, and after rolling perhaps two hundred feet, he lodged in a huge stump of a tree and laid there groaning with pain in the most pitiful manner."

It is hard to stay within the bounds of moderation in commenting on such an act of inhumanity. We are sorry we do not know the name of the company which encouraged or permitted such a shocking outrage in the name of the motion picture. If ever a concern deserved the pillory it surely is this concern, which has been guilty of such horrible and revolting cruelty. Happily the motion picture has in all these years kept itself free from such reproaches. If our memory serves us, there was but one similar instance in the early days. A French producer introduced a bit of "realism" in which an old horse was the sufferer, but the French government took action in the case and the offense was never repeated. There are legal ways of punishing such barbarity in this country as well as in France, but more powerful than any printed statute is the feeling of pity for suffering animals which is implanted in every human breast. We have no doubt at all that if a picture portraying this sickening spectacle is ever thrown on the screen of an American motion picture theater the patrons will turn away in loathing and disgust and avoid such a theater ever after. We do not think that the picture, if it is released, will ever get as far as the screen. Exhibitors nowadays are too careful and conscientious for any such thing to happen.

THE clerical enemies of the motion picture are not always as sincere and as consistent as they would like to have the public believe. We know of a clergyman in a neighboring city who devoted whatever time he could spare from his regular vocation of saving souls to the indiscriminate denunciation of the motion picture. Right in his neighborhood were several exhibitors conducting a clean entertainment and taking good care of the safety of their patrons. This we assert not as a matter of assumption, but as a fact well within our own personal knowledge. Naturally these exhibitors prospered. The reverend person kept on inveighing against motion pictures, but the attendances on the moving picture shows were just as good as ever. The thought of so many parishioners spending nickels in these picture houses harrowed up the pious soul of the priest. He decided he would have motion pictures in the parish hall. Without paying any license and without bothering himself much about the regulations governing the exhibition of motion pictures. It is said that the seats are loose, that the number of exits is insufficient and that until recently there was not even a booth in which to enclose the machine. These shows run Sunday afternoons, and are by no means confined to pictures in keeping with the character of the day.

We mention this case because it is typical. There are reformers whose only objections to the motion picture is their inability to derive some personal profit in the matter. We are very glad indeed to see churches using motion pictures, but why should the church, which makes a regular practise of showing motion pictures for profit be exempt from the rules and regulations which the law imposes upon the ordinary exhibitor. If through the carelessness or connivance of the authorities a panic occurs in a church or school which is not properly safeguarded, the blame will be put not upon the church or school but upon the motion picture. Where the motion picture is used for educational purposes only, no license ought, of course, to be exacted, but a wholly different situation is presented where the church or any other institution goes into the business of exhibiting motion pictures for profit only. A conscientious exhibitor, who rigidly observes every provision of the law and who pays his license into the treasury of the city, has a right to expect that every competitor must comply with the same provisions of the same law. It makes no difference whatever who the exhibitor is.

ELSEWHERE in this number of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will be found an appeal from the Executive Committee of the Motion Picture League of America for aid for the members of the trade who suffered loss by reason of the recent floods in the states of Indiana and Ohio. It is declared that only two picture theaters of nearly forty in the city of Dayton escaped serious damage and that many are a total loss even to the buildings, which were so badly damaged by the rush of water that they will have to be torn down. It should also be considered that the owners of these houses have not only lost their places of business and their personal effects, but that it will be some time before picture theaters can be conducted at a profit in Dayton and many other towns in the flooded district, so that the unfortunate picture men are not only destitute in many instances, but they are also deprived of earning a livelihood. We can think of no better occasion for cheerful and liberal giving and would urge all members of the trade to come to the front with their contributions.

For this purpose the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will be pleased to receive and transmit to the proper authorities any sums that may be contributed in its care. The example of the New York exhibitors is worthy of emulation. A benefit held by them raised a sum of $2,500, which is now in the hands of Mayor Gaynor, and which will be used to enable some of the sufferers in the flood district to resume business. If every member of the League would contribute a day's receipts to this cause it is more than likely that an amount sufficient to restore all the damaged picture theaters would be quickly realized. Now is the time to show your fellow feeling. Dig down into your pocket as deeply as you can.

Apostles of Nothingness

By Louis Reeves Harrison

CONSIDERING moving pictures as a means of entertainment, acknowledging that they must interest to be of value, we cannot get away from the fact that they are for the communication of facts, ideas or emotions, and are therefore a form of visualized literature. Producers are publishers; exhibitors are distributors; the public pays for reading whatever is presented, whether poetic, romantic, historic, scientific or amusing. Only a part of the public, however, finds the pictures worth while, and many of those who do, or who go to the theaters for a little inexpensive recreation, are dissatisfied.

What is the trouble?

It is quite possible that the fleeting character of motion-picture presentation—it is shown one day and vanishes the next—is responsible for much of its wearisome repetition and lack of variety. It exhibits too much of the peculiarities of journalism and not enough of true literature, because the best photodrama soon becomes a mere legend driven into oblivion by less worthy successors, overpowered by the force of numbers rather than by superior quality. A journalist records pretty much the same kind of news every day. Even an editorial writer is obliged to keep hammering away until he drives his nail home, because it is his business to rouse and convince his readers by repetition, with only such variations as different points of view permit. The scenario writer possibly resembles him because there is no element of permanence in his work.

What is the remedy?

I do not see why we should dispose of short stories on the screen because some splendid feature plays have drawn the crowds. When twenty-minute skits are good, when they are smart and bright, they fit in little niches of their own. The best of them are quite as entertaining as short stories in the magazines. Veritable O. Henrys will sprout up in time, screen tangos and hitchy-koos, when brain food is placed on the free list and authors are permitted to pay rent in tabloid form.

But this is not the remedy.

Iteration may be all right in photoplays—possibly you have seen the seven hundredth presentation of one in which the villain plugs father and leaves the hero's weapon, glove or other misleading testimony near the victim for the sake of revenge—but it becomes annoying at times. We feel that what should be perishable is becoming permanent. No one who writes that kind of brain fag need suspect himself of authorship, and we need authors. We need men who know how to create new and varied picture plays for the enjoyment or edification of plain people.

Delicatessen drama is beginning to pall.

We need something fresh from the garden of bright and original thought, a mental diet that will fill the theaters to overflowing in baseball season. Some of the canned goods we are now struggling to digest are so old that they are beginning to ferment. A number of gentlemen profess to teach the young idea how to shoot for a consideration—there are so many of them that business must be good—but the best they can do is to indicate the technics. Some of them may really be able to teach picture expression to those who have nothing to express, but they are kindling high hopes for a low standard of work, and the few releases that result are born and die the same day.

While the motion-picture art is differentiated from the drama by silence and from photography as formerly constituted by its representation of action, it is generally regarded as their child, because, like them, it attempts to represent the visible world. It is certainly not to be estimated by the tests applied to either. Still, photography can only be judged by the principles of its own art, and the same is true of the stage presentation. What does the average scenario writer know about either? The most successful ones know little about photography and less about putting on a play.

The difference between a story in silent action and one of oral discourse is even more pronounced than the difference between words written and those spoken. I have elaborated on the distinction from a dozen points of view—it is not to be told in a sentence—and I incline more and more to the idea that an entirely new art has come into existence, a powerful means of thought distribution capable of disseminating the beauty of truth to all parts of the earth. Moving pictures are destined to go to all organized nations, irrespective of their forms of government or religious faith, messengers sent out on important business, not, as many of them now are, Apostles of Nothingness.

All the blame cannot be put on any class of men handling this new method of thought interpretation and distribution. The author who writes a meaningless scenario is as guilty as the producer who authorizes it, the director who materializes it, the exhibitor who projects it on the screen. All are contributory to the weakness of what is going before the public, and I may as well include that benighted creature, the critic of no ideals.

Bearing in mind the youth of this art, especially when it is compared with hoary-headed stage presentation, a great deal has been accomplished by those far-sighted producers who are now striving for leadership. I have critically reviewed the best of their work, and have accorded it full measure of praise in these columns because development of the art is only a thing of yesterday, and many do not yet know how to take it. It is a younger brother of the arts, and is richer in possibilities than in precedent. Presented as it is to the eyes of many millions of people, is bound to grow more interesting and more important when it begins to take a part in our social and political improvement. When it comes to be generally known how immense, how far-reaching, is its influence, it will become apparent to its publishers that they must set up no false standards if they would command public respect.

The remedy?

I do not know what better to suggest than what the French call a rapproachment, a getting together, of all concerned in production and exhibition. Any sort of unity of spirit may seem out of the question at first glance, but it would be far more profitable in the end if it broadens and beautifies the field than the maintenance of unreasonable antagonisms for purely selfish purposes. What is true of painting, sculpture, literature, of all that enriches existence, must eventually apply to moving pictures. The creative artists must be remunerated according to quality if the art itself is to be self-respecting. There is a direct medium here for genius, one which will eventually broaden our sympathies and quicken our minds.

"The Tiger Lily"

A Strong Three-Reel Vitagraph Feature Drama.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A STARTLING and beautiful drama of the screen, so well constructed and developed that it is far above the average, set with exquisite taste and portrayed by veritable artists, "The Tiger Lily" is sure to seize and hold the interest of any audience to which it may be presented. There is visible in every scene that fine and exhausting attention to detail which characterize releases requiring brains, skilled labor, money and time to produce. When the added risk and danger are considered, turning out such a production is little short of a heart-breaking business.

I suppose that is one reason why we get so few pictureplays of real merit. Time is a tremendous factor and the average studio is little more than a factory—some of them turn out a string of sausage-like variety and beauty—and the application of time in conjunction with taste in this case is in evidence from start to finish. This photodrama enjoys the undeniable advantage, if not distinction, of starting well. Characterization of a delicate sort is indicated before a scene of action is presented. A beautiful tiger-lily appears on the screen—it dissolves and is reincarnated in a magnificent tigress—again there is dissolution and a woman embodying both the lily and the tiger is gradually materialized. This artistic bit of characterization will have its charm for people of cultivation yet be within the comprehension of the lowly, a spur to the interest of all classes in a mixed audience.

The human tigress is portrayed—is illuminated—by an actress whose advance to this high opportunity has been gradual. Miss Julia Swayne Gordon's acting was at one time too fervid, but a decided and unexpected improvement came last year, when she began to acquire the hundred indefinable, subconscious little arts that make visible the reaction on character of crucial events. As the photodrama proceeds and suspense becomes quickened, she easily rises to each occasion presented, the more forceably because of previous suppression, yet without varying the mastering passions which sway her in the role. The principal motive force in the nature of the human tigress grows in intensity according to the requirements of the action.

Supported by Miss Florence Foley, Roger Lytton, Charles Kent and Earle Williams, it may be seen that Miss Gordon is in good company, but she easily dominates while there are human beings only in evidence. Her rival is Princess, a tremendous tigress—the cameraman managed to keep on turning his crank at an exciting moment in the play when Princess yielded to early instinct and set her teeth on Miss Gordon's arm—for the great beast is formidable-looking in her most peaceful moments. The play is not written around Princess, and her role is not one of particular importance in most of the scenes, but she holds the attention every second that she is in action.

When Princess descends the grand staircase at a bal masque, no directorial instructions were needed to make the dancing guests "look frightened." From in front they were really and truly scared, and no one can blame them. One can not help feeling that both director and cameraman must have been endowed with iron nerve in most of the scenes—as for that of Miss Gordon—it was incomparable at all times. I am not in favor of plays written around wild animals or mechanical accessories, but "The Tiger Lily" is no such production.

The story presents varied and interesting phases of sex character in the woman who is sister of the flower at moments and at others, those of her jealous rage, as savage and pitiless as the beast she counterfeits. The futility of vengeance is as powerfully shown as in the Durand photo-drama by Rex Beach—the subtle workings of destiny are more admirably depicted—but it is the outrageous jealousy of the Tiger Lily that leaves the strongest impression. Her intended victim is her own daughter, though the relationship is unknown, and the conspicuous failure of the mother to recognize the rights of others easily justifies the retribution that overtakes her. Such jealousy is usually masculine, as well as the direction of consequent schemes of vengeance, but it is made consistent in this case by the admirable characterization. The scenic beauty throughout is of a very high order, and the entire production an advance over previous work of the kind.

"At the Risk of Her Life" (Apex).

THERE is, it seems, a perennial demand for "good, old melodramas," and the Apex Film Company's new three-part feature, "At the Risk of Her Life," has been produced to fill that demand. It is not a legitimate dramatic picture; but a connected series of sensational thrills and hair-breadth escapes in which we find all the old breath-holding situations and new ones. For American spectators, the settings and backgrounds will have a good deal of fresh interest. It opens with some fine views of a great ship-building plant in Germany and carries through some lovely scenes from German roadsides, views along a railroad, docks, a harbor and at length back again to rural places, with most interesting farm houses and then to city back yards.

As the picture opens, we are introduced to Fred Watkins, an inventor who is perfecting a device that will revolutionize ship building. He has interested a big contractor, in whose shop he has an office. This man's daughter is in love with the inventor and we are given a few pretty love scenes, photographed along some quiet stream and under the green umbrage of leafy trees. The day comes when the invention is complete and we see the trial of it in the great works, a most interesting scene. It is a proved success; but there is an accident which results in the injury of the young inventor. He is carried by his friends into the house, connected with the office of the works. The accident keeps him confined to his bed and he is tended carefully by the girl.

A scene in New York is flashed to let us know that an American firm of ship builders there, warned of the new contrivance and concerned for its prosperity, has determined to secure it. A man is sent to obtain photographs of the machine and of the plans, so that one can be made by the firm. The man arrives in Germany and interviews the contractor with the pretence of being a reporter. Not being able to get any information, he finds from an employe where the plans are kept and, slipping back, obtains the desired photographs.

In the sick room, the inventor having need of a note book, sends the girl to his office for it and she finds the villain at work with his camera. Running back, she tells and the inventor exclaims that unless the camera is recovered from the man their future is ruined. The girl promises to get it, come what will, and keeps her word; but we hardly believe that she will be anxious to repeat her exploits or even willing to do the same thing over again for twice the money. The thief makes good his escape by climbing from a window and dropping to the ground. He has taken a carriage so the girl has to follow on foot, running all the way to the railroad station.

A combination train, half passenger, half freight, is waiting and he secures a seat in it. The girl reaches it only in time to catch the end of the last car, from which she works her way, now along the top and now along the running board, from which she discovers where the man is. She can not take the camera from him by force, so she secretly follows him on board the ship by hiding in a case which is transferred from the dock to the hold. Later, by reaching her arm in through his port hole she gets possession of the camera. To get to the port she has to lower herself down over the side of the vessel by a rope. He sees the camera going out and hurries to the deck only to find that the plucky girl has jumped into the sea. Not to be outdone, he, too, leaps overboard and the chase, turned backward now, is continued swimming.

The girl reaches a launch and is darting away; but the man, too, contrives to come by a faster one and is on the point of overtaking her's when she makes a landing. In a lonely country road she finds a horse tethered near a thatched cottage and uses its help, the man following on a bicycle. Galloping under a bit of woods, she is caught by her hair and hangs; but just before she is overtaken, manages to work free and we have, in the rest of the third reel, thrill after thrill of the same sensational nature, with which are also woven a good many freshly clever and freshly interesting incidents, until at length she gets the precious camera home and the man is foiled. It is surely a successful offering of its kind, not cheaply produced. At one point, we ourselves were made to jump up. It is not a high-brow offering; but an exciting melodrama for the people.

"QUO VADIS" AT THE ASTOR.

George Kleine's Big Feature Production Attracting Increasing Business at Leading New York Theater.

WITH the distinction of being the first big dramatic motion picture, or photoplay, to open for a run in a first-class New York theater, "Quo Vadis" was given its first public presentation by Mr. George Kleine at the Astor Theater, Broadway and 45th Street, on Monday, April 21. Two performances were given on that date, to large, fashionable and enthusiastic audiences. The picture was simply staged with an accompaniment of appropriate music provided by a Wurlitzer unit orchestra. There was no lecture to detract from the picture and the audience seemed to enjoy every scene of this truly wonderful picture. The entertainment lasted two and one-half hours; the picture being run in three parts, or acts, with brief intermissions between each act, the length of the picture being about 9,000 feet.

A review of this production, which is by the Cines Company of Rome, will not be attempted at this time, but will appear in a later issue. But it is timely to remark the beautiful photography and the realistic effects that place "Quo Vadis" in the highest rank of motion picture classics. Notable among the effects were the scenes depicting the burning of Rome. At this point the audience was unable to longer restrain itself and burst into loud and prolonged applause. There were thrills in almost every scene; some calling for enthusiastic applause and yet others which commanded profound reverence. Altogether it was a delighted people who rose reluctantly to leave the theater when the curtain fell on the last scene.

Since the opening, the business done at the box office of the Astor has been steadily increasing, which fact, considering the prices of admission ranged from 25 cents to $1.50, gives reason for the belief that "Quo Vadis" will have a long and successful run in New York.

Having thus successfully launched the New York presentation it is Mr. Kleine's intention to open at McVicker's Theater, Chicago, Ill., on May 5, where an equally enthusiastic reception may be expected.

DEATH OF ROBERT FERGUSON, COMEDIAN.

Robert Ferguson, the well-known comedian, whose last engagement was with the Imp Company, died at his home, 308 West 111th Street, on Monday, April 21. Mr. Ferguson was present at the Screen Club ball on the Saturday evening previous; he was feeling ill at that time. Mr. Ferguson's last appearance was as the henchman of Robespierre in the forthcoming three-reel production of that title. His work in pictures had been marked by the same high degree of skill as that for which he was noted on the regular stage. His funeral took place on Wednesday evening. The Screen Club, of which Mr. Ferguson was a member, was represented at the services by Herbert Brenon, Matt Snyder, William E. Shay and Frank Smith.

"The Bawlerout" (Reliance).

By George Blaisdell.

HERE is a story to approach which is a pleasure. Forrest Halsey is the author. It is not a one-part drama, nor yet a two-part. Provision is made for many characterizations demanding intelligence in interpretation. Such a condition necessarily imposes responsibility upon a director; likewise, also, it presents opportunities. Oscar C. Apfel, who made this picture, shows in his selection of types, in his management of ensembles, in his skill in bringing out on the faces of his people a realization of a given situation, and in his logical presentation of the story throughout the three reels that he has met both these factors.

"The Bawlerout" is a tale of the city—built around conditions from which smaller communities are comparatively free. It portrays the train of evils flowing from the maleficent activities of the loan sharks, and incidentally reveals the real backer of the unscrupulous "brokers" as none other than a bank president. It is likely that this phase of the story will not find favor among some in an audience. However, the complainants will have difficulty in disproving its "inherent probability." One noticeable thing about the whole story is the working out—you don't instinctively feel what the next move will be; you are in doubt.

The title role is carried by Edgena De Lespine—and the way she carries it takes the observer with her. She has the dash, the absolute disregard of everybody and everything, the pushful, smashing quality that breaks down all opposition. It is a splendid portrayal. That the manner of the Bawlerout softens in the end merely serves to disclose the real woman under the rough exterior. Irving Cummings plays Dick, the young bank clerk whose kindness to a friend in distress starts a long train of disaster. His work measures up to the standard that his friends have come to expect. Throughout the play it is natural—showing the light-hearted youngster with all things coming his way. He has a good position, a good home and a good mother, and he has a sweetheart who seems to be in love with him—anyway, the average young man would feel justified in thinking so. We see him gradually broken down by worry and real trouble, everything going against him, and when the tide turns become as buoyant as of old.

Other characters deserving of special mention are those of the mother of the bank clerk, Sue Balfour; the bank cashier, Ralph Lewis; his daughter, Muriel Ostrich; the philanthropic investigator who brings about the downfall of the shark, Thomas R. Mills; President Bendis, George Siegman; the tool of the real shark, E. P. Sullivan.

There are many fine situations in "The Bawlerout." One of the best is where the Bawlerout goes to a factory and, in the presence of the employes and in the most offensive manner, discloses the fact that one of the number is not paying his debts. It is a dramatic scene and will make strong appeal to every audience. There is another scene, in which the comedy element enters. This is where the Bawlerout administers to the bank president a tongue-lashing in the presence of the entire bank force, not knowing that the president is her actual employer. Over the telephone, word is immediately sent to the dummy head to "fire" the pugnacious woman. There are other scenes that stand out, many of them in which pathos is marked, and in which are portrayed the tragedies, minor and major, in the lives of everyday people.

The picture is one which will make the widest appeal. It cuts into and discloses in some of its worst phases an ulcer which has drawn many tears from its victims and caused much thought on the part of legislators. While dramatic in the highest and best sense, it is also educational in marked degree. As such it will be as heartily welcomed in settlements, in schools and in churches as it is in the theater.

AMERICAN ADOPTS NOVEL METHOD TO ADVERTISE ITS NEW STUDIO.

The American Film Manufacturing Company is building a new studio at Santa Barbara, Cal. During the process of construction a few feet of film are made each day. This will be shown in a short release, giving the effect of the entire studio being constructed in seven or eight minutes. Thus exchanges and theaters as well as patrons will get a wee glimpse of the home of their favorite pictures. The pictures are being made under the personal supervision of Mr. Hutchinson.

McKEESPORT, PA., TO HAVE NEW PICTURE HOUSE.

M. Komnas is building an exclusive picture theater at McKeesport, Pa. While the house will not be of the large type, it will be equipped and decorated to compare favorably with any of the larger picture houses. The Olympic, which is to be the name of the new theater, will be under the management of Mr. Komnas.

"The Diamond Miniature"

Fascinating and Original Two-Reel Pathe Release.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

FASCINATING describes it not only on account of its original plot and entertaining incidents, but in what weighs heavily on the merit side of a screen presentation—delightful pictorial beauty. The soft tints of interiors give a subtle charm to the settings of rare taste. These settings are so carefully chosen and arranged that the element of time evidently plays a part—the director took a month instead of a week to lay his scenes. That is the way it ought to be—and I hope it will be—with all good photodramas.

Equally good are the exteriors. Most of them are located in and around the park of a French country house, and they are very sweet to the eye. The grounds of our own village are quite as beautiful, but they are more formal. Those of the French are only formal—almost formidable—in the matter of approach. High walls guard them from the gaze of common people; tall iron gates exclude all but the bidden guest; footmen in livery receive at the gate instead of at the door; all is impressive to the outsider. Once within, once welcomed, there is something so delightful democratic about the wealthy French of good descent that they resemble our kindly and hospitable Western and Southern families. All this is obvious in the picture play and correspondingly edifying to Americans. We get acquainted with the people of our sister republic.

Scene from "The Diamond Miniature" (Patheplay).

Scene from "The Diamond Miniature" (Patheplay).

The plot is not intended to point a moral. It is ingenious in detail, but is so light and dainty that it seems to merely serve the purpose of transferring to the screen a series of animated pictures of an interesting phase of life. I do not mean by that statement that the theme is devoid of the principles of proportion and composition. To the contrary, it is a bright one, complete and well rounded, and that high essential of the drama, the pitting of one human will against another builds up an amusing sort of tension. In order to have the hero involved in a daringly impossible and highly ingenious struggle with an amateur detective the play is started at a gathering of the "Booster Club," an organization devoted to helping along any worthy aspirant for successful marriage.

Before "Booster Club" members will give their services they require a severe trial of nerve and courage. The hero goes it blind, promises everything, and is instructed to break the safe of his intended father-in-law and abstract therefrom a miniature of his daughter set in a diamond frame, a priceless treasure of high intrinsic and sentimental value. In order to make the task difficult, the "Boosters" exact that the deed shall be done at an expected garden party, and they inform an amateur detective that a designing thief has planned to lift the treasure on the specific occasion, challenging him to arrest the culprit.

To even up matters the club members provide the hero with a costly set of tools, including an acetelyne gas apparatus for burning a hole through the safe door.

The detective has no clue to the thief, but makes himself known to the owner of the country house and is given ample opportunity by the latter to do his work. His suspicions are at first distracted by a theory that one of the servants has planned the robbery, but he finally trails the right man. Finding himself followed, the hero hides behind a curtain, where the outlines of his moving form are visible. Satisfied that he has cornered the criminal, watches the moving figure behind the curtain—the hero has no accomplices—yet the safe is opened and the miniature stolen while he is watching. He has been ingeniously fooled.

The robbery is discovered, and an incriminating clue points to a servant. The latter is arrested in the presence of the host, the daughter, and the aspirant for her hand, the real thief, the hero. Rather than have an innocent man convicted of his crime, he makes a confession, gives up the miniature and submits to having one handcuff fastened to his wrist. A letter from the "Boosters" enlightens the host that the guilty man committed the folly through love for the host's daughter, and a reconciliation follows when she fastens the other handcuff around her own wrist. The tension, though amusing, holds tight to the last and adds materially to the sum of attractions in a very entertaining photoplay.

IMPROPER USE OF KALEM POSTERS.

The Kalem Company, as is well known in the trade, spends a large sum of money in the production of suitable posters to advertise its moving pictures, and has for a long time been very much annoyed by the unauthorized use of these posters by theaters to advertise pictures not produced or manufactured by the Kalem Company, and the company finally decided that it will no longer permit the use of such posters, and violation of its copyright, by persons not authorized to use the same.

The company on the tenth day of April, 1913, obtained a summons from Magistrate Appleton, of the Second District Magistrate's Court, summoning the manager of a theater on Sixth Avenue, New York City, upon the complaint of the Kalem Company, for violation of the provisions of the penal code relating to unlawful use of trade marks.

The case came up for hearing before the magistrate on the eleventh day of April, 1913, and the Kalem manager having stated that such use of the posters was unauthorized, the Kalem Company through Mr. William Wright, its vice-president, requested permission of the magistrate to withdraw the charge. Magistrate Appleton stated at the time that he thought it was the duty of the Kalem Company to prosecute the case and protect its property, but upon the promise of the defendant that similar violations would not occur in the future, permitted the Kalem Company to withdraw the charge and dismissed the case.

It is the intention of the Kalem Company, however, in future to vigorously prosecute the unauthorized use of its posters to advertise moving pictures not manufactured by their company. The Kalem Company believes that the public should be protected in this matter, and that all reputable moving picture houses will co-operate with them in stopping this practice of improper use of posters.

NEW PICTURE THEATER COMPLETED.

Greenberg Bros. have recently opened at 311-313 Market Street, Chester, Pa., a high-class moving picture theater. The theater, including both realty and improvements, aggregates an expenditure of $50,000. The house has a frontage of 40 feet and a depth of 120 feet. The place is thoroughly fireproof. Greenberg Bros. are also building a new moving picture theater in Camden, N. J. This will also be an expensive picture house.

AN APPEAL FOR FLOOD SUFFERERS.

National Exhibitors' League Seeks Aid for Picture Men in Ohio and Indiana.

SINCE the subsidance of the waters which wrought great damage to property in the cities of Dayton, Columbus and Hamilton, Ohio, and several other towns in Indiana, the executive committee of the Motion Picture League has been busy collecting information regarding the condition of the picture theaters owned by members of the league in the stricken cities and devising means to enable the proprietors of the damaged houses to resume business. Writing of the scenes in the wrecked cities, President Neff finds himself unable to adequately describe conditions. Every one is busy doing what they can to bring order out of chaos.

Regarding the condition of the theaters he writes: "Our committee visited many picture theaters and heard the stories of the narrow escapes of the sufferers when the flood came. Many had to run for their lives, saving nothing but what they had on their backs. With the exception of two, all the picture theaters in Dayton lost all their furnishings, everything being destroyed except the building, and in many cases the building is a total wreck."

As a result of the inspection made by the committee, the following appeal has been drafted:

"After visiting many places and personally consulting with members of our league who have suffered from the floods—some of them losing not only their entire theater, but also their homes—it has been decided by the National Executive Committee to ask your co-operation in raising funds to assist the members of our league in re-establishing their business. If they are given assistance at the earliest possible date it will not only encourage them, but it will make it possible for them to reopen their theaters. While there has been, we are informed, $1,600,000 contributed to the flood sufferers up to date, however it is only a small amount to be compared with what has been lost, and if pro-rated to each sufferer it would not exceed $100. This statement is made to give the public an idea of the magnitude of this great disaster. The societies who have charge of the large fund to be distributed are handling it very carefully, judiciously and effectively. The fund that we ask will be given directly to the members of our league, and a committee representing the press and the members of our organization will distribute the money donated, and the journals will print the name of each contributor.

"The committee to distribute the funds will be announced in the next issue. The money should be contributed at once, owing to the fact that we must act quickly to relieve our brother and to help him to re-establish his business. We do not expect to build a theater for those who have lost, but we expect to receive enough contributions to assist him whereby he may reopen his theater, although it may be a year or two before he will have his theater entirely paid for.

"We call upon every member of our league to give as liberally as they can. The reason for this call has been delayed because it was the desire of the national officers to first investigate and be sure they were right before they went ahead, and now that the investigation has been made and there is a positive need for contribution, we appeal not only to our members, but every one connected with the motion picture industry to contribute as liberally as possible. We assure all that every cent will be accounted for and an itemized statement made through the press to those who donated.

"We ask all contributors to make checks or money orders payable to J. J. Rieder, treasurer. Very truly yours,

"M. A. NEFF, President,
"C. M. CHRISTENSON, Secretary,
"J. J. RIEDER, Treasurer,
"G. H. WILEY,
"L. F. BLUMENTHAL,
"Executive Committee."

Supplementing the foregoing appeal, the Moving Picture World wishes to emphasize the necessity of immediate assistance. It will not be a great hardship for every member of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to contribute the proceeds of one day's business for the relief of those members of the trade who have been practically impoverished by the floods. Such sums might, in the aggregate, be sufficient to enable the picture men to resume. It is to be hoped that there will be a liberal response to the executive committee's appeal.

NEBRASKA EXHIBITORS TO MEET.

The Nebraska State Convention of the M. P. E. L. of America Will Be Held in Omaha, May 8 and 9.

William F. Stoecker, president of the Nebraska branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, writes that the Paxton Hotel, Omaha, Neb., has been secured for the use of the convention to be held May 8 and 9; also that during the two days previous, exhibitors and representatives of supply houses, etc., will be given a chance to arrange their instruments and appliances for exhibition. The privilege of using the gallery, as well as the main lobby for exhibition purposes, has been granted by the hotel management. President Stoecker looks forward to a very successful meeting. He believes that everyone of the exhibitors of Nebraska will attend the convention. All the film exchanges in Omaha are co-operating with Mr. Stoecker by sending out circular letters to every exhibitor in the State. E. C. Preston, secretary of the Nebraska branch, in addition, will send out official notices to every exhibitor.

A banquet will be held in dining-room No. 2 of the Paxton Hotel, with plates for 250 people, on the closing night of the convention. The Governor of Nebraska, the Mayor of Omaha, and M. A. Neff, president of the National League, will be present. President Stoecker is exerting all his energies and influence to make the coming convention a credit to the State of Nebraska. He has advised all concerned, by letter, to attend and participate in the proceedings.

ALL READY AT WHEELING.

Everything is now in readiness for the second annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of West Virginia, which is to be held in Wheeling, April 29th and 30th. The convention was originally scheduled for April 15th and 16th, but the heavy floods made it necessary to change the dates. Mr. Clem Kerr, who was sent from Dayton to take charge of the work, had to leave on account of the flood. Mr. George Spragg, president of the Spragg Amusement Company, of Bellaire, was chosen chairman of the convention, and the work had to be started over again. However, everything is in shape, and the Little Mountain State expects a convention that will be a credit to the picture industry.

It will afford the West Virginia exhibitors a chance to see everything that is new in the profession, as the talking pictures, the Kinemacolor and other novelties will be seen. Essanay, Gaumont, Universal, Mutual and other cameramen are expected, and the usual convention and industrial pictures will be made. Among the exhibitors will be the Wurlitzer Company, Power's, Enterprise Optical, several of the poster companies, as well as other branches of the trade. The entire convention is to be held in the big McLure Hotel.

SOUTH DAKOTA CONVENTION.

There was a meeting of South Dakota exhibitors held at Huron on April 9th, with practically all of the state league members present. The work of the winter before the Legislature was considered, and it was decided to have the executive committee prepare a general bill regulating the moving picture business in this state and have it initiated under our state law to present at the next session of the Legislature, so that the same could be voted on by the people. The same bill that the league presented this winter, with some slight changes, will be adopted.

South Dakota escaped any radical legislation against picture exhibitors or makers, although our Legislature passed more reformed laws at the 1913 session than any former session. The exhibitors will also initiate a repeal of the present State Sunday law, so that any kind of pictures may be shown on Sunday. The Bijou, at Pierre, is operating regularly Sunday nights, showing educational and topical pictures, and charging admission, which, it is conceded, can be legally done, although no pictures which contain any dramatic work can be legally shown on that day. C. C. Baker, of Britton, was elected treasurer of the State league; several new additions to membership were reported, and those present were encouraged at the prospect of a growing membership. The General Film Company, of Minneapolis, had two representatives on the ground, looking after business.

PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION COMMITTEES.

Arrangements for the big Pennsylvania convention, to be held in Philadelphia, May 27th and 28th, are progressing finely. At a recent meeting of local exhibitors the following convention committees were appointed: General arrangements, E. A. Jefferies (chairman), M. J. Walsh, Charles Segall, H. Hessar Walraven and George B. Roth; exhibit committee, Walter Steumpfig (director), John Greenbaum and Walter Jacobs; entertainment committee, J. Weinreich (chairman), A. R. Cavanaugh and John Smith. Clem Kerr has been elected general director of the convention arrangements.

The members of the Pittsburgh Local are working hard at their end of the State and will make a canvass for the purpose of getting out a large attendance.

LEGISLATION IN OHIO.

As briefly noted in the Moving Picture World of last week, the Ohio Legislature passed the bill providing for a state censor board. This bill was introduced during the final sessions of the Legislature and took the place of another censorship bill that was killed. Through the energetic efforts of President Neff of the Exhibitors' League, and the cooperation of Governor Cox, the new bill was hustled through just before the Legislature adjourned.

Six other bills bearing upon the motion picture business, but which were not favored by the exhibitors, were killed. One of these bills prohibited the showing of pictures on Sunday.

CONVENTIONS SCHEDULED.

Kansas State Convention—At the National Hotel, Topeka, June 2nd and 3rd.

Missouri State Convention—At Springfield, June 10th and 11th.

Iowa State Convention—At the Auditorium, Des Moines, May 13th and 14th.

Pennsylvania State Convention—At Philadelphia, May 27th and 28th.

Maryland State Convention — At Baltimore, June 3rd and 4th.

Mississippi State Convention—At Jackson, May 8th.

West Virginia State Convention—At Wheeling, April 29th and 30th.

Delaware State Convention—At DuPont Hotel, Wilmington, May 26th.

Nebraska State Convention — At Paxton Hotel, Omaha, May 8th and 9th.

MISS TURNER ENTERTAINED AT CINCINNATI.

On the occasion of Miss Florence Turner's recent visit to Cincinnati, Ohio, where she went to appear at the Music Hall picture show, the Exhibitors' League of that city entertained her and Mr. Lawrence Trimble, her manager, at the Sinton Hotel, where an elaborate dinner was served. Miss Turner also received several beautiful floral tributes at the close of her engagement at the Music Hall; one large bouquet of American Beauty roses from the league, and one from A. C. Dingelstedt, president of the local.

MOTION PICTURE EXPOSITION NOTES.

At a recent meeting of the exposition committee many plans were talked over. It was decided to award a prize of $25 for a comedy scenario to be used during the week of the show. This scenario must be suitable for either a man or a woman, and must not take more than five minutes to act. This competition is open to all, and the manuscripts are to be sent to Frank E. Samuels, second floor of the German Bank Building, Fourth Avenue and 14th Street, New York City.

Mr. W. A. Northam, general manager of a large circuit of theaters in England, is in New York. Mr. Northam is greatly interested in our coming exposition and says that, although he cannot stay here until July, he will surely return in time for it, and that most of the influential manufacturers and exhibitors in Great Britain are planning to attend the coming international exposition here.

Committees have been appointed by President Trigger to take care of hotel accommodations, railroad time tables, steamship lines, etc.

Letters are coming every day from exhibitors from all parts of the world, asking for more information about the exposition and convention.

Space is being sold rapidly now, and there is not a line in the business that will not be represented.

Some of the designs drawn by the G. H. Masten Realty Company look very attractive on paper, and no doubt the different exhibitors will have very pretty booths on the main floor.

The theaters on the mezzanine floor are being looked after by Mr. Samuels, and by the time he gets through with them they will be models of perfection.

ALFRED WEISS STARTS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGE.

Following the sale of the Kinetograph Company to the General Film Company last week, Mr. Alfred Weiss, the well-known New York exchange manager, has become a free agent. Mr. Weiss formerly conducted a licensed exchange at 219 Sixth Avenue. This exchange was later purchased by the General Film Company, and Mr. Weiss was retained as branch manager. In January of this year, when the Kinetograph Company was formed, he affiliated himself with that organization and ceased to be identified with the General Film Company. The Kinetograph Company did business until last week on the eighteenth floor of the Masonic Building, on West 23rd Street. After the sale Mr. Weiss decided to return to his old quarters at 219 Sixth Avenue and open an Independent exchange. He moved into the premises this week, but the General Film Company ordered him out, on the claim that their lease does not expire until May 1st. There was an altercation between men from the General Film and the Weiss employes, and Mr. Weiss, yielding to force of numbers, moved his belongings to the offices of Alfred Harstn, on the floor above, from which place he will serve his customers until he is permanently located in his old quarters.

Alfred Weiss is one of the most popular exchange men in New York. He has a great following and will no doubt soon be doing a thriving business. Mr. Herman Schmidt, his able and popular lieutenant, will be at his old stand behind the counter, and all of the former Weiss staff will be in their old places, just as though nothing had ever happened.

NEWMAN FRAMES TO BE DISPLAYED.

The Newman Manufacturing Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and 101-103 Fourth Ave., New York City, have contracted with the managing director of the International Exposition Company for space at the Moving Picture Convention to be held at the Grand Central Palace in New York from July 7th to July 12th. They will have on display some of the very latest ideas in brass lobby displays, brass railings, interchangeable signs, etc. During the Exposition the Newman Company will throw open their entire first floor of the New York branch to the use of visiting exhibitors, and every courtesy will be extended them. Mr. S. J. Newman, Secretary of the firm, states that his salesmen on the road report that a great many exhibitors throughout the country are making preparations to attend the Convention, and it will be the biggest thing ever attempted along this line.

NEW THEATERS INSTALLING HALLBERG ECONOMIZERS.

Carl Michelfelder will soon open his beautiful New Theater at Montclair, N. J. Through J. H. Hallberg "The Economizer Man," he will install a Hallberg 60 amp A. C. to D. C. Economizer, two Power's No. 6A M. P. machines with motor drive, spot light, bunch lights and full theater equipment. Mr. Hallberg is also installing a 60 amp A. C. to D. C. Economizer in the New Star Theater, Geneva, N. Y. F. H. Burt has taken the lease of the Columbia Theater at Bath, Maine, and purchased through Mr. Hallberg a Power's No. 6A machine.

Screeners Hold Their First Ball.

It Is a Most Successful Function, Socially and Financially—Kessel & Baumann Pay $1,000 for Souvenir.

HUNDREDS of gay dancers in serried ranks of sixteen marching across a ballroom floor, stepping to the strains of "Members of the Screen Club We"; over their heads and falling among them, interrupted in flight by tiny wires crossed at regular intervals, hundreds of unwinding reels of serpentine ribbon thrown by the applauding occupants of the gallery boxes; showering also on the happy throng are handfuls of confetti; held aloft by the men and swinging to the music are canes bearing Screen Club banners, by the women small parasols; illuminating and enhancing the charm of the spectacle are the flashing, dancing rays of spotlights—ribbon, confetti, souvenirs and lights all in the red, white and blue which marked the color scheme of the occasion. Such was the climax of the grand march of the Screen Club ball at Terrace Garden on Saturday, April 19. It was a scene to linger in the memory.

The hall was well filled at 9 o'clock. By midnight, when the grand march started, there were present as many as could be comfortably accommodated. Who were there? Well, it is a much simpler matter to enumerate the few in filmdom and picturedom who were not there. In the boxes were Siegmund Lubin, who, by the way, was much in evidence all over the house throughout the night and at the breakfast in the Screen Club long after the sun-up; King Baggot, Herbert Brenon, William Robert Daly, John Bunny, C. O. Baumann, A. J. Kessel, Herbert and Mme. Blache, Carl Laemmle, William J. Ivory, P. A. Powers, Jules Bernstein, Moe Streimer, Frank Tichenor, W. F. Haddock, Alec B. Francis, O. A. C. Lund, Miss Jordan, James Kirkwood, William E. Shay, "Pop" Rock of the Vitagraph, A. C. ("Doc") Willat, "Billy" Quirk, J. C. Graham, Harold Shaw, J. V. Ritchie, Harry Raver. Among other boxholders were the "Billboard," Edison, Ryno and Thanhouser.

Miss Swayne, Jane Gail, Lottie Briscoe and Florence Hackett sold during the evening many copies of the Screen Club Souvenir. This creditable production contained forty-seven pages of text and sixty pages of advertisements of manufacturers and cards of directors and players. The cover is of green suede. The edges are of gilt. There is a history of the club and sketches and photographs of the officers. There are also photographs of sixty-six of the members. The roster of the club as printed in the souvenir reveals 327 names, showing that many members failed to furnish the committee with likenesses. Four pages are devoted to sixty-six self-drawn photographs. The result is as startling as it is amusing. Following the "mugs" department are sketches of some of the manufacturers and "Club Stuff."

The grand march was conceived by Herbert Brenon and William Robert Daly. The former was in command of the marching hosts. In the front of the dancers were King Baggot and "Little Mary," as blithe and sunny as ever, and sharing the honors with the president of the Screeners. Others were John Bunny and Florence Hackett, Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe, Tom Moore and Alice Joyce, and Mr. and Mrs. C. Jay Williams.

Also in the front ranks was Exhibitor "Bill" Aldridge, of the Piedmont Theater of Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Aldridge, who is one of the big film men of the South, has been a strong admirer of the president of the Screen Club, but had never met Mr. Baggot until the recent gathering of exchange men in New York. When they came together it developed the regard was mutual. Mr. Aldridge made such a hit at the club and was so impressed by the "bunch" he met at the rooms that he made a return trip for the ball. On the night before the event a special meeting was held to elect Mr. Aldridge to membership. The popular Southerner said he would not have missed the occasion, and furthermore would be on hand for the second annual even if he had to travel further than from North Carolina.

From Philadelphia besides the players already named also came Charles Brandt and Howard Mitchell, of Arthur Johnson's company. From the New York studios came practically every prominent artist stationed in the East.

Frank Smith, chairman of the committee of ushers, did yeoman service all night at the door, and he was assisted most ably by Matt Snyder and Lee Beggs, who were stationed at the gallery entrances.

The program besides the grand march included the singing of the Screen Club Anthem, with "Bob" Daly on the platform wielding the baton. Following came the auction by Mr. Baggot of the first copy of the souvenir, attested by the signatures of many of those present. After spirited bidding the book was declared sold to Kessel & Baumann of the New York Motion Picture Company, for $1,000. The announcement was greeted with hearty applause and three cheers for the buyer.

Mr. Baggot next introduced Fred Mace, president of the Photoplayers, the Pacific Coast organization of the screen men. Mr. Mace made a spirited plea for the bringing into one club of all the film men and players—"make it a great, big, overwhelming organization, a world-around organization, the greatest ever," he said.

The excellent electric effects were arranged and executed by Joseph O'Donnell, electrician of the Imp Company.

It was 5 o'clock when the orchestra ceased playing. It was a half hour later before all good-bys were said. Then many of the dancers adjourned to the Screen Club for breakfast. The rooms had been tastily adorned with ferns and flowers and throughout the day and night were open to the women friends of the members. At the head of one of the breakfast tables was the bride of the president, entertaining a party of her friends—a charming hostess. Tables were arranged in all of the rooms; there were no vacant chairs.

Among those who came early and joined the survivors at the club was Samuel H. Trigger, president of the New York State Exhibitors. Mr. Trigger was as pleased with the occasion as if it had been one of his own division of the industry—and it may be said he did his full share to help the Screeners.

The ball was a success in every way. The wisdom of the committee in placing the price of tickets at $2 was amply justified. Had there been any greater attendance, discomfort would have resulted. There is no question, however, that for the "second annual" provision will have to be made for a greater throng. That this is so is due to the intelligent work of those who planned and executed the arrangements of the Screen Club's first annual ball.

A THIRD "RELIANCE."

As the result of urgent demands for Reliance films, Manager J. V. Ritchey has decided to make a third release. So the Reliance program, beginning May 12th, will be a release every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday. Mr. Ritchey has succeeded in securing one of the best known leading women in the picture world and is about to close a contract with a leading man of international reputation to be featured in his third Reliance.

A beautiful new studio is being planned, the location of which will be announced in a few weeks. The Reliance policy will continue to be the production of strong, high-class drama. Several prominent magazine writers are already associated with the company as regular contributors, and the Reliance's present slogan, "Great Dramas by Famous Authors," will be religiously adhered to.

MR. R. F. OUTCAULT VISITS ESSANAY STUDIO.

R. F. Outcault, one of the most talented and best known comic supplement artists, visited the Essanay studio in Chicago last week, and drew several pictures of Buster Brown and Tige, the famous characters made popular by him. His work at the plant caused so much excitement that Theodore W. Wharton, an Essanay producer, suggested that Outcault draw pictures especially for an Essanay release, which he did willingly. So on Tuesday, May 20th, the above-mentioned company will release "Buster Brown and Tige, With Their Creator, R. F. Outcault."

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

CHICAGO film circles have been much interested in the recent appointment of Major M. L. C. Funkhouser as second deputy chief of police and mentor of morals in Chicago. With the announcement the rumor was circulated that important changes would be made in the board of censors for moving pictures, which naturally created alarm, because of the damage that might be wrought by the inexperience of new members. On the initiative of Joseph Hopp, of the Standard Film Exchange, a delegation representing manufacturers, exchanges and exhibitors called on Mayor Harrison, Friday afternoon, April 18th, and pointed out the danger that threatened the industry. The Mayor assured the visitors that no sudden change in the censor board was contemplated and that the matter had been placed in the hands of Major Funkhouser, to whom he referred the delegation.

During the discussion between the Second Deputy and the film men it was soon seen that there was no disposition to introduce destructive measures. "With the approval of Mayor Harrison, I have already served notice that we will not pass films that depict crime, that ridicule constituted authority or that deal with vice or women of the underworld," said the Major.

Attention was then drawn to the smut songs in certain picture theaters, and the Major was assured by those present that they would work hand in hand with him to abolish such evils. Representatives of exchanges promised that they would go so far as to refuse furnishing films to the offending houses. The Major was much pleased by this offer. "That will give us a strong club over the exhibitor who tolerates the smut song and who permits his theater to become a meeting place for foolish girls and designing men," he said.

Major Funkhouser has invited representatives of the churches, the legal, medical, teaching and newspaper professions and of the reform organizations to meet with him to discuss the organization of his board of censorship. The date of the meeting has not yet been fixed, but the Second Deputy gave an invitation to a committee, selected from the film men present, to attend.

Serving on this committee are the following: Representing manufacturers—John Pribyl, Selig Polyscope Company; V. R. Day, Essanay Film Manufacturing Company; R. H. Nehls, American Film Manufacturing Company; representing exchanges—Harry Cohen, General Film Company; F. A. Farnham, Mutual Film Corporation; Joseph Hopp, Standard Film Exchange; representing exhibitors—R. R. Levy, W. J. Sweeney and John Duffin.

Major Funkhouser is not confining his attention alone to moving pictures. Theatrical performances, billboard advertising, cabaret performances, nickel novels, dance halls, smut songs and animal dances are included. He thus explains the object of the morals bureau:

"To stop crime before it starts; to catch the crime tendency and strangle it to death; that is the business of this department. We are going to try to improve moral conditions because that will decrease crime.

"In going about the job of regulating morals and moral atmosphere we must first find what it is best to do, and then do it with all the emphasis possible. Just now we are in the inquiring stage for the most part.

"The criminal history of Chicago in recent years shows that most of our criminals are young criminals. Our most desperate law-breakers are young men. Poverty and environment cause some of these young men to get a wrong start, but my study of the subject convinces me that a great many more receive their impulses to crime from the cheap novels of crime, from the moving pictures depicting crime and ridiculing all constituted authority, and from dance halls and theaters of the lower sort.

"Motion picture men appear to have acquired the idea that the proposed board of censorship is aimed at them and that we are out to destroy their business. Nothing could be further from the truth, and, incidentally, I want to remind the public that the censoring body has not yet been appointed. Let us not cry out before we are hurt. I ask the public to suspend judgment on the board of censorship until its personnel is made known and its methods announced."

Miss Kate Davis Praises Chicago Censorship.

According to a special from Washington, D. C., dated April 21st, Miss Kate Davis, president of the National Regulation League, has stated that Chicago is the only city in the United States in which youth is not subject to the immoral and criminal influence of objectionable moving pictures. Miss Davis had just arrived in Washington, after completing an investigation of conditions throughout the entire country.

Miss Davis continued: "Conditions in motion picture theaters in Chicago, so far as the character of the films is concerned, are practically perfect. I was unable to find a single place displaying pictures to which the least objection could be made. This is the result of a strict municipal censorship, such as ought to be adopted by the state of Illinois and by other states.

"Chicago is the only really clean city in the country in this respect. I tried in vain to find something to criticise in the pictures exhibited in the cheapest theaters of the poorest sections of the city.

"Some settlement workers told me I would find the bad pictures in South State Street, if anywhere. I visited all the nickel shows in that quarter. They were all clean, and the entertainment good. At noon I found the places crowded with laborers with their dinner pails, and they were getting something educational and uplifting, when otherwise they might have been in saloons.

"The credit for these admirable conditions is due to the police censorship bureau, headed by Sergeant O'Connor, and to the man who actually passes on the films. Sergeant O'Connor catches a bad picture every time."

Exhaustive Moving Picture Records of Panama Canal.

The Isthmus of Panama and its attractions are being filmed to an extent never before attempted. H. H. Buckwalter, formerly manager of the General Film Company's branch in Denver, is now at the Isthmus, representing the Selig Polyscope Company. He has with him what is probably the most complete picture making set of apparatus ever taken out on the road and used outside of studio work. Mr. Buckwalter was one of the first dozen camera operators in the world, and his present visit to the Isthmus is to make a pictorial clean-up before the actual opening of the canal. It will require 10,000 feet of film to cover properly the different points of interest and construction, and the pleasant features of every day life in the settlements. The films will be finished in about a month and will be released in the United States in about three months, coming just at a time when the world's interest in the canal will be at fever heat.

"The canal is rapidly nearing completion, and a full and carefully studied photograph record should be made," writes Mr. Buckwalter. "The films will be placed at the disposal of lecturers, as well as shown in all the Licensed picture theaters throughout the United States and Canada. The Selig Polyscope Company's branches in England and the continent will put out the films simultaneously with America. The ability to secure very late and accurate motion views of the great work will be a boon to hundreds of lecturers and within a very short time the effect will be noticed in the increased numbers in the audiences.

"Thousands would like to visit the canal, but they have been scared away by unfortunate statements made by lecturers who got the idea that the rainy season starts in February and that it is unhealthy and almost impossible to live here after that. It is a positive wrong for these inexperienced persons to spread such reports and deprive thousands of citizens of the pleasure of seeing the greatest work in the history of man. My short experience here of one week has shown me the astonishing fact that Panama has a better climate than Colorado and vastly superior to the summers in Chicago, New York or Washington. The people here can scarcely realize what it means to suffer with the stifling heat and lack of breeze in the north.

"I may not be able to show the climate in the pictures, but I certainly have found a number of very pleasant customs, sights and scenes that will promote even more harmonious relations opening of the canal. It will require about 10,000 feet of film to and feelings between the people of the two sections of America. There are some startling and thrilling features on the canal that have never been photographed, but there are also some exceedingly interesting subjects in the cities and among the people themselves and the pleasure in photographing them can scarcely be described. The Panamanians show a friendly spirit and warm interest in the work and when they get in the picture there is a wonderful glance of friendly feeling behind their smiles that will have an exceedingly favorable effect when seen on the hundreds of screens in the north during the coming summer. Did you ever notice how well pleased you were when you looked at a moving picture of some people away from home and found a pleasant smile on the faces? Notice it next time you go to a picture show, and then you can realize what good fellowship can be created by the pictures now being made. And for the canal and its wonderful accomplishment motion views will make millions of warm friends."

Old Theory of Stomachic Digestion Disproved by Moving Pictures.

By means of a combination of the Roentgen rays and the moving picture camera it has been recently discovered that the old theory of digestion, as it takes place in the human stomach, is incorrect. The apparatus employed in registering the movements of the stomach is known as the bio-roentgenograph.

The patient under examination is given a meal of digestible food, which remains opaque under the Roentgen rays. He stands with his back opposed to the rays and the camera, with a film considerably larger than the regulation size, records the movements of the stomach from the front. Instead of several exposures a second, about twelve pictures are taken in twenty seconds. From this negative a positive film of the regulation size is made.

The former theory of the movement of the stomach was that the food was gradually worked to the end of the organ and there simply emptied by the opening of a valve. The pictures have shown this theory to be utterly wrong. There is a contraction which divides off part of the food just above the discharging end of the organ, and, by the pumping and writhing of the stomach, the undigested food works its way up to this contraction and pushes it further along, as though it were a collar that was gradually being worked off. The contraction finally disappears after the portion of food is discharged into the small intestine through the pyloric valve. So the pictures show the stomach very arduously at work pushing the segregated food of this rapidly diminishing pocket through the valve.

The bio-roentgenograph has also great value in making diagnoses. In the normal stomach there are no contractions or collars, except in the normal discharge of food; but in the diseased organ there are added contractions which interfere with the pumping. When, after an unusually heavy meal, a feeling of great discomfort disturbs the eater, the stomach is protesting against new contractions which delay the passage of the food, and the pictures would show the stomach being tightly squeezed by a collar in the middle as well as by the regular collar near the pyloric end.

The machine has been used in Germany for three years, and one apparatus is already in America, the property of a Battle Creek specialist. It had just been invented when the late E. H. Harriman, railroad magnate, was in Europe before his final illness. Moving pictures of his stomach were taken in Munich and his trouble was diagnosed positively for the first time. Dr. J. Rosenthal, a famous specialist of Munich and one of the inventors of the bio-roentgenograph, has stated that, in all probability, Mr. Harriman's life might have been saved had the examination been made four weeks earlier.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Benj. F. Riley, who managed the Jeffries and Johnson fight pictures throughout the United States and South America, died at Henrotin Hospital, this city, at 8 o'clock, Monday evening, April 21. He suffered from cancer of the spleen and was sick only two weeks. He was 23 years old.

At the present writing it looks as if there will be a meeting of the executive committee of the Independent Exchange Company in New York, about Friday, April 25

George Cox, who has been with the Selig Polyscope Company in the capacities of actor and director for several years, has been engaged by the Advance Motion Picture Company, 122 S. Michigan Avenue, this city, to take full charge of their dramatic productions. Mr. Cox is a genial gentleman with a host of friends, and the World wishes him the greatest success.

H. G. Whitton, of London, England, paid a visit to the World office last week. He has charge of Alfred West's "Our Navy," and gave a performance at the U. S. Naval Training Station, Great Lakes, near this city, about two weeks ago. The presentation of "Our Navy" was received with great enthusiasm, and Mr. Whitton has received the following letter from George R. Clark, U. S. N., commander of the station: "The entertainment recently given by you at this station was very interesting and instructive, and well worth while in every respect."

N. J. Zurawski, owner of the Lux Theater, 35th and Michigan Avenue, visited the World office last week and subscribed for that publication. The Lux was erected at a cost of $50,000 and seats 800 people. The admission is 5 cents on week days and 10 cents on Sundays. Mr. Zurawski is well pleased with the volume of business done with Independent programs.

"The Road to Ruin" (American).

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

QUITE an unusual one-reel subject, of a mystic, allegorical character, will be released by the American Film Manufacturing Company, on May 3. The Western Company, No. 1, engaged in the production, and the members have realized all the possibilities offered by the characters. Warren Kerrigan has a rather thankless part, one that permits but small scope for the exercise of his fine histrionic talent. We hope to see Mr. Kerrigan shortly in some strong dramas where his ability as a leading man will be shown to better advantage. The woman in the case is well drawn by Miss Charlotte Burton, and the victims of her perfidy are strongly presented by Jack Richardson and George Periolat.

"The Road to Ruin," shows us the downward course of a woman vampire, who wrecks the lives of three men, and in the end join the ranks of the hopeless derelicts who long for death to end their sorrows. Two of her victims succeed in turning their backs on the ruin that faced them and in regaining the heights of restored happiness. We see them in the picture toiling up these heights, while far below, in the valley of shadows, we catch sight of the listless shades that people it.

Scene from "The Road to Ruin" (American).

The film is marked by fine photography and several artistic backgrounds. The scene depicting the road to ruin has been well selected. Indeed, the perspective of this scene impresses one by its uncanniness. It is a most fitting setting for the weird, ghostly residents of that land where hope and sunshine have forever set.

A CORRECTION.

On page 168 of the issue dated April 12 we printed a notice to the effect that the Dixie Theater, of Houston, Texas, has turned independent. This is an error. The manager of the Dixie Theater, F. W. Peters, says that he has no intention of turning from licensed to independent, for he is thoroughly satisfied with the service he is now getting.

Doings at Los Angeles

General Film Company Gains Many Theaters—Interesting News Budget From California's Great Picture Center.

AS MANY theaters as it lost, during the recent assault upon its business made by the combined independent exchanges, were regained this week by the General Film Co., in this city, and for good measure the company took over two or three extra houses so that the licensed program is stronger in this city today than it has been at any time since the first independent exchange opened.

The fact that so great a number of exhibitors deserted the independent manufacturers and flocked over to the licensed group in so brief a time makes the change revolutionary. Two weeks ago the only downtown houses in Los Angeles, which were showing films handled by the General Film Co., were Clune's, Tally's, Horne's, the Liberty, the Union, the Metropolitan and the California. All the other downtown houses were being supplied by the independent exchanges. The switch began last week when seven big and important downtown houses went over to the General within three or four days. They are the Optic, the Isis, the Plaza, the United States, the Novelty and the International. The Majestic, which is one of the leading theaters of the San Pedro district, and the Idle Hour, the principal Hollywood theater, made the change about the same time. The Independents still have the College, the Garrick, the American, the Shell, Mozarts, the Bijou and the Picture theaters, in addition to half a dozen or so of lesser importance.

Meanwhile, although the General Film Co. is prospering, A. P. Tugwell, president of the California Exhibitors' League is digging a deep pit for it. Tugwell has originated a plan which he has been explaining to the exhibitors all over the state as his position has brought him in contact with them, whereby he believes they may get back a part of the money they have paid the General Film Co. in the past. Before he became an exhibitor Tugwell was a lawyer and he has delved deep into the law relating to the fee of $2 a week which the General Film Co. charges exhibitors for their licenses. He believes that this charge is illegal under the laws of this state and that exhibitors who have paid it in the past can compel the exchanges to refund all the license fees which have been paid. His plan is to unite the exhibitors who have claims against the company and to bring a suit in the name of one of them. The case will be taken to the supreme court as quickly as possible and if the plaintiff is given the decision it will establish a precedent under which all the other exhibitors will be able to collect.

The members of the Edison producing company under the direction of J. Searle Dawley departed for New York this week having been recalled to the Eastern studio. The company came here last fall at the end of a long trip across the continent, having made stops of varying lengths at many cities on the way. Originally the intention was to remain here only for a month or so, but the climatic conditions and the variety of scenic backgrounds resulted in the stay being prolonged until this time. Another factor that had an effect was the fact that the company found comfortable studio quarters at Alamitos and Sixth Streets in Long Beach.

The Long Beach studio which the Edison company vacated on its return East was retaken on the same day the departing players moved out, by the Balboa Amusement Co. This company has one of the costliest amusement concessions at the San Francisco Exposition and was organized primarily to operate the concession. Included in its scheme is a theater on the fair grounds which will have a seating capacity of 4,000 and will be used for motion picture productions of magnitude, one of which will be the story of Balboa, discoverer of the Pacific Ocean. A large part, if not all, of this picture will be made in Southern California. In addition the company has decided to undertake the regular manufacture of motion pictures and will put on three producing companies at once—a Western, a dramatic and a comedy company.

In order to be able to congratulate "Pop" Lubin in person on his birthday April 20, Wilbert Melville, producer of the No. 1 Lubin Company in Southern California made the trip from Los Angeles to Philadelphia, leaving here April 15. Since the birthday will be past before this reaches print it may be added that Melville took with him a substantial sum of money which was subscribed by the Lubin employees in this vicinity toward the purchase of the loving cup which had been ordered as a birthday present.

Both companies are still at work although it is reported that the Grandon section at Glendale is soon to return to Philadelphia. The Melville company, which is being directed by E. B. Bracken during Melville's absence, will remain here for several months longer, and may possibly become a permanent institution. The improvement being made at the studio at 4550 Pasadena Avenue, all of a permanent character, seem to indicate that the company expects to stay.

Members of "The Photoplayers" Club entertained their women friends April 9, when the first "Ladies' Night" in the new club home was held. The rooms were filled with cut flowers, there was special music and refreshments and after the reception which occupied the early hours of the evening there was an informal dance lasting until midnight. About 200 women guests were entertained, many of them famous in the motion picture profession.

Richard Garrick, formerly a motion picture man, later a director with the Universal group, and now head of the Garrick Dramatic Exchange in this city, is reported to be at the head of a new motion picture producing company which is being formed. He says that he is not ready to discuss the subject. "The whole thing is entirely tentative at this time," he says, "and it may be that there will be no announcement to be made."

The new offices of the Universal Film Co. at Sunset Boulevard and Gower Street in Hollywood, opposite the site of the buildings which were burned a month ago are now nearly completed and will be ready for occupancy the first of next week. A week later the company will be serving meals in the new cafe which is being erected on the grounds for the exclusive use of employees. Another convenience which is being prepared for the actors is a barber shop.

At Universal City on the big Oak Crest ranch there is to be a general election May 20. With more than 300 permanent residents and a floating population of from 100 to 1,000 a day more the city has become large enough to have a government of its own. At the forthcoming election a mayor, a board of supervisors, a district attorney and many other officials will be elected. The republicans, the democrats and progressives have all signified their intention of putting full tickets in the field and the conventions are to be held within the next week. An exciting campaign is in prospect.

For a couple of days this week it seemed highly probable that the Kinemacolor company would have to suspend operations and lay off the members of the company. Something went wrong with a shipment of raw film from New York and the supply began to run low. Although there are no unusually big productions in the course of making at the present time, three regular companies working every day use up film rapidly. Cameramen were told to be sparing with the rapidly diminishing supply on hand and Producer David Miles nursed it in every way he knew, but finally the last foot was used. While arrangements were being made to lay the people off a message came from the freight depot saying that the new stock had reached town. The company was obliged to suspend operations only for about two hours.

A bill providing for the censoring of vaudeville acts has been introduced in the legislature at Sacramento at the instance of the motion picture exhibitors of the state. When the motion picture censorship bill was before the senate committee on public morals the representatives of the California Exhibitors' League protested against the discrimination which censored motion pictures and permitted vaudeville to go free. Their complaints resulted in a bill being introduced to cover the other form of public amusements, but, since the legislature is rushing to get through and has more legislation than it can possibly handle before the day set for adjournment, there is little probability that the new bill will ever come out of committee. WATCH OUT FOR IMPOSTER.

Many young women have called up the American Film Manufacturing Company recently asking for a Mr. Hart, who claims to be its manager. This party has evidently left business cards giving such misinformation in beauty parlors and other places where girls congregate. The Chicago police are after this man who is evidently attempting to entice pretty girls into Texas, where he claims the American is operating a company. The American is, of course, in no way responsible for anything this party may do and issues this warning in the hope that it may prevent imposture.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

IF SOME of the self-appointed guardians of the public welfare would spend some of their wasted time in looking about for some really good work to perform they could find a big field for their efforts among some of the so-called schools for the grinding out of actors and actresses for motion picture producing companies. The subject is not a new one, but each week there are developments showing that many of the so-called schools are becoming more daring in their operations. It is pitiable to note the plight of some of their victims. It is the old, old story of stage-struck people allowing themselves to become victimized by shrewd scheming people, who are always watching for opportunities to live well with the least possible effort in earning it, regardless of the loss to the victims. It is by no means unreasonable to ask the consideration on the part of the municipal, or state authorities of some measure whereby many of the so-called schools could be placed under official supervision. Hundreds of innocent young women and men, and many older people, who feel they possess some talent in the theatrical line that needs only the coaching of a professional to develop it and bring them fame and fortune are daily put in the ranks of dupes. Many of them are hard working people who have been induced to part with a good portion of their savings in the hope of bettering their condition, stenographers and typewriters form a large percentage of the victims and many of them resign from good positions to devote their whole time to the development of what some school manager has told them is a rare talent that requires only the magic touch of experienced actors and actresses. The anguish of victims created by the discovery that they have been duped has touched the hearts of many managers to an extent that a short time ago one of them wrote a personal letter to the manager of one of the so-called schools that drove the latter under cover.

"I do hope I am not too late," said a well dressed young woman, who entered the office of a motion picture producing concern in this city a few days ago.

"What do you mean?" asked the party addressed.

"Why, the try-outs. I know I am a little late, but I hope you will be able to give me a chance this afternoon. It is a matter of great importance to me, in fact I feel that disappointment would ruin me. I have been taking instruction in the ——— school for the past three months and the manager tells me I am now ready for a try-out."

"We have no try-outs here," the young woman was told.

"I do not mean here, right in this office. I am ready to go into your studio and make good. What! Do not say that. There must be some mistake. Why, Mr. ———, the manager of the school told me your company devotes Saturday afternoons to the trying-out of the graduates of his school. I have tried several studios, but was turned away because I could not show professional stage experience. Your company was pointed out as my final hope."

This young woman had given up a lucrative position in one of the western cities and came to New York to become a moving picture star. Her savings were almost exhausted and the grief she displayed when finally convinced that she had been sent on a fool's errand showed that the future had a most discouraging aspect for her.

"It is a shame," said the producing manager. "This is but one of scores of cases that come before us each week. The producing companies that do not draw the lines on amateurs are very few. Professional people are plentiful. Every studio of reputable standing has a long list of them awaiting assignments and it is like taking money under false representation, to lead non-professionals into the belief that a field awaits them. Even the number of professionals willing to work as "extras" exceed the demand, yet some of the schools tell their pupils that their lists are drawn upon by the producing companies. Some years ago it became necessary to place employment agencies under certain legal restrictions, and it seems to me that some of the schools for instruction in motion picture acting could be reached under these laws, as many of them promise the pupils positions on completion of the course."

Mayor Gaynor, Police Commissioner Waldo, Fire Commissioner Johnson and Street Commissioner Edwards made their debut in motion picture studio work one day last week. They figured in talking moving pictures and, while some people look upon it as a joke, the event will do much towards demonstrating the value of the pictures in the exemplification of the work attached to the various civic departments. Communities finding it impossible to secure the personal attendance for lectures of men who become prominently identified with municipal, state and national departments will find a valuable acquisition in such pictures. Chatauqua circuits and lecture platforms will be particularly interested in the development of this branch of the industry. It is to become one of the most important factors in the educational line. Each day brings forth some new development or undertaking, showing clearly that the day is not far distant when the motion picture will become as indispensable in educational circles as it has become popular in the world of entertainment. It is no longer a question as to how long the pictures will survive. Truly they are in their infancy.

And yet many leading lights of the theatrical profession refuse to look upon motion pictures seriously. Lewis Waller, the well known English actor, is one of them. Before leaving our shores last week he took occasion to say, "New Yorkers have very light taste"; that they do not want good plays, or even good comedies. He says they want light musical comedy or sensational drama to take the place of moving pictures, and if they do not get either they will take the "movies."

Mr. Waller shows that, despite his success upon the stage, he is not in touch with the pulse of the people of the world. New York is not alone in the "light taste" brigade. Reports come continually from all quarters of the globe showing gigantic strides by motion pictures and the conversion of theaters for their exploitation. Among the latest of European cities to fall in line is the City of Berlin. Five of the largest theaters in the cities have become picture houses. New Yorkers like good plays and good comedies. Their taste in that direction is as strong as ever, but the productions must be good, real good, to hold their own with the photoplays of today. In other words, the motion picture is setting the pace. That is why so many well know theatrical managers and players, as well as play writers and authors are flocking to the picture standard.

Watch the public sentiment and you will find an inclination to forget that photoplays, as they are more frequently called today, are moving pictures. The people formerly said, "I guess I'll take in the movies tonight." Now they either mention the photoplay by name, or the actor being starred in it, just as they used to say, "I am going to see Marlowe, Drew, or Hamlet," or some other play. The other night I heard a well known newspaper man say to a friend, "Come over to the Crystal. They have ——— billed." The interest manifested in the results of studio work is even greater than the most sanguine promoters anticipated a few years ago. The offices of manufacturers, film exchanges and exhibitors are kept busy answering inquiries by letter and telephone as to where this or that picture is being produced and it seems a certainty that the time will soon be at hand when the newspapers will devote space to announcements as to when and where certain photoplays may be seen. This initial step has already been taken by many vaudeville houses. Heretofore they simply announced at the bottom of their list of attractions, "motion pictures." Now they announce the title of the photoplay. Many people are now subscribing for the descriptive pamphlets issued by some of the producing companies so as to keep posted on coming releases and they also acquaint themselves with the class of service handled by the various theaters so they will not miss seeing certain films.

A FOUR-REEL ROUND-UP PICTURE.

"A real breath of the virile Golden West" is the way the Oregon Motion Picture Manufacturing Company describe their Pendleton Round-Up in advertisement this week. For genuine hard work it would be impossible to beat the action in these annual round-up pictures and American audiences, especially those in the Western States, never seem to tire of them.

"Pelleas and Melisande"

Great Drama Admirably Produced by Universal in Three Parts.

By H. C. Judson.

TRULY here is an encouraging picture. It is so; because, although it tells a better story than nine-tenths of the melodramas, it has been produced and acted to please the most discriminating lover of beauty and to appeal strongly, to that best part of the average spectator, which is worth while doing. It is a photoplay of Maurice Maeterlink's great drama, "Pelleas and Melisande" and is full of tragic poetry. The name of Maeterlink on the heralds and billboards announcing this picture will count for much. The world makes a good deal of such authors and their work and it must be valuable. For some reason, people are glad to pay for what they give and we promise the exhibitor that the average spectator, who may come in to see this photoplay will not leave feeling that any catch penny imitation of something good has been sold to him. It is a very artistic and lovely picture, a true three-part, feature offering.

In putting on the screen such a drama, something is almost necessarily lost and something is gained. It happens that, without words, the role of Pelleas loses something of its charm. He is the lover and is one with Tristam and with Paolo. Such characters live in their burning words, and one thing for which Producer MacDonald can take credit is in his being able to suggest so much of the poetry in Pelleas' part in the situation. In this, the backgrounds count for much; in fact he has found an ideal setting for the whole story in the poetic scenes of California. We can not deny that the photoplay is weakened a little by this absence of speech in the characterization of Pelleas; but it doesn't spoil the picture; it keeps it from giving all that some may expect. It makes his elder brother, Golaud, the most interesting character and we don't believe a better choice of a player to take the role could have been made than Arthur Maude. There is something royal in his portrayal, a dignity that protects it from all that is brutally rough. He is every inch a prince, a courtly, charming figure. Melisande is taken by Constance Crawley, an actress who has full command of herself and skill in utilizing her art. We have not been able to get the entire cast of players; but have only commendation for each. Though Golaud's mother should have been older.

The picture opens in the drinking hall of King Luchi, Melisandi's father, and we find Prince Challant offering to throw dice with the old man for the hand of his daughter. The vile prince wins and attempts to force his suit upon the high spirited girl and at the door of the palace is stabbed by her. Now we are shown the wood through which she is fleeing from the prince's wild followers. A scene, flashed in, gives us Prince Golaud's departure from his parents in their castle and now he, in his hunting, finds the princess whom he takes to the cell of a monk, the God man, where, after wedding her, he protects her from the three villains in well produced and dramatic scenes. The story is now set in and around the castle of Golaud's father, King Arkel, and his mother, the queen. There are one or two acceptable interiors and some lovely outside views including a glimpse or two of a beautiful mansion.

The marriage of Melisande was one of convenience; yet she loves her lord and is never untrue to him. But, meeting the younger brother, Pelleas, the dreamer, she finds a soul kindred to her own and a warm, but innocent friendship is the result. Golaud, at length, becomes suspicious and his jealousy, increasing by what it feeds upon, drives him temporarily insane. The growth of this distemper is developed by severely dramatic and wholly legitimate means, step by step to its tragic end and makes a tremendously effective story. Subtile contrasts are not wanting; for the tragedy is drawn against the background of the castle's pleasing and stately life. Little Yniold, son of Golaud in a former marriage, is effective in brightening dark moments with his affectionate courting of his father's attention, on one hand, while the old king's friendship for his daughter-in-law relieves her position as a newcomer, far away from her home and kindred without the help of other counsel. At the climax, Golaud finds his brother kissing Melisande farewell; for the king, to avert a tragedy, has sent him away. This embrace seems to Golaud proof of guilt and, in a sudden rage, he runs Pelleas through with his sword. In the next moment he knows that he has been unjust and repents. Harrison Del Ruth is responsible for the adaptation.

In the photography, as in all other departments, the picture shows finish and care. As entertainment pure and simple, it will rank very high; but it is also a most instructive offering and one that will appeal strongly to educators. Surely, it is worthy of being featured strongly and we feel certain that it will generously repay any reasonable expenditure to promote it.

Foreign Trade Notes

BRITISH NOTES.

THE activities of the American Producing Company seeking suitable places in this country for the establishment of a plant and studio, and to which I referred some time ago, are again in evidence. Actually there were no less than three names mentioned at the time, those of the Vitagraph, Lubin and Kalem concerns. Whatever the two latter are doing in the matter seems shrouded in secrecy, or it may even be that these rumors were accellerated by the appearance in this country about the same time of Mr. John Bunny in his Cockney sketches, the Kalem Company's Irish players and the visit of Mr. Siegmund Lubin. But now the Vitagraph have definitely moved and are shortly, I hear on best of authority, to establish new premises in London. Whether these are to be employed in the actual work of production is improbable, as the company already own a site in Paris much better equipped for the work.

The famous New York detective, Mr. Wm. J. Burns, is at present in London on business in connection with some bank frauds. He has evidently other business, for he states that he has written a real-life detective play, the only thing of its kind. It is, I understand, to be called "The Argyll Case," and the characters are drawn from people Mr. Burns has encountered in the American business and criminal worlds. The play of four acts will probably be staged at a London theater, but there has also been some mention made of "filming" the same story in which Mr. Burns himself appears under the name of Detective Ashe Kayton. I do not wish to attack too forcibly any contiguity between this and the foregoing paragraph, but probably readers can draw an inference of their own.

A novelty capable of extensive development is being employed at the Majestic Picturedrome, London. It is an appliance to the projector for perfect synchronisation between the orchestra and the films. As an illustration of the very fine degree to which the contrivance can be regulated a film is now being shown of a well-known conductor conducting the calisthenics of the rag-time couple on the picture. But in addition the conductor also directs the living orchestra of the theater and makes it keep time with the movements on the film.

Mr. Vijalur Steffansson, the Arctic explorer who is undertaking an expedition shortly to the Arctic under the British flag, is to include one or two kinema cameras and an operator in his equipment. Probably the explorer will make considerable additions when passing through the States on his way to Victoria, B. C., from whence the expedition starts.

Mr. Geo. R. Sims, a journalist and author of some note, has written an article in a London newspaper on silly blunders made by film producers. American manufacturers are singled out for a large share of Mr. Sim's satires. Amongst other instances he mentions that of a prominent New York company who, enacting an arrest incident in a picture they were producing at Dartmoor, Eng., caused the prisoner to be arrested by officers in the uniform of the New York police! Another Western company in a scene supposed to have a fifteenth century setting forgot to remove a line of telegraph poles, while attention and condemnation is directed on to one American firm who will persist in printing their sub-titles in a form of spelling of their own.

A film founded on Daudet's novel, "Sapho," has been officially banned in Leeds as unsuitable for exhibition.

Showmen here are asking "what is kinoplastition"? the new attraction at the Scala Theater, in London. It is really a kinematograph show without either curtain or screen. A stage with scenery and effects as in an ordinary theater are used and the images from the machine projected thereupon. The effect is remarkably realistic for the scenery and furniture give a clear, stereoscopic vista. The figures (which otherwise would be on the screen) appear to enter from the wings, use the furniture, and gesticulate with almost lifelike facility. Mr. Chas. Urban, of Kinemacolor fame, both in America and England, is the producer of the novelty in this country.

London will shortly enjoy another moving picture distinction. A huge motor-polo tournament has been arranged by one of the sporting clubs and the rights conceded to a producing firm for taking animated records of the game from a motor car that will follow the players. As polo in any form is not by any means as popular in this country as in America, I should forecast greater success for the film in the latter country.

Many gentlemen well known to the American trade were present at a meeting the other day in London which pledged itself to resist all the actions of the film combine. In order to put the scheme contemplated into operation one exhibitor proposed a general closing down of all picture theaters during June and July, but the suggestion was not adopted.

"The Picture Girl" is the title of a new musical comedy produced at the Gaiety Theater. It deals with the world of film and several light opera "stars" have been cast for principal parts. The first scene is laid in the office of an American film producing company, while to create the proper kinema atmosphere the third act consists of a reproduction on the screen of the second.

It is calculated that if picture palaces multiply here at their present rate we shall be a nation of blind people before long. When a gentleman in the trade read this he caustically observed that it was high time some other source than saloons ceased to monopolize the affliction.

The Lancet, the principal British medical publication, this week makes a furious attack upon the moving picture theater as a disease den, and urges sanitary authorities to give urgent attention to the matter.

Mr. Arthur P. Grubb, of the "Methodist Times," speaking before a religious conference, said that some so-called religious films were simply preposterous, but films such as "From Manger to Cross," reverently prepared, were valuable auxiliaries, but were rare and expensive. Mr. Grubb was full of praise for the Kalem company.

The Lubin Company's pictures of the floods in the Central States have been received here with an enthusiasm that I have never seen equalled for an American topical subject. I saw the films at an East Anglian picture house and in that district which was similarly water swept last year, the damage done was brought home in painful truth to many patrons.

After the recent International Exhibition at Olympia we are to have smaller local kinematograph trade exhibitions at several provincial towns here. Those at Glasgow and Manchester will no doubt be the most important.

PAULINE BUSH BACK AT WORK.

Pauline Bush, the popular leading lady of the American Film Manufacturing Company, is again back at work after a long and serious illness in a Santa Barbara hospital. The charming personality of Miss Bush has been missed from "Flying A" pictures for some time and her many admirers will hear of her recovery with genuine pleasure.

A cablegram from the Campbell Amusement Company, of Southport, England, to the J. H. Genter Company says: "Your Mirroroid screen sent us is the best on which a picture has ever been projected in the whole of Britain."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Approved by the Schools.

C. R. BLUBAUGH, of the Vaudette Theater, Fort Scott, Kan., gives a weekly educational matinee on Friday afternoons from 3.30 to 5.30 to which school children are admitted for the nominal sum of two cents, all of the teachers being on the free list. The superintendent of schools is a broad minded man, who recognizes the value of this feature and co-operates with Mr. Blubaugh by permitting him to telephone the program to the schools and having the teachers announce the same to their respective classes. The fee just about covers the cost of the extra service, the return coming in the tremendous advertising value of the idea, which carries the endorsement of the school system and sends each child out an advertisement for the house. The attendance is as heavy as the law permits.

Mr. Blubaugh is getting his weekly program into excellent shape, a uniform publication in brown ink on brown paper. He has standardized the type sizes with the result that the sheet looks like a real program and not like a type sample. A few outside advertisements are carried, not many, but enough to make it self-supporting.

It's Nic.

It's the "Nic" end of Hay and Nicholas, that writes the Haynic poetry and other advertising for the Haynic, Fairmount, Minn. He writes:

> We note with interest the editorial comment in this week's issue upon the free farmers' matinee stunt being pulled by the exhibitor at Weeping Water, Neb.
> We don't know whether Weeping Water is the originator of the scheme, but we first got hold of it through a communication from Gregory, S. D., to the projection department in the March first issue.
> We got the March first issue out of the post office at 10:30 and at 11 o'clock we were out soliciting support for the scheme. We have been running it three weeks, and it is the biggest thing ever pulled off in a country town. Forty-five business men each pay us 75c per week for putting on the matinee; we furnish each subscriber all the tickets he wants to give away, and they are given absolutely without condition. In fact, our merchants make it a point all through the week to get the tickets into the hands of the country people, the theory being that if the country children once get the tickets into their possession they are very apt to bring them in and use them. As a trade getter for the local merchant, it is proving the biggest thing ever attempted, and as a means of making picture fans of the farmers' families, we believe that it has any other scheme backed completely off the boards. With this matinee we are drawing trade that never came here before, and we are gettings hundreds of people into the house who never before saw a moving picture.
> By broaching the matter as a booster proposition for the town we were able to work all three of our newspapers to donate a half-page display advertisement, copy of which we enclose, and these papers reach practically every home in the county.
> We take off our hats to the man who thought up this stunt. It is sure a dandy. Any country exhibitor who has a fairly large house can do something for his town, get all the business men in the town boosting for him, and at the same time get paid for pulling off the best advertisement of motion pictures that has yet been found.

We Had It, Too.

This department ran a somewhat similar item some months ago, but we are glad that "Nic" found it and made good use of it. There are hundreds of small towns where this scheme can be worked. It is good for the theater, good for the business men and good for the farmers. In the long run it will be found that they will come in at other times than Saturdays. But Hay and Nicholas have another proposition.

Want Big Stencils?

They want a large stencil and believe that they can get them if there is sufficient demand. We have taken up the matter here in New York and can get 18-inch stencils for $25.50 per alphabet or $35 for the 24-inch size, brass plate. Meantime you might write Hennegan if you are interested. Here is the letter:

> Can anybody tell us where to find sets of stencil letters ranging from 12 inches to 24 inches in height with which to block out cloth banners?
> The small town exhibitor so often needs a good banner, but the price charged by the local painter (even when the town is fortunate enough to possess one competent to do the work) is prohibitive. It seems to us that sets of block letter stencils with which the exhibitor could quickly and cheaply paint his own banners would be a great thing for the small town exhibitor.
> We have taken the matter up with Hennegan & Co., but they assure us that there would be no demand for this kind of thing. We don't agree with them, and we want to ask every exhibitor who may be interested in the matter to drop Hennegan a postal card. If a sufficient number respond, Hennegan will make the stencils and we shall be able to get our banners for the cost of the materials. If you think the stunt worth while, drop a card to Hennegan & Co., and DO IT NOW.

Most theaters prefer to hire banners ready painted and where these may be had quickly and at a reasonable price it would pay to hire rather than to make and divide the cost among many houses, but places so situated that banners cannot be had quickly should welcome such a stencil. Meantime the single block letters on paper supplied by Hennegan can be used to good effect. These can be pasted on cloth or board and present a really handsome appearance, particularly if someone around the house can put in ornamental scroll work. If they cannot, common wall paper of a design running in strips will do very nicely for a frame and given a finish that will greatly enhance the appearance of the home-made sign.

Wants An Anniversary Week.

Nat Charnas, of the Opera House, Curwensville, Pa., writes as follows:

> This is my first attempt in writing your department, although I've read The Moving Picture World ever since I went into the theater business. I am a pretty young and green manager, being only nineteen. I am always on the lookout for "helping hints" from your department and I can truthfully say it has helped me wonderfully.
> I am enclosing you some of my dodgers and printed matter, I hope you will tell me wherein I can improve. This was formerly a five-cent house, but I wish to make a ten-cent house out of it and am doing so gradually. I think that way is the best. I charge ten cents on Saturdays, and on every Wednesday I have a "feature day" and also charge ten cents. This makes my Wednesday every bit as good as Saturday.
> This being the only house in the town I must accommodate all good road shows and also good vaudeville. Pertaining to vaudeville, I never take any "over the 'phone." I always run down and see the show if it is close by and if it is good I take it. In that way I very seldom disappoint the people.
> I contemplate having an "aniversary week." I will appreciate it very much if you will give me suggestions by return mail as how to run it. I would like to give some kind of a souvenir each night.

Some Suggestions.

We are sorry that we cannot reply by mail to Mr. Charnas' request, but it is not possible to conduct an extended correspondence, much as we should like to. In a recent issue we spoke of an anniversary week run by a Brooklyn manager who booked in a series of multiple reels and then got out an illustrated booklet, the advertising in the program enabling him to break even on the added cost.

It goes without saying that the interior and exterior of the house should be decorated, the front being made gay with bunting. The souvenirs might be postal cards of the favorites or a booklet carrying cuts of the photoplayers. With Mutual service taken, there are plenty of Kay-Bee, Thanhouser, Broncho and other specials for added attractions and we think it might be possible to borrow or rent some of the cuts to illustrate the program. If there is only a piano orchestra, three or four pieces might be added for the week and the exact anniversary day could be marked by special exercises with a soloist or two, and an address by some prominent official. Most of the leading tradesmen will come in on the advertising end, if the price is not too high, and the cost of the book will be reduced to little or nothing at all. Perhaps the Hennegan covers could be used to advantage, these being had in several different designs and at remarkably small cost considering the excellence of the color printing.

There should be a greeting, calling attention to the excellence of the pictures, the improvements made in the past year and similar points, winding up with a paragraph of sincerely worded thanks for the patronage of the public. Mr. Charnas will find plenty of material in the back numbers of this department if he needs a little help.

Work the curtain with a series of slides announcing the coming celebration. Get every man, woman and child in the town interested in the anniversary and make certain that all promised will be given. For a windup give a free special matinee Saturday with an all educational program. The present release programs of the Mutual do not supply much in this line, but the series of nature studies put out by the Reliance some time ago, will probably be available, even if not in very good shape, and enough scenics may be had. Give a two-hour show, say at eleven o'clock, the tickets being distributed by the teachers. Very probably the superintendents can be interested and their co-operation secured. It is surprising what a lot of noise can be made with comparatively small outlay.

Pick the Features.

We think that Mr. Charnas would find it easier to raise the price to ten cents, if he will leave the ultra-sensational alone and go after the really good things that have been put out. Such bloodthirsty specials as Petrosino will be far less likely to attract and hold the ten cent patrons than the Thanhouser Jess, scheduled for another night.

His Jess dodger looks more like a type specimen sheet than an advertisement. The printer seems to have put in a little of everything that he had in the shop. One reason for this is that the advertisement is set as an acrostic spelling, "Feature Day, Opera House." The lines are of such varying length that all sorts of lower case letters are used to fill out the lines. There is a knack in writing lines that will fit, but an acrostic in a regular hash of type is not attractive. We think that Mr. Charnas will improve as he goes along.

A Chatty Cuss.

Bertram I. Williams, of Ponca City, Oklahoma, sends in some advertising for the Wonderland theater, with the suggestion that we'll find some of the stuff in the back pages of this department. That's very true, but he puts back something in place of what he takes. This seems to be new:

TWO CENTS!

Two cents for a reel of pictures. Two cents for a song.
MUSIC FREE
and heat, light and the "House Cozy" thrown in.

> Four reels of moving pictures and an illustrated song for a dime. It's most as cheap as the air you breathe, and take a tip from us, you're going to be entertained. You don't know who lives in town till you see them at the theater. All the live ones will be there.

This is part of a chatty column advertisement of the house. One good like reads:

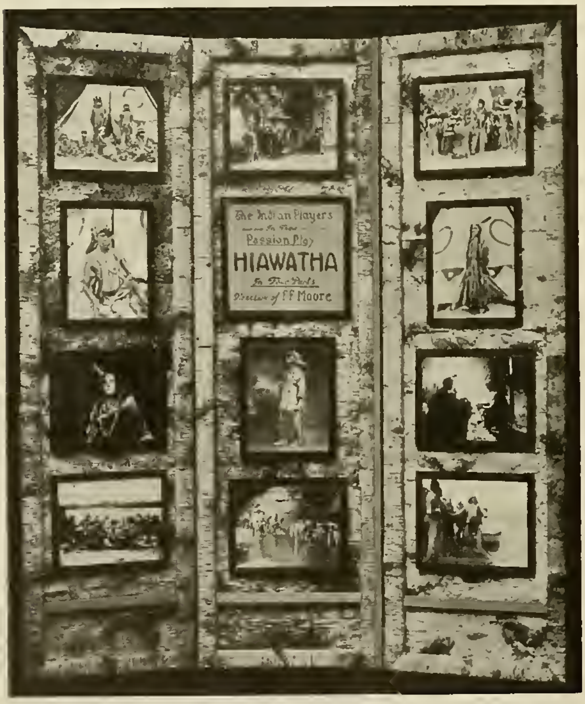
Another reads:

> The greatest comedy you have ever seen. Cast a glance at these snaps from a ginger-snappy film. They only tell part of the story, the film tells the whole story. Introducing sensation battle scenes and a topical subject into a comedy that will cause screams of laughter. An old veteran and a farmer.

This is what is generally known as the Howard Athenaeum style, and is most valuable if you can be chatty without becoming offensive. Mr. Williams toes the mark.

A Novel Frame.

F. E. Moore, of the Hiawatha pictures, is booming this notable production in many novel ways. One attractive scheme is shown in the accompanying cut, the photographs being framed in birch bark. The bark was peeled by the Indians and shipped to New York so carefluly packed that the moss was not disturbed and the frames give a genuine touch of the woodland to the lobby of the theaters where Hiawatha is to be run. Not all feature film handlers give proper care to lobby displays, but Mr. Moore is going to do things right outside of the house as well as within. You have to see the frames to appreciate them to the full. It's not merely birch bark but bark that's worked up properly.



All But the Title.

We like all but the title of The Movies, a paper published in Austin, Texas, apparently in the interest of the pictures generally. The Movies is not the sort of word that is going to help the photoplay business gain the dignity it deserves. It has been adopted from the children's street slang into general use because it is convenient, but it cheapens the picture theater and is doing more than most persons will realize to associate cheapness with the photoplay in which nothing is cheap but the admission price. The majority of the text devoted to pictures presently to be shown at the local theaters, though the dates are not always given. There is a reasonable amount of miscellaneous matter and the paper is clean looking and well printed. It lacks the snap of some of the smaller sheets, such as the Isis News, for example, but it interests and helps the cause. Only one theater carries an advertisement, the remainder seemingly trusting to the reading matter. We think cards giving the location, hours of opening, prices of admission and other details would very greatly increase the value of the issue to the managers even though most persons in a town the size of Austin may know all about the theaters.

The paper is still in its early issues and shows a gradual improvement. There is no reason why it cannot be made an important factor. One point of importance is that it gives both Licensed and Independent news.

Easy Guessing.

The Olympic theater, Louisville, Kentucky, doesn't believe in giving its patrons brain fever. Manager Joseph Goldberg sends in a contest sheet that carries this "puzzle."

. M . . . C . .
. . T . . . N .
M . . . . T . .
. . . N . . O
. . U . . . T
P . . . .

You are supposed to fill in the letters missing to form the names of brands shown at the theater. The first ten answering correctly get ten tickets each. A little study will show that Mutual service is used. We think the puzzle is a little too simple. It would have been better to have taken the names of the brands, mixed the letters up and then asked the patrons to form the letters into words. Anything that gets them guessing is good, but give them a halfway decent chance to guess. One syndicate editor never took a puzzle for his page that he could not solve mentally instead of putting it on paper, but they never came as easy as this to him.

Still Growing.

The Isis News, Trinidad, Colorado, still progresses. We think we mentioned that they had stopped commencing a new volume with every issue. The editor sends the first issue and the last for the purpose of comparison. We did not need that to note the improvement. In the last issue it is announced that the kiddies will have a chaperone at the Saturday matiness. There is a growing use of local items and pretty soon the city editor will have a reporter on his staff and the advertising man will be busier than ever. There is plenty of really readable miscellaneous stuff and the paraphrase on the postoffice entry that states that the paper is

Entered as first class Matter in

is something more than a joke. It's getting to be a fact. What Jack Nash has done, others can do, if they'll take the time or hire someone else to take the time. If you do it right there is no better advertising and with eleven advertisements we think that this publication is not costly, though it is well printed on good paper. We think Mr. Nash will be glad to send one to any brother exhibitor who will send a No. 10 envelope addressed and stamped.

Getting Out Copy.

Bertram I. Williams, "the man who makes his own words," of Ponca City, Okla., writes these words of sound sense:

> During my experience in the printing line, I have always found it to be a fact that if an advertisement is properly written with some regard to the various type values, and the printer himself, it is always easy to secure a good, well-set ad in almost any newspaper. I am enclosing you an ad from our leading daily here, and am also sending a carbon copy of the advertisement as I turned it into the office. You will note that in almost every case, the printer has followed the instructions of the copy. Of course, in doing this, it is necessary for you to be familiar with the type faces and sizes in each shop, but after all, that is not much of a job.

We do not think that many managers can turn in copy the way that Mr. Williams does, but there is no reason why they cannot learn. His copy reads in part:

> 6 col. 7 in. 6 pt. rule border.
> 1. WAR IS DECLARED (72 pt. B. B. Bold).
> And in this, the THANHOUSER COMPANY'S latest and greatest success, we have the actual battle scenes as they were taken reproducing the most famous battles of the BOER WAR! MARGUERITE SNOW and JAMES CRUZE in (12 pt. Cheltenham medium c. and lc.).
> 3. JESS (12 line wood gothic).
> 2. H. RIDER HAGGARD'S (18 pt. B. B. Con. caps).
> Wonderful story Transposed into The Greatest Fotofilm of the Age (12 pt. Cheltenham, medium).

There are six divisions all written in straight lines on the typewriter. A key at the bottom gives the layout of the advertisement, each box being numbered to correspond with the copy. It is a lot easier than hand printing everything to scale and with a sample sheet of type at hand it is easy even for the novice to approximate the choice of type. B. B. is an office abbreviation for Boston Breton, but the rest is self-explanatory.

The resultant advertisement is well balanced and well displayed. We think, however, that Mr. Williams is tampering with the truth just a trifle when he announces a supporting company of 8,000. That's putting it on a bit too heavy.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

That Inquest Club.

THE next meeting of the Inquest Club will be held at the Savoy Theater, Thirty-fourth Street, just west of Broadway. If you want to belong, witness the performances Monday evening, April 28th, and come into the lobby about 9:30. You will readily recognize the Coroner's Jury. Join them and come along.

B Stands for Boob.

We are favored by a splutter from a correspondent who signs himself B B and BBB. We think that B stands for Boob in this case, though we have some adjectives to go with it that the editor will not permit us to use. Were it possible we would have a cut made of the letter, but the typing is about as poor as the spelling. Anyhow, here's the way it looks:

> Dear sirs could you please tell me why so many of your plays are rejectd by the moving picture cos. They tell you they want the plays had enough and when you send themn, plays they keep them about three or four weeks then send them back and tell you they are in vailahle to them. As far as i can make out of it, poison would be to good for some of them, I think they are nothing but a dirty bunch of dead beats, robers, crooks and such pet names are to good for them, I got this right of off an old actor, that they will change your plays and, pruduce them andy way, aand i do beleive it is true. I would like to see a half a doz. or more of them choke to death , by getting thier films run down thier t throats. I would enjoy it more than thier movies. . kindly publish this in the Moving Picture World so they can see this and if they have any thing to say about it i my self, alone , will writ to ther amd give them a little of this sayings, yours very trully,
> B, B and B B B.

The Capacity for Care.

We just persuaded an author to rewrite a story. We pointed out that he had about seventeen words of leader that meant three had breaks in scenes and he had a couple of people acting as no human beings would act. He was strong for sending it out because he had written three pages of stuff and wanted to sell it. We presuaded him that it was better to write six pages of stuff to sell three than to write three and not make a sale.

That's the trouble with a lot of writers. The typing is a torment. It is a torment to most persons and our own idea of hell is a place crowded with strange typewritting machines that we have to work in turn, but since typing is an essential evil, don't be afraid of running the machine and don't be afraid to do it two or three times to get the story just right.

If a script sells it means anywhere from $15 to $50 unless it is an exceptional story, but let's take the minimum. Suppose that it is only $15. Wouldn't you work for anyone else for a day of six hours for $15 a day? Then, why expect to knock out a $15 story in an hour? If it doesn't look just right, pick out the flaws and do it over again. You can't afford to ship the first copy in the belief that it will be good enough.

In the script in question there were lots of bad breaks, things that people would not do, excess leader, badly handled scenes and all the other things that go to make for rejection. By revision the author got most of this out and bettered his chance of a sale a thousand per cent.—and yet we had to coax him to do it.

The capacity for taking infinite pains, the ability to do things just right is worth more to the author who is just starting than the greatest plot that ever happened, because he cannot develop that plot without taking pains.

Too Bad.

An author we know sold six scripts in eight days. Instead of offering congratulations we offered condolences. That doesn't seem to be a very nice way to act, but we think that for a comparatively new writer to make a lot of sales in a short time is about the worst thing that could happen.

In the first place the acceptances give the newcomer an idea that he is a world beater. No matter how sensible he may have been, the fact that he can sell six in eight days is bound to go to his head. He gets the idea that anything he writes is going to sell. He starts in to "crowd his luck" and the first thing he knows he is getting all of his stuff back and he gets discouraged and so far down in the dumps of disappointment that it takes him several weeks to get back into writing form again.

Even without this forced production he would, in the natural course, strike a slump, and fail to make as many sales as he anticipated and again discouragement would have him in its grip.

The man who has been through the mill learns to regard with suspicion the sudden acceleration of his sales. He knows that it is not normal, that back of the cumulation there is bound to be a slump to justify the law of averages and he is prepared for it. He knows his capacity for work and his capacity for sales. He knows that in six months there is bound to be an averaging up and he feels no special joy in the sales that come crowding in. The inexperienced writer who goes through the experience for the first time does not see this coming and when it does happen he sinks the deeper because he falls from greater heights. If you average one a week and sell five in one week, figure that somewhere ahead there may be four bad weeks waiting for you—and don't get excited.

The Synopsis.

Miss Hettie Gray Baker, who by the way is enroute to Los Angeles to study photoplay making at close range, writes of the synopsis, and very probably voices the thoughts of many others. This is what she says:

> If the synopsis is, as we are told, the thing by which the editor judges whether or not he wants the play, should we not put a good deal more into it than merely an outline of the plot? It is really an advance notice, a press notice of the play, and should contain not only the plot, but any other items which make it attractive. Hundreds of good plays are produced whose plots are, in outline, purely conventional, but which contain at one scene or another, unique photography, an emotional climax affording great opportunity to the leading man or woman, some little bit of business or twist of circumstance which lifts it out of the commonplace. Just a skeleton plot of one of these plays would not bring any of these facts distinctly to the editor's mind, and he would never know about them because the synopsis would present only a story resembling hundreds of others—and there he would stop.
> It seems to me it is well worth while using forty or fifty of our precious two hundred and fifty words in an opening paragraph which, like the opening paragraph of a newspaper story, tells the most striking thing about the play before starting on the plot itself. Such as "Scene 19 is unique in that......etc;" or "This play is based on a romantic incident in the Confederate secret service which has never before been used in pictures;" or "The climax of this play, Scene 31, affords opportunity for......etc."
> I think it is a mistake, too, to follow the development of the play in exact, literal order in our synopsis, merely stating one fact baldly after the other. Literary excellence, taboo in the scenario proper, apparently, still has a place in the synopsis, in my humble judgment. Of course, it is of no avail if the play lacks ideas, but it would seem as if good ideas clothed in attractive language are to be preferred to good ideas clothed in language that is strictly useful but not ornamental. I may be wrong about this, however. But I know I am not satisfied, and wish I knew some short cut way of attaining the perfect synopsis. I wish, too, the Inquest Club or some of the other circles would discuss this and give the rest of us the benefit of their conclusions.

This is precisely what we have said right along. The synopsis does not have to be a catalogue of scenes and the incidents in those scenes. It would not always be possible to get the synopsis within 250 words were that the case. We have repeatedly pointed out that in the synopsis alone does literary style help. The synopsis is not really a synopsis any more than the happily extinct "scenario" represented a scenario within the definition of the word. In clearer expression the sketch of the story is the advertisement of that story and is not, or rather should not be a synopsis.

It is not only admissible, but advisable, to call attention to the big point of the story even at a heavy cost of words. That's what you want to sell the story on. That's what you want the editor to see.

In our own practise, most of our synopses are very brief condensations of the plot, running from fifty to two hundred and fifty words. If we send in to a strange director we would use more advertisement. The synopsis of "Dolores' Decision" (see page 1124, issue dated March 15th) would read something like this to a strange editor:

> Her sister's life was more to Dolores than an offer of $70,000. It cost Richard Marston more than that to lose his train for the north when he received telegraphic warning that his opponents were raiding his pet stocks in his absence in Florida in search of health, but he realized that a girl of Dolores' determination would make a good wife for his son, and so he gave his consent to the wedding that followed the little romance on Snake River, Florida, where the Marstons went when the physicians ordered him into retirement. A drama, mostly outdoors, in pretty settings, with plenty of romance, the legitimate and effective use of a child, and plenty of appeal to heart interest. Dolores runs the motor ferry and she goes up river for the doctor instead of taking Marston down the river to the railroad. The child's life is saved, and Marston realizes that her decision was best.

That's only 157 words; 97 less than might have been used, but it tells all the real story and enough of the story to get the interest. If the interest is obtained, the plot of action will be read. If the story is what is wanted it will be taken, but the point is, that the editor must learn from the synopsis enough of the story to be able to decide whether or not the story is the sort he wants.

And don't say it is easy for a trained newspaper man to write a brief synopsis. The trained man was without his training at one time. He got the training through practise just the same as you can. Proceed.

An Investment in Film.

Here's a new way of looking at the proportioning of film to scene that may help the beginner to realize the importance of not wasting film. Instead of dealing with film at the trade price, let us suppose that we have a thousand dollars with which to purchase film at the price of one dollar a foot.

First of all we must buy some film for the title. We cannot afford to be stingy and use only a couple of feet. We must use the regulation ten feet. That leaves us only $990. But we must have a tail piece. This runs from five to ten feet. Most makes use ten because it carries the announcement that the picture has been passed by the Board of Censorship. Now we have but $880 for film for the story proper. Knowing that a foot and a second are interchangable terms, let us proportion our investment to the story. Like all good buyers we want to get the most for our money; we want to buy to the best advantage.

First we need to buy a scene one. Here's a nice little scene, only $90 marked down from $110. It looks pretty much like a bargain but let's look around. Here's one for $80, but stil we feel that $80 is rather much to pay for an opening scene and we look over the stock. Here is a piece that will do just as well. It costs only $22. We might have gone ahead and spent $90 when we can get something precisely as good for less and have saved $68 that we are going to need later on.

Here's a fine little scene two for $27. It is a little gem, but it will not be sold without a strip of scene three which costs $18. That's $45 for the two, rather more than we expected to pay. Let's shop around and see what we can do. Here's a strip for $35 that will serve both for scenes two and three. We're about to buy it, but we happen on a perfectly good little scene two for only $29. By buying $3 worth of leader we can make it do for scenes two and three. The cost is $32. We have saved $3. By buying closely, when we come down to the big scenes for which we must pay $40 and $60 apiece, we find that we have the money left with which to make the purchase, but if we buy the first thing that comes along in the way of early scenes, we'll find that we've spent the entire thousand and we have only about enough to half make the story.

That's just another way of telling you that if you can make a short leader and a short scene tell two scenes in the early part of the story instead of using two thirty-foot scenes, you'll save the film for later and more urgent use. It is not easy to tell exactly how the film will run, but you can tell about how long a scene will run and if you'll save the length for the real need and condense the early run you'll find yourself with a story more likely to sell—plot being equal—than the one that would run two thousand feet as written and yet not be good enough for a two part release.

Don't just write a picture. PLAN it.

"The Reward for Reading."

By Mrs. Beta Breuil, Vitagraph Editor.

Some years ago, when motion pictures were yet in their infancy, and the ten-twenty-thirty melodrama reigned supreme, the public seized upon the novelty of trick pictures, absurd chases, and fairy spectacles, as a relief from the dark deeds of the desperate villain, and the plaintive pleading of the Lady Gwendolyn. For some time, this class of pictures flourished,—but with the growth of the new industry, and the consequent broadening of its scope, the need grew for a real basic plot—a logical, well-planned, interest-holding story, the sort that would appeal to the ever-increasing number of intelligent audiences.

A new field of writers blossomed forth, timidly at first, but as time passed, growing in volume and efficiency. At the present day motion pictures hold an enviable place among the world's standard amusements, appealing to every class, from the simple untutored mind, to the most highly developed intellect. World-famous plays have been reproduced,—with more faithfulness to detail than would be possible upon the more limited speaking stage. And not only the most famous writers gladly contribute their share of plots, but from every part of the country humbler genius submits its efforts.

As a result, the different companies have found it necessary to establish scenario departments—where all manuscripts are considered as to their availability. Each company naturally has a system of its own, for this line of work; and in some cases, it takes from three weeks to two months and sometimes longer, for a script to undergo the whole process of consideration.

As time means money to the Vitagraph Company and such a delay in reading would cause the manuscripts to pile up annoyingly, the scenario force was increased some time ago, and all scripts are considered the day they arrive (arranging in numbers from seventy-five to one hundred a day), receiving sound judgment from two well trained readers. Those that are deemed worth while are submitted to the editor, the rest being returned immediately. The editor keeps only the best, and has the rest sent back. Those she chooses are submitted to the heads of the firm, who consider them and fix a price. It is only in this last stage that any delay is likely to occur—for the head-office is a very busy one.

Yet, despite this well-executed system, there are those who declare that their scripts have had no consideration, because they were returned with such promptness. In every case, where a manuscript is returned, there is at least one good reason for its unavailability—sometimes there are twenty,—and often nineteen out of the twenty are that it is just plain "bad!" Of course, every author has the idea that his script is a gem,—but he wouldn't write it if he didn't!—and the reader knows best the needs of the company.

A short time ago, one lot of thirty-one manuscripts were handed to the reader,—after a long day's struggle against a Monday flood of mail. The whole office staff groaned—for here were violations of every variety—No return postage, heavy colored cover-pages, gorgeously hand painted, brought personally, with explicit directions to hold till called for and to keep lying flat. The reader sighed and regarded them with a hostile eye—but rules are rules and she was conscientious—so these must be read. She took them all tenderly home with her and waded through them. As a rule, when manuscripts are so flagrantly heedless of law and order, they prove unworthy, but these were an exception, for out of the entire number, seventeen were returned to the author for various reasons, either something impractical in them, or not just suitable for our needs, and the other fourteen, some of them full reel subjects, and some split reel, went through with flying colors,—and are now in the hands of the "bosses" for consideration.

And the exclamations of rejoicing at the discovery of a new author of such promise, far exceeded in volume the groans at the receipt of the threatening pile!

Inquiries.

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of addresses to which photoplays may be sent will be mailed on receipt of a STAMPED AND ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

MARY ANN—Give a real signature next time. Miss Marie Weirman played the woman lead in "Memories of His Youth."

G. J. S.—The Kinematograph Weekly, or the Bioscope, both published in London, give the English releases. You can subscribe direct or order through the International News Company. Selig and Vitagraph use lions. Selig would be most likely to take such a script.

E. L.—We do not know the professional antecedents of the player named.

MRS. R.—We have no list of local houses showing Kinemacolor. Try the Proctor houses. We do not know where you can find the film named. We don't answer questions that mainly consist of a rave about some favored player. This is a question box, not a press agent column.

KAY-BEE—Those who have asked Kay-Bee questions that have not been answered will please ask again. We are glad to say that the Identifier is once more on the job.

W. H.—Miss Blanche Sweet had the part in "Oil and Water." Richard Stanton was Lieut. Bell in "Wheels of Destiny," and Miss Hazel Buckham was his grown daughter. In the "Scout," S. Clifford Smith played Bob Worth and E. L. Morrow was Lieut. Bruce in "Wheels of Destiny." You appear to think they are one person.

M. E. H.—Miss Hazel Buckham played opposite Joe King in "The Lost Dispatch." S. Clifford Smith was Lieut. Lane in "The Lure of the Violin."

SENORITA—Ford Sterling was Dad in "Saving Mabel's Dad."

W. J. K.—Don't try to be a comical cuss. Just send a courteous inquiry. The suggestion is amusing, but might be regarded as sarcasm. It would be well to write, however.

HELENE—Miss Gertrude Bambrick was Marie in "Near the Earth."

J. L.—The way to get into a studio is to ask the boss to give you a job. The probabilities are that he won't, but that's the only way you can get in.

M. T. J.—Write the Advertising Department, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Orange, N. J. We do not know Yale Boss' age. Perhaps Essanay will reply to your third question. We cannot.

P. R. P.—You have the wrong point of view on the states rights matter. The General Film and the Universal are both "big enough" to handle states rights. They have an established outlet for their product and so they call them specials. Makers not having a regular releasing connection must find some other plan to distribute their product and so sell state rights as the next best thing.

F. J. M.—You probably have as much time as we have. Take the recent issues and look up the Lubin release yourself. If you are certain it is a Lubin you can find it quickly enough.

F. W. L.—Next time you paste a clipping on a postcard, put another one cent stamp on, as that subjects the card to letter postage. Static, used in the sense you show, means the serpentine lines appearing in the film like tiny snakes wriggling across the screen. Static is electricity produced by friction, and is most pronounced in a cold, dry atmosphere. It is the same electricity you produce by stroking a cat's fur or rubbing a celluloid comb with a bit of silk. Film is akin to celluloid, though not exactly that material, and the friction of the film on itself or against the velvet-lined light traps of the film boxes, produce an electrical discharge, very tiny, but sufficiently strong to "expose" the film. This makes the marks that are sometimes seen in pictures. Thousands of feet of film are spoiled each winter by static, and that is the reason the companies drop below the frost belt when cold weather comes on.

H. M.—The companies mentioned are not now releasing, but they still have some sort of business entity. Do not send script, if that is the reason for your question. The Historical Film Company is not using outside scripts. We have not the casts asked for. We have stated half a dozen times that the Keystone wants synopses only.

O. T.—We do not keep record of the places where particular subjects are filmed. This is more or less a trade secret of the company. The Pilot Company has a studio in Yonkers. The nearest studio to San Francisco is at Niles, Cal., where Essanay maintains two companies.

ORCHESTRA—L. Rogers Lytton was Durand in "The Vengeance of Durand." We do not recall that he was ever with Edison.

E. L. S.—The mere fact that you took your story from actual life does not make it impossible that the same idea may have been thought out by someone else. If the editor says it is a magazine story, you will do well to take his word for it and retire the script. We do not read manuscripts not accompanied by a fee.

A. J. B.—Keystone answer next week. Romaine Fielding was Fernandez in "Courageous Blood."

G. H.—We do not place that title in the Vitagraph releases. Lubin used the title lately, but there was no Paul. The son was Roy. The part was played by Edwin Carewe. Irving White was the father. Perhaps it is this you mean.

D. L. W.—Miss Mae Marsh, now of the Biograph, is the player to whom you have reference.

W. H. K.—You might try Universal Western, Kay-Bee and Kalem, but the subject has been overworked.

Operators Union Directory, I. A. T. S. E.

NOTICE: Each union is entitled to have its roster of officers, meeting nights, etc., listed here one per year, free of cost. Preserve this list, as it will not be republished. The mail address of the secretary should be included in each list, as well as the time and place of meeting.

Moving Picture Operators, Memphis Local No. 144, I. A. T. S. E.

President, H. H. Huddleston; vice-president, A. Schwalbe; financial secretary, E. B. Grace; Corresponding Secretary, L. T. Williams, box 57; treasurer, J. B. Amis; delegates to I. A. T. S. E. convention, J. B. Amis; business agent, A. Finley.

To the Film Producer.

For more than four years the editor of this department has waged a battle for improvement in projection. For the first year this was done through the medium of occasional articles, a small handbook he put out, and a series of "Plain Talks to Operators and Managers." During all this time he has, in place and out of place, consistently and continuously insisted upon better operating rooms, improved projection machinery, and particularly better men in charge of projection.

During all that time he has had little or no active support from those from whom it might best be expected. It is quite true that almost everybody has acknowledged, in a half-hearted kind of way, that his position was correct and that there was urgent need for improvement along the lines he has advocated. But this is not enough, and I am going to give you, Mr. Film Producer, Mr. Playwright and Mr. Film Exchange Man, a little good plain talking to, but I want more particularly to apply this directly to the manufacturing film producer.

Did it ever occur to you, Mr. Film Producer; did you ever stop and seriously consider how very much, from your point of view, depends upon the moving picture operator? If you have not done this it will be well for you to think deeply upon this subject. Put the question to yourself something like this: "I am a film producer, and the permanency and future of my business depends absolutely upon how well my product pleases the public of this and other countries who pay a price of admission to be amused or instructed by it. If my product pleases them, then they will continue to pay the price of admission to see future releases, and the permanency of my business is established. If, on the other hand, it does not please them, then the future of my business must inevitably suffer. But in this connection I am placed in a peculiar position. I may spend any amount of money in producing what is really a magnificent film. It may be perfect in photography, accurate in perforation, and the acting may be splendid. In fact, the whole thing is beautiful, and, provided it be shown to the public as it should be shown, cannot fail but please them, even to the extent of arousing their enthusiasm, thus adding to my reputation. But what really happens to this magnificent piece of work of which I am so proud? It is sent up into an operating room to be projected by a $15-a-week 'operator.' Now, in our cities, at least, we do not expect the $15-a-week man to be in possession of any large fund of ideas. He may be able to successfully drive a truck, or do certain other things the planning for which has been all done by other men, of higher attainments, and in which he is not called upon to originate ideas. But in the operating room things are different. My actors interpret a certain role, and do it perfectly; but the moving picture operator, through the graduation of speed of his machine, interprets the actor. But, more than this, it lies in the operator's hands whether my splendid production will be produced on the screen clear-cut, sharp and brilliant, or whether it will appear before the audience 'fuzzy,' shadowy and dull."

Now, Mr. Manufacturer, just roll those ideas around in the top of your cranium for a while and see if you cannot grasp the idea that it will be well for you to actively co-operate with the Projection Department in educating the moving picture theater manager up to the point where he will realize the vital importance of perfection in projection. There are many things you could do to help in this matter, Mr. Manufacturer, if you would but wake up to your own interest and do them. Up to date, however, I am sorry to say you have done practically nothing, although, through the medium of handbooks and the Projection Department, we have done much for you and your business. I do not say this through any spirit of egotism, but as a statement of a fact which no sensible man will deny.

The time has come, however, to demand the co-operation of those who are being benefited by this work. Exhibitors are erecting beautiful moving picture theaters, some of them at a cost of many thousands of dollars. The store room theater is slowly passing. Soon, except in the smaller towns, it will be but a memory. The tendency now is to increase the price of admission, but while immense strides have been made in the perfection of projection, projection machinery, operating room and operating room equipment in general, still the results on the screen, while vastly improved, are not what they should be, except in a comparatively few isolated cases. Now, gentlemen, I want your active co-operation in this matter; therefore, in the language of the street, "come across" and let us all work together for the good of the business in general, and your business in particular, to the end that your productions be placed before theater audiences in the very best possible manner, and the business not only retain its already strong hold on the amusement loving public, but be placed still higher in their esteem and affections.

Lots of Help.

Chadron, Neb., orders a handbook and says:

> Business is excellent out here in this part of the country. We are looking for an extra good year for moving picture theaters. We are using Power's 6-A, getting excellent results, though we are always trying to improve. Have found several things in the recent issues of the Projection Department which were a lot of help to us. We think a whole lot of the department.

We sincerely trust your expectations of good business will be fully realized, and that 1913 will prove to be a banner year for moving picture men, not only in this city, but in other localities as well.

Carbon or Metal Filament Lamps.

While it is the intention of this department to use nothing but original matter, still occasionally something is found which seems to be well worthy of reproduction. In the February 27th issue of the Bioscope, a London, England, publication a correspondent asks whether carbon or metal filament lamps are to be preferred "in the long run," and the answer is so excellent that we reproduce it. It runs as follows:

> It is impossible, Light, to answer your question definitely without consideration of all the facts relating to the particular installation. For instance, as an extreme illustration, if electricity can be obtained at about 2 cents per unit it is very doubtful, under the conditions of burning metal filament lamps, if a saving can be shown. Consider the life of both metal filament and carbon lamps to average 1,000 hours. The electricity consumption of a 16 c. p. metal lamp, with an efficiency of 1¼ watts per c. p., would be 20 watts per hour, and so the lamp would run 50 hours for 2 cents. On the 1,000-hour basis, then, 40 cents would be consumed in electricity before the lamp failed. On a high voltage supply—that is, between 200 and 250—the price of the lamp would be 75 cents, and the total cost for the 1,000 hours burning $1.12. Now, in the case of a similar candlepower carbon lamp, consuming 60 watts, 1,000 ÷ 60, or 16⅔ hours, would be the lighting time with one unit of electricity costing 2 cents. So, for 1,000 hours burning, 60 units of electricity, at a cost of $1.25, would be consumed. A good carbon lamp could be obtained for 20 cents, which, added to the cost of current, brings the total up to $1.40. So we see that, under the conditions referred to, there is a saving of 26 cents, but, even admitting that the metal filament lamp is any more fragile than the carbon, there is little in hand for contingencies.
> Now do not consider that we are by any means advocating the use of the carbon lamp, but only enforcing the point of consideration of all details, which frequently are overlooked. Metal filament lamps mean low current consumption during business hours in return for high capital outlay. Carbon lamps, on the other hand, mean increased current consumption, but minimum of expense. There seems to be a popular fallacy that the use of the metal filament lamp gives the consumer three times the light at one-third the cost. This, of course, is not the case—one can either obtain practically three times the light at the same cost, or a similar amount of light as one may have been previously obtaining with the carbon lamp at one-third the cost. It is a fact that, through ambiguity of many advertisements, many householders or small consumers change from eight candle power carbon lamps to 25 c. p. metal lamps, and then wonder why the electricity bill is not reduced. Until the advent of the drawn wire metallic lamp, which has come into popularity only during the past few months, metal lamps were notoriously fragile, and, unless the greatest care was exercised in handling, a short life, even if a bright one, was the inevitable result. The new drawn wire filament is considerably stronger, and less liable to fracture. At the same time, there are conditions where its use is not advisable. The greatest disadvantage with the metal lamp is that, when cold, the filament has a very much lower resistance than the running normal resistance. For this reason, every time the lamp is switched on, a big rush of current occurs, which tends to rupture the filament. So, for flasher sign work, a very short life can be expected with the metal lamp and it may quite easily be more economical to use carbon lamps. Sign work, indeed, imposes the severest strain upon metal lamps, which, from the point of view of life, show up very badly in comparison with carbon lamps when fitted horizontally and in exposed positions. Nevertheless, it must truthfully be said that the position is exceptional where the metal filament lamp does not pan out cheaper in the long run than the carbon one, and so we think it is safe to say that you can have no qualms of fear in using metallic lamps.

The I. A. T. S. E. Convention.

The time for the convention of the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees approaches. It is, therefore, right and fitting that we now take up and discuss the various things which it may seem desirable, from the operators' point of view, to bring before the convention. I therefore invite all unions, or individual operators who may have ideas which they wish to discuss, to set them forth in the department. There is very good reasons for this. I am not a believer in the supremacy of the delegate. The delegate who goes to the convention without previous knowledge of what other delegates from other cities purpose to bring before the convention, must rely wholly upon his own judgment, since he is not then in a position to secure the opinion, ideas and views of those he represents. It may therefore be that he will take action which will be at wide variance with the views of the members of his local union. Now, there is no dark, deep, dense, mystery about these matters. There is no reason in the world why they should not be discussed in the department. We are not a band of anarchists, black handers or high-binders, but a body of respectable American citizens, holding a convention for only one purpose in the world, viz: to regulate the affairs of our profession, just as the doctors regulate theirs, and the lawyers regulate theirs, and the bankers regulate theirs and the exhibitors regulate theirs, through their various organizations. To illustrate, let us cite an example. Suppose a small union in some state, Texas for instance, conceived some scheme which it intends to present to the convention through its delegate. Nothing is known of this particular matter by anyone except the union propounding the proposition. The delegate goes to the convention and there springs the scheme. At best it can only be studied by the comparatively few delegates there present. The great body of members know nothing of it until it is enacted into law or thrown into the discard. Now this particular proposition might be highly beneficial to the union in Texas, but it might not work out well with the Union in New York, Cincinnati or San Francisco. But in the rush of business it perhaps goes through the convention and becomes law.

Now had the Texas union, instead of taking this kind of procedure, sent their proposal to the Projection Department for publication, it would thus have been placed before the entire operator membership of the I. A. T. S. E., and could have been and would have been discussed in the various meetings. Without a doubt many unions would have instructed their delegates how to vote on the matter, or at least the delegate would know what the sentiment was in his own organization, with regard to that particular thing.

To sum this whole matter up, the offer, or rather the request I make, is that the various unions and individuals set forth their views and ideas in the department at once, to the end that they be discussed all over the country and that the delegates go to the convention prepared to act intelligently and to voice not only their own individual opinion but the opinion of their local unions on the various propositions presented.

And now, to start the ball rolling, I will spring one of my own. I do not like the name of the organization. In my opinion it should be changed. It will be a comparatively short time when there will be as many or more moving picture operators in the I. A. T. S. E. than there will be stage employees. But, as the matter now lies, the name of the organization includes only stage employees. Personally, I am not a believer in long names. International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees is something of a mouthful. A man wants to take a good deep breath before he starts in to pronounce it. Now if we make it International Association of Theatrical Employees and Motion Picture Machine Operators, the first page of every letter would be consumed in setting forth the name of the organization. I think the name should be shortened. The International Association part of it is superfluous anyhow. It is a useless waste of good ink. I would like to have suggestions as to a short, impressive name which would include both stage employees and operators, without consuming a ream of paper to do it. How would Stage Men and Operators' International Union do? We do not need the "theatrical," because we all know that both operators and stage men are theatrical. Stage Men, Spotlight and Projector Operators' Union would not be so bad. Let us hear your ideas on this subject and on other things you think ought to be brought before the convention.

And now, while I am about it, let me finish this article by calling your attention to the importance of sending delegates to the convention. We all fully realize that the convention will be a comparatively small one, since the great bulk of large unions lie in the East, and it will be impossible for these unions to send their full quota of delegates. To send the delegate from New York will cost approximately $300; in fact, the delegate can hardly get through on any less than that sum, though I think $300 would be sufficient. Possibly he might do with $275, but it would be tight squeezing. Now even the most powerful unions cannot afford to send five or six delegates at $300 per. The idea is out of the question. But, notwithstanding the expense, every union should be represented—particularly, every operators' union. A vigorous campaign is now being waged, the intent of which is to thoroughly organize both the stage employees and the operators. Matters of the utmost importance will come before the convention and you, brothers, should by all means be represented by at least one delegate. I know it is a hardship to the eastern unions to send delegates so far away, the same as it has been a hardship to the west to send delegates to the extreme east. It is possible that I may attend that covnention myself, and, if so, I propose to try to get a law enacted either fixing a permanent convention place in some city near the center of population, or else define certain eastern and western lines beyond which the convention must not go. It is all very well for cities in the East or in the West to want the convention, but in either case a hardship is worked on one section of the country or another, as well as upon the organization itself, since it is, in either case, deprived of a full attendance of delegates at the annual conventions.

As a sort of a post postscript, I want to add that I, personally, am opposed to annual conventions. It costs approximately $35,000 to hold a convention and I do not believe it is worth that sum every year. My idea is to hold biennial conventions and use the money thus saved for organization purposes. The money that would be saved by doing this would very nearly pay the salary and expenses of five general organizers, and you will have to show me that a year's work by five general organizers would not be of more value to the organization than an annual convention.

Unions' and Operators' Attention—Important!

I believe I have evolved a scheme which, if the various local unions will lend their assistance in the matter, will be of vast benefit to operators, in that it will cause them to study and learn the technical side of their profession. I now purpose, beginning within the next few weeks, to propound a series of questions, three or four each week, and when the entire list is completed I can assure you that the man who has been able to answer them all, and answer them right, will have demonstrated the fact that he possesses thorough technical knowledge of his profession.

In order, however, to get the most out of this matter there must be something which will stimulate the individual to study and seek out the correct answers. To this end I would suggest that local unions take action and appoint a committee to whom their members shall return the answers to the various questions from week to week. The answers to these questions will be printed either one, two, three or four weeks after the questions themselves are printed. I shall begin with comparatively easy queries, but, believe me, before I get through I will give you some corkers. I should like to at once hear from all unions willing to take action along the lines suggested and co-operate with me in this matter. It will be, in effect, a correspondence course, and, as such, cannot but be of vast benefit to the men and to the organizations taking part. In this connection let me say to you that the time has come when the union slide ought to be made to stand for excellence in projection in the mind of the public. It is for the benefit of the organization and the individual member that this be brought about. If the union slide be displayed on the screen, and be followed by poor work, there is no difference in the mind of the public when there is a strike or trouble and the green man, who also puts poor work on the screen, steps in. The public misses the slide, yes, but inasmuch as there is no change on the screen its absence does not mean anything. If, on the other hand, the union slide is followed by the excellence in projection, then when the union slide is missing, and the projection suddenly becomes bad, the public will be very wide awake to the fact that something is wrong. Now, gentlemen and brothers, let us all pull together in this matter and make it a huge success. But I do not want the small town man, who is unorganized, to for a moment imagine that he is barred. This matter is open to all. Certainly the small town man can study the questions and evolve their answers if he wishes to. But the greatest good can be reaped where there is an organization and a certain amount of rivalry is set up among the various members. Possibly the union committee could offer prizes to those making the best general average. The answers of members could be posted up in the meeting hall each week, and then when the answers arrive they could also be posted, so that there could be no accusations of favoritism made against the committees. The posting of the answers of the members would also stir up much exceedingly valuable discussion.

From Memphis Union, 144.

Brother L. T. Williams, Secretary Local union 144, I. A. T. S. E., Memphis, Tennessee, calls forth the blushes of the Editor with the following:

> I hand you herewith names of officers elected to serve our local during the ensuing year. You will oblige us by printing the same in the Department Directory at your easliest convenience. The members of this union are ardent supporters of the Moving Picture World, and are also very fond of the latest edition of the handbook, of which quite a few are the proud owners. You have our congratulations upon the completeness of this book. It is doing more towards perfecting projection than anything else up to date. My brother operators let me tell you that while you may hear one talk of the handbook, you cannot realize its value until you get it in to your hands and read it. I myself would not be without it.

For all of which both yourself and the members of Local 144 will please accept my thanks. The list of officers appears in the directory at the head of the department this week.

Great Scott!—Next?

Mr. Joseph Boden, Cumberland, Maryland, writes:

> Permit me for the first time the liberty of encroaching on the sacred columns of the department. I noticed, in March 22nd issue a sketch and description of a polarity indicator. Would like to suggest another process which I use, and have used, successfully. It is as follows: take an ordinary Irish potato and cut it in half. Into the newly cut surface of one of the halves insert both wires of a circuit, first having stripped the insulation back from the end of each wire. Close the switch for a half minute and there will be a greenish circle around one of the wires in the surface of the potato, and that side is the positive. This, I think, is a quick and simple process.

And now, I suppose there will be a raid on the potato bins all over the country. I would earnestly advise the wives of operators to lock up the potatoes before their husbands use up the whole works experimenting. Joking aside, however, if the thing really works, it is a great scheme, and the most simple method of finding polarity I have ever heard of.

Shutter Blade Perforation.

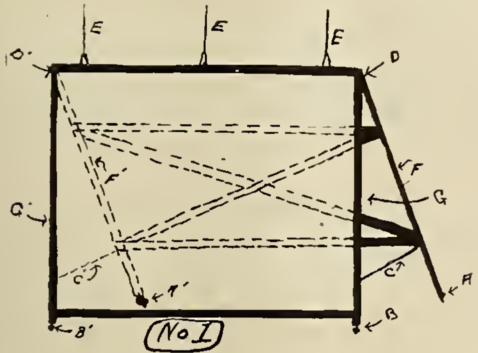
Tampa, Florida, orders a handbook and sends in sketch of a three wing outside shutter he has made and claims it reduces the flicker. The shutter appears to be nothing more than Power's Six outside three wing shutter, with three rectangular spaces cut out of each wing, the same being probably about half an inch wide by two inches long, the long way running with the diameter of the shutter.

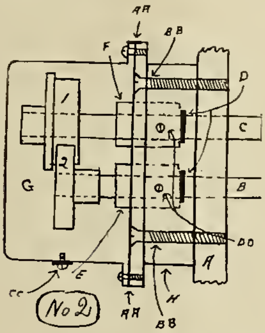
For the benefit of Tampa, I will say that all these schemes have been tried out and discarded long, long ago. It is quite true that such a shutter might, to some extent, reduce flicker, but it sets up other troubles not the least of which is the injuring of the sharpness of definition, due to slight travel ghost.

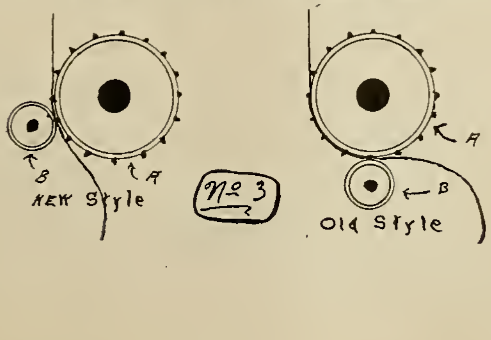
Various Things.

Mr. H. S. Klink, Canton, Ohio, one of our old contributors, sends in the following:

One of the brothers asked, some time ago, about a screen he could set on an angle and still raise it into the fly-loft. In sketch No. 1, I think he will find his answer. The black border G. G. represents a good, strong frame of wood. A A are sharp spikes fastened to legs F F. B B are strong casters set in legs G G. C C are ropes or chains made to any length desired to give the screen the proper angle. D D are heavy hinges to hold the back frame F F and the front frame G G together. E, E, E are lines used to raise the screen into the fly-loft. A little study will show us that, as the screen is let down from the fly-loft, legs F. F., containing the spikes, strike the floor first. This will have the effect of keeping the screen from slipping and at the same time spreading it as far as chain C C will permit. Sketch No. 2 shows the details of an oil casing for the intermittent movement, which can be attached to any Edison machine. A is the left hand side-frame of the machine. B is the intermittent shaft, carrying the intermittent sprocket and star. C is the cam shaft. Of course these shafts are longer than the original shafts, but are the same size. D are small collars turned on the shaft to hold bearings. E is the eccentric and F is the plain bearing. G is the oil casing. H is a casting made to carry the bearings. A A—A A is where the box fits to the casting, both surfaces being planed perfectly true, with screws provided for fastening the parts together. B B—B B are screws to fasten H to frame side A. C C is a screw and rubber washer for the purpose of draining and cleaning in the oil box. 1 is the cam, 2 is the star. D D are set screws holding the bushings, the same being headless. The sketch is just about actual size. There is also a hole in the top of the casing to put in oil. Now, why cannot the Edison Company put such an oil casing on their machines if some scrub of an operator can do it? It reduces wear and cuts down that awful hammering between the star and cam. Sketch 3 shows the old and new intermittent idler on the same make of machine, (Edison). Now it stands to reason that the old style is the better, since the film is gripped by more teeth and has a wider bearing on the sprocket face. With the old style, we get a steadier picture than with the new; also there is less strain on the sprocket holes.







Neighbor Klink has long since demonstrated the fact that he is a man with ideas. His tilting screen is very clever. The oil casing shows real ingenuity. Brother Klink has lengthened the cam and intermittent sprocket shafts, and has placed the bearings in a separate casting, with the star and cam outside, all of which is thoroughly practical, and, provided the star and cam set up close to the bushing, without any serious objection. His drawings set forth the plan very clearly, so that anyone can construct one of these casings for himself, if he so desires. Also these drawings were done in black draftsman's ink—a very rare thing, indeed—and are printed just as Neighbor Klink made them. As to sketch No. 3, I thoroughly agree that the old style is much the better, since the film, as Neighbor Klink says, has a much greater bearing, both as to the number of teeth engaged and on the face of the sprocket, all of which will make for steadiness. Moreover, the old style would, I believe, form a better lower loop.

Amperage.

Fort Worth, Texas, writes:

> I see on page 1102, March 15th issue, Brother Hayes suggests that I measure B's screen again. I still say screen is 12 x 14, but B projects a picture 15 feet wide and 11 feet 4 inches high, throwing over on each side six inches. Brother Hayes says he would not use as much current as A. Now that is not the point. My argument is, which of the two uses, or should use the most current to get the same, or as near as possible, the same illumination, A having a mirror screen 9 x 12, and B 12 x 14, but the real size of the picture is 15 x 11.25. If you look at my other letter you will see I said B projects 168 or 174 square feet and A 108 square feet. I still contend that A should use but 22 amperes or, to be more exact, 21.6 amperes. B should use 33.8 amperes on d. c., or mercury arc rectifier on a. c. A should use 32.2 amperes and B 50.7 amperes. B then should use 11.2 amperes more than A on d. c., and 18.3 on a. c., on the same kind of projection surface. But as A has a much better screen than B, B would only be using about .216 amperes to the square foot if he used 15 amperes more than A. What I was trying to get at it this: A covers 108 square feet of mirror screen, at about 90 feet, while B covers 169 square feet at 63 feet. Who should use the more current, and how much more should B use to get the same illumination as A? You can imagine A using 2.6 amperes on a mirror screen and B using less than A and projecting 61 square feet more than A. I am sending a few samples of film containing "high class" patches. Samples No. 1 and No. 2 you cannot keep in frame without it showing a dividing line. Sample No. 3: imagine running a comedy (Crystal), and see the camera man's feet hanging over the lens for about 15 feet at the beginning and the ending, thus spoiling 30 or 40 feet of film. Why not devote a half a page to camera men? It would help the projecting machine operators a whole lot. Anytime I write for information or suggestions, or write the Projection Department, you are at liberty to use my name.

I wouldn't doubt your word, brother, but all the same I smelt fish when I read your explanation of the picture size. As to the cameramen, some of them most certainly have a few things to learn. The pictures were beauties—of their kind.

Aluminum Screen.

Brother Sargent, Editor of Advertising for Exhibitors' Department, submitted to me a sample of what is supposed to be an aluminum coated screen, made by some company on 14th Street, New York City. Mr. Chaney, Hillsboro, Ohio, had sent the same to him asking him to get my opinion of it.

Once and for all, let me say in the most positive manner that I absolutely will not express a favorable opinion upon things of this kind until the manufacturer has proven to me that his goods are what he claims them to be. In the present case, the surface of the screen is excellent. Its coating appears to be aluminum, but this may not be the fact. However, I would advise all purchasers of aluminum screens to insist upon an iron-clad guarantee as to two things, viz: (a) That the screen will not tarnish; that is to say, it will retain its original color and brilliancy, and (b) that if it is of rough surface type, which will catch and hold dirt, it can be readily cleaned.

That Screen Problem.

Philadelphia, Pa., contributes the following concerning Fort Worth's screen problem, or rather, light problem.

> The illumination of the picture depends partly upon everything the current might pass from the time it leaves the power plant until it reaches the arc, and what the light must pass from the time it leaves the arc until it strikes the screen. Aside from this, B's picture is the wrong size and Fort Worth does not say what kind of current is being used by A or B; a. c. or d. c., nor does he give the voltage or cycles of the current. There are also other things which have a bearing, such as the kind of carbons, their size and how they are set, kind of machine, shutters, condensing lenses, etc., resistance, wiring, how the inside of the theater is painted or decorated and whether the screen is outlined in black; also whether the lamp is in good condition and the lenses clean, the speed of the intermittent, etc.

Well, Philadelphia, most of those who have answered this problem have erred in not naming all the things which might have a bearing. You go to the other extreme. In such a problem we must assume the current and the theater decorations to be essentially the same in each case. However, your letter is of value, since it calls attention to the very large number of things which may possibly have to do with projection light in one way or another.

Soapstone for Condensers.

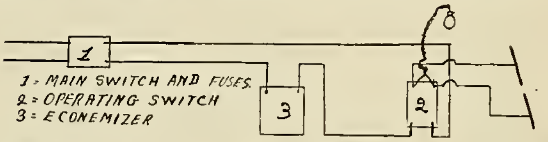
> I am operating in a place which just opened five weeks ago. It is called "Fitzhugh Hall" and used to be a bowling alley with a picture show in one end, seating 300, but has been remodeled to seat 1,000. We have a throw of 138 feet, and project a picture 20 feet wide, on a painted screen. On one machine I have a Power's 75 ampere grid rheostat; on the other one Power's 25 ampere grid rheostat and one Power's coil rheostat, using six coils. I apparently get the same light on both machines. Am using two Power's Six machines with the 6A lamp and lamphouse, using ¾ inch Bio carbons. These machines are proving entirely satisfactory. I have considerable trouble with breaking condensers. The first three weeks I tried several ways to prevent this trouble, and finally got a soapstone 7 x 9 x 1¼ inches, and cut two inches off the long way, making it seven inches square. Drilled a hole 1½ inches deep in one end and attached an eight inch rod. Drilled a hole in the top of the lamphouse ¾ of an inch from the front and in the middle sideways. Attached a rope and pulley with a weight on the other end. I let the soapstone down in front of the condensers, and light the lamp for about twenty minutes before starting the machine. As soon as I pull the switch I let the soapstone down over the condensers. I also completely packed the condenser jacket with asbestos. In three weeks running, without the soapstone, I broke twenty-one condensers. In the two weeks I used the soapstone I haven't broken one. I would like to get in communication with Film Exchange or theater manager in Missoula, Montana. That is my reason for giving my full address.

The soapstone protector is passed along to the department readers for consideration. You do not say whether the two rheostats are connected in multiple or in series, but inasmuch as only six coils of the coil rheostat are in use, I assume it is in series. Most certainly there is something twisted with your resistance, since, if all those rheostats were made to work on the same voltage, the thing does not stack up right at all. As to the back number of the World you ask for, send ten cents in stamps and it will be forwarded to you.

A Joke On All Of Us.

On page 46, January 4th issue, in a letter from Hays, Kan., the following sketch appears. Now I am going to be honest enough to admit that I myself did not notice anything wrong, though I re-drew the thing. Apparently nobody else has noticed it, except one man who asked me last week if I were asleep or day-dreaming when I passed that particular thing. Now, some of you fellows wake up and tell me what is the matter with it.



Has a Booth.

Park Falls, Wisconsin, contributes the following:

> I have both of your handbooks and most certainly would not be without them. Is it possible for one to get one of the first ones, and if so, what is the price? Some time ago, I had occasion to use colored slides and seeing some colored light globes started me thinking. I took the cover glass off a few old slides and dipped them in lamp color solution. It worked fine. Is there any device, other than a motor generator set, for reducing d. c. from line to arc voltage? We have some theater here. The booth (I use the word "booth" for that is what it is) is about 5½ feet high by 4 feet 6 inches by 5 feet 4 inches. The operator has to stoop when he stands up.

It is a strange thing that theater managers will expect results from a man working in a cracker box of that kind. As a matter of fact, theater monogers do not expect anything of the kind. They know better than to expect results under such conditions. It is inhuman to ask a man to work through the hot summer months, jammed into a little 4 x 5 space beside what is, in effect, a heating stove. Park Falls also, for our private ear, gives some other interesting information about the "operator" employed. Among other things, it seems that "Jimmy, the usher" visits a nearby saloon every once in a while, carrying a very suspicious looking lard pail. If this is true and that lard pail reaches the operator, that is an elegant combination. Inflammable film—arc-light—can of beer. Fine! Let us hope, however, that either the "manager" or "Jimmy-the-usher" consume the contents of the lard can instead of passing it up to the "operator." The small handbook was a vest pocket affair. I don't know where you could get one now. No, a motor generator is the only thing.

Oil Stains Film.

Mr. W. A. Daniels, National Waterproof Film Co., writes:

> In your answer to "Oily Film" complaint, March 22nd issue, you say this trouble can be avoided by kicking the Exchange man. I believe it will be difficult to find any part of the anatomy of an exchange man that has not metaphorically been hit by kicks because of this trouble with oily films, but for all of this the oil continues. You know, of course, that some films are easily stained with oils and that once on some oils can never be removed, so, instead of suggesting ineffectual kicks as a remedy, why not tell the unenlightened, that the only real remedy for oily films lies in having films waterproofed, for oil cannot then reach the emulsion of a waterproof film, and oil which gets on waterproof films can be easily washed away with warm, soapy water and a rag?

In the first place, Neighbor Daniels, I do not suggest kicking the exchange man. What I said was "put up a kick to the exchange man" and my idea was that the exchange man would kick the operator who is guilty of flooding his machine with thin oil, which flies off and becomes smeared on the film. As to the waterproofing of films, you have never yet, my dear Mr. Daniels, taken the trouble to prove to me that the waterproofing process has not some serious objections. Others have told me it has. Now, my mind is open on this proposition, but the waterproofing process has been in use for a matter of three of four years, and has not been generally adopted, which is pretty good evidence that there are serious objections to it. Now, Friend Daniels, this is not a knock, but simply a statement of fact from my point of view. If you can show me and prove to me that your process is wholly and entirely good, and has not serious objections, I most certainly will recommend its adoption, but I say and say again that all manufacturers, no matter who they may be, who want the endorsement of this department or of its editor, for their product, must prove to me that their product is all they claim for it.

Colored Ink Drawings.

Mr. Bertram Williams, Ponca City, Okla., sends in a very interesting letter and five drawings, none of which are available for publication because the lettering, and much of the drawing, is done in colored ink. I have told you before that the only kind of a drawing we will reproduce is that done in black. Brother Williams' letter contains two original ideas. One is he has removed the framing lever of his Edison Exhibition Model and placed it at right angles to its original position by the use of bevel gears, so that it extends out on the operating side of the machine, the lever itself being reduced to fourteen inches in length. The other idea has to do with some sort of a tension for the handling of large reels of film, but the drawings are largely in color, and anyhow I do not fully understand his idea. Come again, Brother Williams, but be a little plainer and cut out that colored ink business, especially blue writing fluid, which will not reproduce at all.

Who is the Inventor?

Mr. C. J. Kaho, Trinidad, Colorado, who recently welded the point on a broken star, has an idea that Mr. Edison did not invent talking pictures. He sets things forth as follows:

> Thanks for the information you gave me through the department. I welded the point on my star as follows: at the Novelty Works I attempted to fix the point so as to get a day or two's work out of it until I could get another. Their machinist told me he thought he could fix me up, so I let him go to it. The point was welded on with an Autogenous Welding Torch, using saltine and crude oil for flux. You said, in a recent issue, that you were not ready to pass an opinion as to Mr. Edison's latest invention, the talking motion pictures. Let me say that if Mr. Edison is the inventor of talking motion picture, which he is not, then who is this man Captain Kouade, of Paris—see article, July 31st, 1909, issue?

So far as I know, Brother Kaho, Mr. Edison never claimed to be the inventor of talking motion pictures. What he has done is to invent a method of reproducing the sound so that the words of the actors are recorded on the phonograph record as the actual act proceeds, and in this he has been marvelously successful. For this part of the invention, most certainly he is entitled to great credit. He has also invented a method of synchronizing the phonograph with the picture, but of this I do not think so much, since the actual synchronism still, to all intents and purposes, lies in the hands of the operator, and as long as the operator controls synchronism, talking moving pictures cannot, in my opinion, be pronounced a success except for the projection of an occasional short film during the running of which the entire attention of the operator can be closely concentrated on the synchronism. To put the ordinary operator in charge of such a machine and expect him to project one film after the other for hours and keep the thing in even approximately exact synchronism, would be expecting the impossible. It simply could not be done. I do believe this, however: Mr. Edison's method of reproducing the sound marks an immense step in advance towards real talking pictures, but, in my opinion, talking pictures will never be a reality except with absolutely perfect films and positive mechanical synchronism. By this, I mean films from which nothing has been cut out, or even if one picture has been removed, it has been replaced. I look for a big future for talking pictures, but only as a high-class proposition of that kind, in theaters where good prices of admission are charged, and nothing but perfect reels are used. I have witnessed the performance of the present talking picture on six different occasions, and I have yet to see a single 500 foot reel run through with the synchronism perfect all the time—and there you are! I set forth my views because I have received an immense number of inquiries and requests for my opinion as to the Edison talking pictures. I have refused to express any opinion until I was thoroughly satisfied that I was right. I believe Mr. Edison's invention has a future. I think he will perfect it. But I do not think it is an entirely practical proposition for the ordinary moving picture theater in its present stage, though as a novelty, in the large houses running only one short film in the evening, it is most emphatically making good.

Mr. J. L. Aney, Worcester, New York, writes:

> Some time ago a correspondent in Ogdensburg, N. Y., inquired about the making of a motion picture camera. If the Brother in Ogdensburg will walk to the red building at the foot of State Street, and look in the files of the Scientific American, volume 103, page 483, issue of December 17, 1910, he will find an article "How to Make a Motion Picture Camera."

The above is submitted for the benefit of the Ogdensburg brother. As to the practical value of the article in question I, of course, know nothing. I do not believe, however, that an amateur would stand much chance of constructing a really practical motion picture camera which would do good work. Perhaps he could, but you would have to show me.

Comments on the Films

"THE MYSTERY OF THE STOLEN JEWELS" (Vitagraph), April 22.—A picture taken mostly in mid-ocean. Plainly a studio was rigged; interiors are shown as clearly as if the scenes were taken in Flatbush. Two of the officers of the ship are in the cast. It is another of the Lambert Chase series, in which Maurice Costello plays the detective. The picture will interest.

"THE UNBURIED PAST" (Essanay), April 22.—It seemed to the writer as if in this picture there was insufficient identification of the characters at the beginning, thereby marring throughout the coherency and clearness of the drama.

"SEEDS OF SILVER" (Selig), April 22.—The first half or more of this picture, while well photographed and containing pleasing scenes, seemed rather slow. The latter part, however, was better, and carried over the story. Hobart Bosworth and Margarita Loveridge have the leads.

"A SLIGHT MISTAKE" (Lubin), April 22.—A story of a drunken young man who gets into the wrong room and makes trouble. A half reel seems to be sufficient to tell the story.

"SUNSHINE SUE" (Lubin), April 22.—On the same reel is this comedy, showing the difference on the temper of an office force exerted by a woman of pleasing appearance compared with one of lesser charms. Frances Ne Moyer has the title role. Walter H. Stull is the boss. Between these two and the office force much hearty laughter is created. Arthur Hotaling produced the comedy, and E. W. Sargent wrote it.

"AN INNOCENT INFORMER" (Edison), April 22.—Good drama by the Western company. Sydney Ayres, Charles Sutton and Betty Harte play the principal parts. The story is of a Kentucky moonshiner whose daughter innocently leads the revenue men to her father's still; the father escapes arrest through the act of the sweetheart, who in miraculous fashion avoid the revenue officers also.

"WINTER SPORTS AT BODELE, AUSTRIA" (Pathe), April 22.—Fine and interesting scenes. Many pictures illustrate the dangers of skiing. There are also well photographed panoramic views of snow-covered mountains.

"ANCIENT GREECE" (Pathe), April 22.—On the same reel as the foregoing are many interesting pictures taken in and about Athens. One of the best is of the canal between Corinth and the Piraeus. A good reel.

"THE WRONG ROAD TO HAPPINESS" (Patheplay), April 19.—Two reels of strongly emotional melodrama. The story is of the daughter of a sea-faring man who, against the wishes of her father, marries a man from the city and rejects the proposal of a man in her own station. Her married life is unhappy and she returns to her father. Rejected by him, she accidentally falls over a cliff. Before she dies she is reconciled to her first lover, the man of the sea. The picture will hold all the way. Paul Panzer plays the seaman lover. His work, as well as that of the woman who portrays the daughter, is excellent.

"THE POWER OF THE CROSS" (Lubin), April 18.—One of the most powerful dramas this writer has ever seen on the screen. It is always a pleasure to see Arthur Johnson in a picture, but when he puts his energies to a two-reel subject we are certain of something unusual. This drama is splendidly staged and splendidly acted. Most of the scenes are interiors, and they are elaborate. Mr. Johnson always is skillful in plotting a restaurant scene. So also he is here. Above all, however, in this picture is the holding power. From beginning to end it keeps the onlooker on edge. While Mr. Johnson personally dominates the two reels, there are several who yield him the strongest support—Florence Hackett, Lottie Briscoe, Charles Brandt, Harry Kendell and Clara Lambert. Exhibitors should not fail to give their patrons an early opportunity to see this picture.

"THE LEFT-HANDED MAN" (Biograph), April 21.—A very cleverly worked up picture dealing with bright detective work that brings a criminal to justice. This criminal has fixed things so that his crime will be traced to his friend, and it seems as though there can be no escape except by the culprit's confession. The detective finds it an easy one—he knows how. It has been made convincing by carefulness in even small details, and the interest has been heightened by weaving a love story in as a natural part of the whole. It is well acted by Lillian Gish, Charles West and Harry Carey, as the left-handed scoundrel. These are supported by a large cast. Finally, it is well photographed. The offering took strongly with the audience.

"THE SNEAK" (Kalem), April 21.—In some ways this picture is the most artistic offering of today, but it has some astonishingly weak places and doesn't hold together. Its best quality is quiet, restrained, sensible acting, while its sets and photography are perfect. It held well until its villain (Stephen Purdee) said to the heroine (Alice Joyce): "Your brother (Jack Pickford) is a thief, and unless you marry me I'll expose him." The hero is Tom Moore.

"ALAS, POOR YORICK" (Selig), April 21.—A fairly amusing picture with a good situation that seemed to give entertainment to the audience. A man who thinks he is an actor has escaped from an asylum, and a well-known manager is notified by the authorities that he may receive a call. A real actor, "at liberty," is mistaken for the crank and has an unpleasant quarter of an hour, but is given a meal ticket. Thomas Santschi plays the crank, and Wheeler Oakman the actor, and both do well. The author and producer is Colin Campbell. The photography is fair.

"CANTON, CHINA" (Selig), April 21.—A few views mostly of a populous canal. The photography is not very clear.

"HULDA OF HOLLAND" (Edison), April 21.—Perhaps this picture was suggested by the old story of the boy who put his finger in the leaking dyke and saved the city. The great trouble with it is the artificiality of its backgrounds, which give no suggestion of Holland. It has some freshness. Its heroine (Laura Sawyer) is charming in this role. The author is Charles Menges, and the producer is L. S. Dawley.

"MIXED IDENTITIES" (Vitagraph), April 21.—A little farce that tickled the audience; there was a good deal of laughter. The Nash twins have just graduated as stenographers and get jobs in different offices. Their employers are friends, and much fun is got from this situation by working up the possible misunderstandings. It is naturally acted by W. Humphrey and Wallie Van, the employers, and others. W. Humphrey produced it from the script of Eliza G. Harral. The photography is good.

"GALA DAY PARADE, YOKOHAMA" (Vitagraph), April 21.—On the same reel with the above are these street scenes in Yokohama on what seems to be the great advertising holiday. Many carts pass, mostly with some make of beer. The photography is poor.

"BACK TO PRIMITIVE" (Lubin), April 21.—An old style picture melodrama with its hero an Indian chief; a college graduate, and its villainess, a white woman, hired to inveigle him into signing away to some capitalists a valuable water power right. The white woman falls "back to primitive" and wants to marry the Indian, but he is wise enough to send her back to her people. Joseph Holland plays the chief; Irene Hunt, the woman; Clara Von Schiller, a squaw. H. F. McDonald, James King and B. A. Nevius also have roles. The photography is clear enough, but lacks quality.

"ALKALI IKE'S HOMECOMING" (Essanay), April 19.—The very popular comedian comes back with one of his delightful old-time cowboy pictures, and it clearly pleased the audience. We found it enjoyable and dare predict that it will be the most popular of today's releases. The author who thought up this picture to fit Augustus Carney's homecoming to his old friends, the old crowd, deserves credit. The photography is clear.

"THE PRIDE OF INNOCENCE" (Patheplay), April 19.—The photography of this picture is of excellent quality; there is none of today's regular releases that equals it. The story is artificial, but will interest. It was watched closely by the audience here. The acting in part is very good, but all of it is intelligent and fairly acceptable. The staging of the story is perfect and it is full of interesting scenes and pretty sets.

"THE FIRE-FIGHTING ZOUAVES" (Kalem), April 19.—A war picture that will surely win favor with the public. It has the Kalem fighting scenes, that are popular, and as a point of special interest it deals with the famous Zouave regiment, recruited from the fire laddies of the Bowery in New York City. These Irish laddies behaved so well in battles of the war that the remnant of them form the most popular section of every G. A. R. parade. The regiment, as shown in the picture, is at first looked down on, but has a chance to show its mettle in a fine scene, and at the climax it helps its captain rescue the fair heroine from her home, set on fire by shells of the enemy. The photography is clear. The picture is full of action, and the acting acceptable. Guy Coombs and Marguerite Courtot have the romantic leads, ably assisted by H. Millard and H. Hallem.

"A MISUNDERSTOOD BOY" (Biograph), April 19.—A good, interesting picture with clearly drawn characters and a well-developed story which, in itself, offers nothing noteworthy. Circumstantial evidence plays a big part in too many pictures to affect us deeply any more. Of course this is true only for those who have seen pictures for a long while. The speed with which this picture is carried to its climax, and the acting of most of its characters makes it a very fair offering. The photography is clear enough.

"THE TWELFTH JUROR" (Edison), April 19.—The twelfth juror is the man who really had committed the murder, and is played by B. F. Wilson, who is also the author of the story. It is not a very original story, but gives a good chance of doing strong dramatic work, and in this case has an effective ending. Yet the early scenes, while done well, are not of really great interest. The acting is fair. Laura Sawyer plays her role—the romantic lead—finely. Jack Conway and Robert Grey, as the two rivals, show intelligence. The setting is in the orange country, and the photography is clear.

"SEEING DOUBLE" (Vitagraph), April 19.—There were one or two hearty laughs during this farce in which Bunny's wife (Rose Tapley) gets the two Nash girls to make her "hubby" think he is seeing double, and so frightens him into reforming. It was written by Mrs. Breuil and produced by Wilfred North.

"A FLORIDA ROMANCE" (Lubin), April 19.—A picture set in Florida orange land and with an interior or two in "the city." It is well acted in part, but doesn't strongly convince as romance. The story is well written on a strictly conventional plot by George Nicholls and produced by him. It makes a passable offering. The leads fall to Ormi Hawley and Edwin Carewe, supported by John Ince and Irving White. The photography is clear.

"JEAN AND HER FAMILY" (Vitagraph), April 19.—On the same reel we find this very acceptable picture of Jean, the Vitagraph collie, and six puppies.

"THE MAN FROM THE WEST" (Edison), April 18.—Good drama. There are several notable situations, the one at the end being the strongest. In this scene are Augustus Phillips, William West and Mabel Trunnelle.

"PLAYING WITH FIRE" (Vitagraph), April 18.—The best of the day. It is the story of a coquette, whose affection for her husband was diminished by his amiability and unwavering concern for her welfare. The flirtatious woman was encouraged by a former suitor, who had never really ceased his attentions. Dorothy Kelly is the woman, and she does splendid work. Harry Morey is the indulgent husband, whose patience finally is exhausted; he gets out of his role all there is in it. Harry Northrup is the trouble-maker. It is a difficult part, and an unpopular one, but Mr. Northrup gives a strong portrayal. The climax stirs the heart and thrills. A splendid release. Mrs. Breuil is the author. Bert Angeles is the director.

"THE BRAVEST GIRL IN CALIFORNIA" (Kalem), April 18.—Rather slight comedy, in which Messrs. Brennan and Neilan and Ruth Roland take part.

"THE MILLIONAIRES' PLAYGROUND" (Kalem), April 18.—On the same reel as the foregoing are scenes of Palm Beach, Fla., showing how the winter colony enjoys itself.

"BABY'S NEW PIN" (Lubin), April 18.—A burlesque which will amuse some.

"BEATING MOTHER TO IT" (Lubin), April 18.—On the same reel is this good comedy. It did seem as if the fun might have been extended by having the self-substituted chauffeur, accompanied by his bride, drive the major and the widow to the minister's and stand up with them E. W. Sargent wrote the script.

"SLEUTHING" (Vitagraph), April 17.—The second of the "Belinda" series, produced by Bert Angeles from the script of Mrs. Breuil. It brings out very clearly the imitative faculty of Norma Talmadge, who has the role of the slavey, Belinda, and whose work in this picture furnishes most of the fun. There was no hearty laughter, and for the most part it was watched silently by an East Side 10-cent audience. Florence Radinoff is the boarding house keeper; Wally Van, the star boarder; Kate Price, the cook; Mr. Dowling, the tall man, and Hughie Mack, the cop.

"A FRIGHTFUL BLUNDER" (Biograph), April 17.—The situation in this picture surely is nothing new, but because it has been carefully developed and kept speedy by flash scenes it makes a good offering. A druggist puts up carbolic acid instead of boric acid, but it is discovered in time to avert in a dramatic way the catastrophe. The photography is fair.

"WHAT IS SAUCE FOR THE GOOSE" (Melies), April 17.—A farce-comedy that has a number of fresh and amusing twists and that brought out a good deal of laughter. It would have been even better if it had been conducted more naturally, and not so conventionally. One or two of its scenes are a trifle vulgar. Most of it was taken on ship, but it has a few scenes in Tahiti. The photography is clear enough to tell the story.

"A TAHITIAN FISH DRIVE" (Melies), April 17.—A very interesting and well-photographed picture of islanders. We see them driving the fish in, but we see no fish speared, and we don't even know whether there were any fish there or not. The fishermen had a day's sport, if no catch.

"THE CAPTURE" (Essanay), April 16.—A farce that made only two good laughs—not a big showing for a thousand feet of film. Lack of freshness is its chief difficulty; it makes use of many old treadmill incidents that have been used and used. Billy Mason, Ruth Hennessy and John Steppling play the leading roles, with the help of Dolores Cassennili, Joseph Allen and others of the Essanay stock. The photography is good.

"DIXIELAND" (Selig), April 16.—A picture illustrating the words of the South's famous song. It has not been made dramatic, but carries a thread of pleasing sentiment that holds the attention. It might have been done better, for it shows little real atmosphere of the South and the scenes seem bare—the whole might have been made in the studio and in a back yard or two in Chicago, with the one exception of the view of the old Mississippi steamboat at its mooring. The acting is only fair, the photography is not always clear, and the action is not at all times convincing. It was produced by H. Kirkland from the script of G. Willets. William Stowell plays "Will de weaver," and Winnifred Greenwood plays "Belle." Miss Johnston plays Will's wife, who dies when she finds that he is "a gay deceiver." Jack Nelson plays her brother, who in the end marries Belle.

"THE ITALIAN BRIDE" (Patheplay), April 16.—This offering is perhaps the freshest of today's releases (we haven't seen the Eclipse yet), but there is very little in it that has not been used a number of times already. The situation is not at all fresh, but it has been freshly handled. It is the same old triangle found in these Italian-American pictures, of which we have had plenty, but Paul Panzer and others play it pretty well, and the photography is fair. It has a pleasant ending.

"SEVEN YEARS BAD LUCK" (Edison), April 16.—This offering pictures a series of comical incidents following the breaking of a mirror. They are not convincing, and stand each by itself. Only the rough ones of the ill luck part made any laughter, and then only from isolated parts of the audience, while, if the truth must be told, isolated expressions of contempt were heard from the more fastidious spectators. When the luck turns the picture becomes more entertaining. The producer might have treated the story in a more consistent way. The photography is clear.

"A PLOT FOR A MILLION" (Kalem), April 16.—The story of this picture has been illustrated a number of times, and no longer has edge. Yet it has been worked up as effectively as possible and may be commended as a fair offering. The backgrounds are the New York office of a rich broker, and Florida, where he has his yacht. The broker's son loves a tug captain's daughter, who is not acceptable to the broker, but when plotters, manipulating stocks, try to keep the broker from communicating with his office, the girl plays an important part in saving the situation. James Vincent and Irene Boyle play the leads; H. Hallam, the broker, and H. Millard, the villain, his secretary. J. B. Ross plays a pilot, bribed to run the broker's yacht on shore. The photography is clear enough, but not up to Kalem standard.

"AFTER THE HONEYMOON" (Vitagraph), April 16.—A farce-comedy by the Western company that amused a part of the audience. It is commendably acted, but lacks the freshness to capture an audience that has seen many pictures. R. T. Thornby and Mary Charleson play the leads. Miss O'Connor plays a typical shrewd landlady, with Florence Weil as a good slavey. The photography is clear. R. S. Sturgeon produced it from W. H. Durham's script.

"THE UNKNOWN" (Essanay), April 17.—A picture that can be commended as exceptional rather than for its artistic merits. The situation is one not often used in pictures, and at first is kept in part from us, but as it develops, more and more light is thrown on it, till it stands wholly revealed. Ruth Stonehouse plays a maid in a house of which E. H. Calvert is the master and Dolores Cassinnelli the mistress, the former being much older than his wife. Ruth's mother (Helen Dunbar) comes to visit her, and she and Calvert come face to face. They recognize each other, and the spectator guesses what each knows, and at the end it is stated that Ruth is Calvert's daughter. Mr. Calvert is not at his best in this role, which he has made a morbidly self-conscious man who acts as though he had committed some terrible crime; but perhaps he had; the story doesn't go deeply into what the circumstances of Ruth's birth were. It makes a fair offering.

"THE RIGHT ROAD" (Lubin), April 17.—A love story, not wholly new, but fairly pleasing. It is set in a mining country and was produced by F. J. Grandon from a script of W. C. Clifton. Edgar Jones and Clara Williams play the romantic leads, ably supported by Franklyn Hall, as the villain, and C. Burton and Emma Bell, as her parents.

"THE TIE OF THE BLOOD" (Selig), April 17.—An interesting picture of Indians. It tells a melodramatic love story and deals with life at Carlisle College. It interests chiefly because it shows the life of these Indians just as though they were white men, and so makes it seem as though we were getting more from it than we really are. The players are very natural redmen; they seem to be real Indians, especially Harold Lockwood and Amy Trask, who play the romantic leads. A. E. Garcia plays the villain. H. Otto and A. W. Filson play two chiefs most naturally.

"A FUGITIVE AT BAY" (Cines), April 16.—A two reel special offering that has a good deal to commend it among the other releases of the day; yet it was guyed during the first reel. The exhibitor stopped us as we were entering the theater to tell us that it was not worth reviewing. The only trouble with it is that the story is very old style and ultra-romantic. It is acceptably acted, perfectly staged in unusually interesting backgrounds, and is well photographed. It has a moment of breathless thrill at the end, when the hero voluntarily throws himself over a cliff near the foot of which we stand—we see the dummy fall all the way. The act is done to save the heroine. We ourselves enjoyed it.

"GLIMPSES OF THE NATIONAL CAPITAL" (Patheplay), April 17.—The photography of this picture seems to us better than usual. We dare call it the best views of Washington that we have seen. It surely is a very pretty picture.

"THE SPONGE INDUSTRY IN CUBA" (Patheplay), April 17.—Though we have seen other pictures of this industry, there will be a large number of spectators who will be thankful for it, we feel sure. It is clearly photographed.

"THAT MAIL ORDER SUIT" (Selig), April 18.—A ranchman, inspired by pictures, buys a dress suit and wears it. He makes no hit at all. When it is discarded a Mexican gets it, and trouble with it. There is some laughter at the conclusion, when two men take turns kicking each other.

"CURED OF HER LOVE" (Selig), April 18.—On the same reel is this story of a girl in love with the family chauffeur. Her infatuation is dissipated when she sees her lover misbehave at a dinner party. The laughter seemed to come from those of the chauffeur's sort.

"THE CROSSING POLICEMAN" (Essanay), April 18.—A good dramatic story with strong heart interest. It seemed strange, though, that a policeman could be dismissed from the force for leaving his beat to visit a sick, crippled little girl friend without summoning as witnesses at his trial the doctor and the mother of the child. Frank Dayton, Helen Dunbar and little Eleanor Kahn have the principal parts.

Independent

"IN A STRANGE LAND" (Powers), April 30.—A human story, without very much plot to it, but following so closely to real life that it makes quite an appeal to the observer. We see the young Italian father arrive with his daughter in this country, and later after he has obtained work, the child is lost, but only temporarily. Well pictured and entertaining.

"NEIGHBORS" (Powers), May 2.—With one exception the scenes in this comprise a bright, attractive comedy, showing the love story of a boy and girl whose parents have quarreled. The musical flirtation was nicely handled. The rip in the young man's trousers was a coarse touch, entirely out of keeping with the rest of the story, and could be cut out to great advantage. Otherwise this is a decidedly attractive comedy film.

"THE DAUGHTER OF THE SHEEP RANCH" (Frontier), April 24.—The photography in this offering is very good, but the Western story is rather conventional. The murderer employs the old device of placing the hero's pistol near the dead man, in order to have the blame thrown upon him, but in the end the truth comes out. The glimpses of the great flocks of sheep were interesting and might have been more comprehensive.

"THE OLD MAID'S LAST ATTEMPT" (Frontier), April 26.—This story of how the old maid goes west to marry her correspondent with a matrimonial turn, is well enough acted, but lacks freshness. The theme has been used so frequently that it is hard to get up much interest in it. The photography is good.

"LONELINESS AND LOVE" (Victor), April 25.—An excellent little film story is this, showing the friendship of the neglected little girl for the servant, Tillie. The animal views in the Bronx Zoo will please childish observers, and the later scenes, where the parents awaken to their lack of interest in the girl, bring a mist to the eyes of observers. Edith Haldeman and Gertrude Robinson have the leading roles in this offering, which was produced by James Kirkwood. A desirable release.

"THE LAST ROLL CALL" (Bison), April 29.—This two-reel offering tells a grim war story, which lacks romance, but undoubtedly adheres closer to the actual conditions than the average film of this character. Sergeant Hale, being denied the privilege of going to the bedside of his dying wife, deserts after a strenuous battle has been fought. He hides in the chimney of his home while a search is being made for him. When he comes down his wife is dead. Twenty years later he returns, to find his daughter grown up and ready to marry. No one knows him but the old negro mammy, whom he swears to secrecy. At the last he dies in a coughing fit. A pathetic story, giving an unvarnished view of warfare as it was in the early '60s.

"THE MAN FROM THE CITY" (Excelsior), April 21.—This story gets a conventional start, but later becomes more interesting. It concerns a girl about to become an heiress by a change in her uncle's will. She is taken and held by her rascally cousin and his wife, but rescued after an exciting automobile chase. The latter part of the story is stronger than the beginning.

"NOT FOR MINE" (Majestic), April 22.—Paul Scardon and Miss Crall picture for us an engaged couple. The girl is invited into the country, where three mischievous children show her very plainly that married life is not "all beer and skittles." She refuses to marry, but repents just in time to save her fiance from suicide. A fairly amusing film.

"THE BAWLEROUT" (Reliance), April 30.—A strong three-reel film story by Forrest Halsey. It contains a large number of well-defined characters, including a bank president who also conducts a loan shark business on the side. The "bawlerout" is a girl employed as collector, the part being well played by Eugena de Lespine. Other members in the large cast are Irving Cummings, Muriel Ostriche, Sue Balfour and E. P. Sullivan. The story is rather involved and the interest of the observer jumps from one plot thread to another, which renders the situations somewhat confusing at times. But it has a good, live theme and gives an insight into loan shark manipulations, as well as showing the danger of getting into the clutches of such men. There are two love stories running through the film.

"THE HOODOO PEARLS" (Reliance), April 23.—A girl leaves a string of pearls in an office ledger. One of the clerks hides the pearls in order to embarrass his rival, but is glad to return them after the misfortunes which follow this action. Well pictured, but rather slight in plot.

"OLD MAMMY'S CHARGE" (Majestic), April 27.—This picture shows us a Southern man casting off his daughter because she marries a Yankee. They elope, and a year later their child is born. The scenes showing the accidental death of the father were very jerky and badly timed. Later the mother dies, and the three-year-old child goes to a negro mammy. The closing scenes, where the grandfather comes to the court and claims the child, are full of strong human interest and bring up the average of the film very much.

"THE SURVEYORS" (Excelsior), April 28.—A reel in which Southern darkies are employed to represent African tribes in native garb. One tribe attacks the headquarters of the white people, and the hero makes up as a native to bring the other tribe to their aid. The attack on the cabin was exciting, and the reel is quite a "thriller" in its way. The photography is good.

"A DARKTOWN BELLE" (Keystone), May 8.—A half reel, showing Fred Mace as a negro barber. He has many rows with the dusky wooers who come to see his flirtatious intended. Not especially interesting.

"A LITTLE HERO" (Keystone), May 8.—A novelty, showing Mabel Normand and her three pets—a cat, a dog and a bird. The cat makes many efforts to catch the bird, and the dog gets three others and gives the cat a run. It is unique and, though a little rough on the cat, will pass muster. On same reel with above.

"MABEL'S AWFUL MISTAKE" (Keystone), May 12.—In the first part of this reel Mabel comes very near marrying a man who already has a wife and numerous children. Mack saves her just in time, but the would-be bigamist plans a terrible revenge and places her on a planing table in a sawmill, near the revolving saw. Mack, by brute force, holds back the entire machinery till help arrives. The latter part of this reel makes very good burlesque.

"THE WAY OF THE MOTHER" (Broncho), May 7.—This is a very strong and convincing two-reel offering, giving us the story of a mother who was parted from her baby in its infancy. The boy fell into the hands of Indians and became known as Running Elk, the chief's son. His mother married the colonel at the fort, and twenty years later she learns that Running Elk is her son. The lapse of time is not well shown here in some of the characters, particularly the mother. After a stirring engagement in battle, Running Elk claims his mother, who dies in his arms and is given an Indian burial. Good photography and altogether a desirable release.

"AN AMERICAN IN THE MAKING" (Thanhouser), April 22.—This film, as announced at the beginning, was gotten up to aid the work of the National Social Betterment Association. It shows a young Italian immigrant arriving in this country. His brother meets him at the Ellis Island dock, and the later scenes show him at the model factory city—Gary, Ind. The picture then shows many devices used to protect workmen, such as goggles to protect the eyes in the steel works, guards attached to saws, belts, etc. Six years later he is seen happily married, with a son going to a model school. Such a film as this makes an interesting novelty and distributes valuable information concerning industrial matters.

"FOR ANOTHER'S SIN" (Thanhouser), April 25.—A two-reel story, notable for the strength of its acting. The story is rather obvious, but nevertheless it grips the observer and holds his attention closely throughout. Harry Benham gives a very commendable characterization of the embezzling bank clerk who serves ten years and then appeals to the bank for re-employment. The scene between him and the president was particularly effective. Later he assumes the blame for another man's crime because the man had befriended him when others shunned him. The scenes in this move in a leisurely, well-ordered way and give the story a chance to sink into the mind of the observer. A good offering.

"A SOUTHERN CINDERELLA" (Kay-Bee). April 16.—The Cinderella situation is here brought into the midst of warfare. The colonel's daughter finds herself suddenly possessed of a supercilious stepmother and stepsister, who force her to live in the servants' quarters. The Union officer discovers her, however, and falls in love with her, much to the disgust of the stepmother and daughter. The idea, which is nicely entertaining, rather than powerful, extends over three reels. The plot is interspersed with war scenes handled in typical Kay-Bee fashion. An interesting mixture of war and polite drama.

"THE LAW OF THE WILD" (Eclair), April 27.—This shows us the American Eclair company at its best in a one-reel story of the Northwest. Johnson, Truesdale and Barbara Tennant work out an interesting series of dramatic situations. There are some splendid scenic effects and the close is very effective. A good offering.

"FORGETFUL FLOSSIE" (Crystal), April 27.—Flossie has a very short memory. She forgets everything, gets coats and hats mixed up, leaves her lover in the street to go auto riding with another, and finally forgets she is engaged. An amusing idea in this.

"A JOKE ON THE SHERIFF" (Crystal), April 27.—The sheriff's prisoner bests him at cards and then wins his lady friend away from him. This is an interesting comedy offering and, with the above, makes a very presentable reel.

"THE INGRATE" (Nestor), May 2.—A consistent film, in which a man befriended by a girl tries to rob her brother of his gold. The desert scenes are strong, and the ingrate comes to his bad end in accordance with the laws of justice. The photography is good.

"THE CUB" (Imp), April 28.—A brisk, modern newspaper story, written and produced by Harold Shaw. The dictagraph is employed, and there are some good dramatic moments of a plausible character. The title of "The Cub" was not well chosen, however, as the reporter-hero was really a veteran at his job. A good offering.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY No. 58" (Universal), April 16.—President Woodrow Wilson is seen in this, opening the baseball season in Washington. Other baseball pictures are shown, also views of the Jamestown races, Cardinal Farley laying a cornerstone, an interesting strawberry farm near Beaumont, Texas, etc. The Kaiser reviewing troops. and King George of England appear in this again, and are not especially new.

"THE SQUASHVILLE LADIES' FIRE BRIGADE" (Nestor), May 12.—This makes a fairly good burlesque, though there is not quite enough action to stir up the laughs. The ladies pose as firemen, but take so much time to dress that the fire is out before they make their appearance on the scene. The latter part of the film is very entertaining.

"THE CLEAN-UP" (Nestor), May 21.—A Western offering similar in some respects to a picture produced some time ago. in which the villain steals the child in order to induce its mother to follow him. He locks her in the cabin, but her woman friend comes to the rescue. The film is strongly melodramatic.

"HER HERO'S PREDICAMENT" (Nestor), May 19.—There is an extremely funny situation in this, where Eddie is pushed into the ballroom minus his trousers, which his girl is mending for him. He then flees from room to room and out upon the street to his home. Not every performer could have taken this part without jarring the sensibilities, but it passes very well as played by Eddie. A laughing success.

"THAT RAGTIME BAND" (Keystone), May 1.—This pictures the doings of Prof. Smeltz and his German band, Mabel being in love with one of the members. The vaudeville acts contain coarse touches, which are unfortunate, and the "rough-house" ending will not appeal to a refined audience.

"THE NEW CONDUCTOR" (Keystone), April 28.—Schnitzel creates considerable amusement by his antics as a street car conductor. The spotter catches him and the motorman dividing up the day's receipts. An amusing half reel.

"HIS CHUM, THE BARON" (Keystone), April 28.—This, on same reel with above, is not so good. The garb in which the French count appears after the dress suit is taken from him makes a poor impression on the observer, and the picture will scarcely pass for good comedy.

"THE CHILDREN'S CONSPIRACY" (Thanhouser), April 20. — In this the Thanhouser Kid and a small boy friend fix up the new teacher's bankbook, making the village miser think she is well off. He marries her, and their old teacher is re-employed. This plot is an amusing one, but the scheme was one that children would not have devised.

"THE GREATER LOVE" (Nestor), April 30.—The "make-up" character of the situations in this rob it of suspense. The rounding up of Black Jack and his gang. who are trying to abduct the heiress for ransom, gives a very conventional setting, and the attack on the cabin was not very convincing. Some of the scenic effects and riding in the open were attractively shown.

"TOLD IN CONFIDENCE" (Great Northern), April 26.—A story of gossiping women, showing how a story will magnify in retelling. It will make some fun.

"THE SHE WOLF" (Reliance), April 19.—This is a good story of the woods, wherein Jules sets a spring steel trap for a bear, but, instead, catches the man who is trying to lure away his wife. The woman's pursuit of the man running through the woods with her child was well done, and the climax very effective. A strong story of its type.

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN" (Powers).—A special three-part feature offering. This picture gets value from its subject and will make a strong appeal. Even a full set of drawings illustrating the pathetic story of Uncle Tom would be acceptable, and this is very much better. Its character drawing is fine. Uncle Tom is a most worthy darkey; little Eva is sure to win every heart; Simon Legree is Simon Pure villain with a heart as black as the blackest slave he ever lashed until the victim died. There is marked Southern atmosphere in the home of the St. Clairs and in the steamboat scene. There are some small weaknesses, and the escape across the ice is too artificial. On the stage, dim light makes it effective, while for a photograph strong light is needed. Yet it might have been taken in a snowstorm, which would have kept us from seeing how it was made. Producer Otis Turner, deserves credit for what is, on the whole, an artistic picture. The photography is clear.

"BEAUTY AND THE BEAST" (Powers).—A three-part special release for children, produced by H. C. Mathews. This will be, if it is rightly exhibited, a fine offering for young folks and will interest their elders, too. For a fairy story it has an ideal setting in the scenes of California, which add greatly to its value, and they are beautifully photographed. The story is told at length, and the sole criticism we can make is that some of it will be over the heads of all but exceptionally bright children. If the exhibitor has someone to tell the story as the picture is unrolled it will be perfect.

"THE WAYWARD SISTER" (Rex), April 25.—A story that distantly resembles Jekyll and Hyde, in that it has two characters, sisters, who look so much alike that the fiance of the innocent one is deceived into thinking the wayward sister the one to whom he has plighted his troth. She leads him down to the "dregs." It is not an offering that could be made convincing, and it has no character with whom it is possible to sympathize. Yet it surely has scenes and situations that hold strongly because of acting mostly. Margarita Fisher plays both sisters in a perfect double exposure scene at the climax. Bob Leonard plays the man. The producer is Otis Turner.

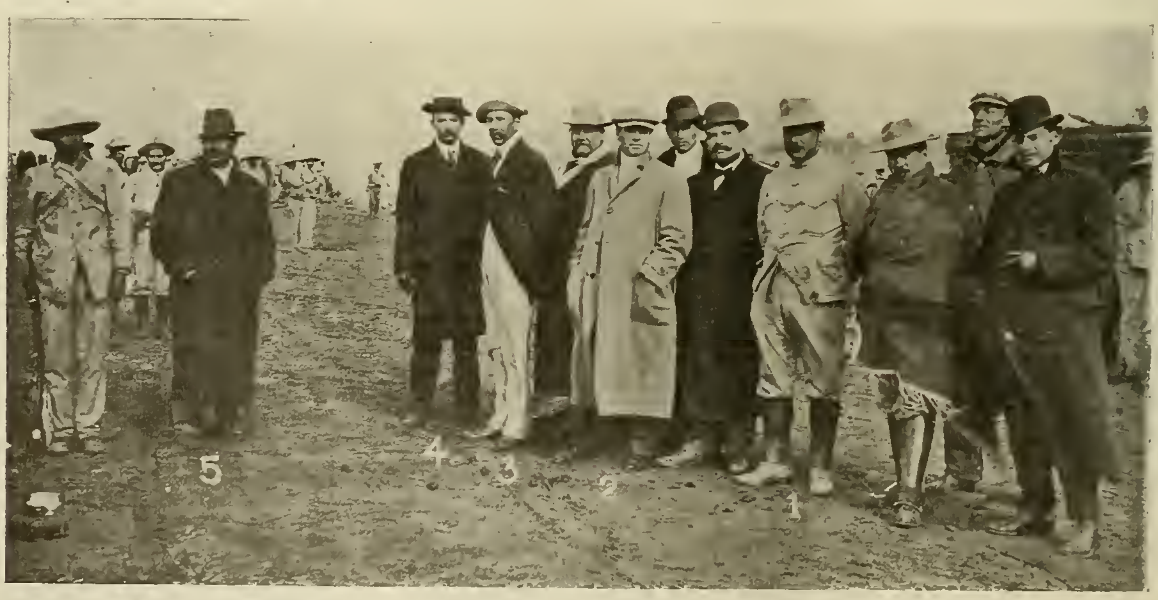
"WHEN FATHER WAS KIDNAPPED" (Nestor), April 28.—A comedy that has not a great deal of real freshness, but gives fair entertainment, because it is acted with a feeling for character by a large cast, all of whom seem to be people of ability. The backgrounds are well photographed and are often either full of interest or of beauty. The whole is unconvincing, but is done in a light-hearted way—the players had a good time together, and it goes toward making us all have a good time. Al. Christie is the producer.

HOPPER TAKES TO VAUDEVILLE.

E. Mason Hopper, known in practically every city in the United States as "Lightning Hopper," the cartoonist and comedy producer for the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, has severed his connections with the above mentioned firm and will tour the United Vaudeville Circuit in a sketch entitled "Making the Movies." Mr. Hopper has produced such notable and clever comedies as "Alkali Ike in Jayville," "Bound to Occur," "Bill" and "The Capture." His success as a producer has been a phenomenal one. Those who know Hopper are sorry to see him leave the Essanay, but are sure he will achieve success on the stage.

GLADYS FIELD.

Miss Gladys Field, once leading woman for G. M. Anderson, went into retirement a couple of years ago, owing to a prolonged illness, and it is only lately that she has resumed film work. When the Mackley section of the Essanay company went to Los Angeles to work, Miss Field assumed the leading parts. She will presently be seen in a number of Essanays, and later may be seen under another trade mark.



Romaine Fielding at the Battle of Nogales. 1—Col Alvaro Obregon, 2—Romaine Fielding, Lubin director, 3—Pedro Trelles, 4—Charles L. Montague, 5—Juan Sereano, diplomatists.

The Moving Picture Educator

THE EDUCATIONAL PICTURE.

By the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, S. T. B.

It Fills a Need.

THE following letter from Mr. Oliver Kohrlein, of the San Jose Theater, San Jose, Cal., one of the Turner and Dahnken circuit, which is said to be the largest chain of theaters on the Pacific Coast, is not given because we wish to blow our own trumpet, but because it shows the need for just the kind of work we are doing and because we believe that other exhibitors will send in their criticisms, experiences, suggestions and needs, now that one of them has led the way.

> After admiring your work in our trade journal and hearing from our great booster, E. W. Sargent, your enthusiastic praises sung, and also from Dr. Miller, whom I might call a local coworker, I feel that I want to know you and impose on your good will by referring to you when I need assistance. The need of an intelligent catalog has struck me so strongly and so often that I had undertaken just such a task. The results, however, were so imperfect that I received with joy the news of some competent person taking it up with an object, for then I knew that it would be done conscientiously. Our present catalogs are done by office boys I am sure. San Jose is beginning to realize the possibilities in the films and there is very good response lately. The Sunday-school association is now considering ways of opening a show of their own, which is a splendid indication. As for your catalog, I would be very glad to hear under what conditions it is available. Allow me to express my appreciation of your good work in The Moving Picture World and to thank you for all I have already derived from your section.

The Dr. Miller referred to is the Reverend George A. Miller, D. D., pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of San Jose. We have written Mr. Kohrlein that we shall be very glad to answer all inquiries we can, provided a self-addressed and stamped envelope is enclosed for the reply, and by this time he ought to have received our letter thanking him for his appreciation of our efforts. What we said to him we say to all, even at the risk of having everybody speak at once.

Health Pictures Wanted.

Mr. Harry E. Downer, the head resident of the Friendly House, 1228 West Third Street, Davenport, Iowa, has sent a long letter in regard to the work of Friendly House and its aspirations, work and needs. In particular he wishes a list of pictures on health subjects to accompany a series of lectures by the local medical association. We spent half a day hunting through our catalogue of releases since January 1st, 1911, but were unable to find a dozen all told and those were all of them on topics of public hygiene. So far as we know there is nothing at all on the subject of personal hygiene, such as food, drink, clothing, care of the body, homes, work, rest, recreation, sleep, the needs of the nervous system, time of life, etc. There are a number of releases treating of the abuse of alcohol and other drugs and several on the institutional care of children, but the first have no value from a hygienic viewpoint and the latter belong to public hygiene and domestic economy rather than to personal health. We give below an extract from Mr. Downer's letter because it shows the kind of work for which these and similar pictures are needed.

> Friendly House is a social settlement equipped with a plant for motion picture projection. The residents and the trustees believe strongly in the educative power of motion pictures. Each Saturday since January 1st children have been shown pictures without admission charge. The attendance now totals 27,875. It has been expensive, the evening receipts, when admission is charged, reaching about one-half of the cost of projection. The pictures shown have been as nearly educational in tone as Manager Eisner of the Chicago branch of the General Film Company could furnish. We expect to count upon the special kindness of thoughtful people to continue the pictures until the call of the outdoors becomes so insistent as to rob us of the children. This week the Typographical Union sent in a check to cover the deficit for a pair of weeks. Now the local medical association wish to inaugurate a series of health talks for older school children and their parents, the lectures to be merely running comment on a four-reel program. We will gladly co-operate with them and I promised the committee to secure from motion picture people any information as to the source and volume of any material of that sort.

Loan Collections.

In another part of his letter, Mr. Downer suggests the establishment of "loan collections of educational films for the use of such institutions" as Friendly House. We do not altogether like his scheme because we believe that much better results are always obtained by the man or institution that has to stand on his own ground and fight his own way. It is quite true that the Russell Sage Foundation, the Anti-Tuberculosis Societies, other associations and occasionally some of the manufacturers have and do lend pictures for special demonstrations and exhibitions, but this is a very different thing from supplying them for the carrying on of the ordinary work of an institution. As a matter of experiment and to introduce the picture to a community we heartily endorse the loaning of the pictures, but Friendly House has already made its experiment and Mr. Downer's account proves its success for the work they want to do. We have lived in Davenport and unless the place has changed very much in the last few years a determined effort will bring forth more than enough voluntary subscriptions from the community itself to fiance the work Mr. Downer wishes to accomplish.

THE TIMELY USE OF PROPER PICTURES.

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

Appropriateness in picture exhibiting is one of the essentials of success. In these times when the feature films and educational subjects are in the ascendant, it is to the best interests not only of the exhibitor, but of all parties, to see that a wise choice, and timely adjustment, is shown in the make-up of programs. That this is appreciated is evidenced by inquiries which are occasionally made for help along these lines, yet it is to be feared that this appreciation is not sufficiently widespread. From time to time the educator makes suggestions as to what class of pictures are most immediately suitable, a too frequent use of these suggestions would soon become "vain repetitions," therefore a timely word is resorted to, with the sole object of helping along the best principles which will best serve the purpose in view.

A good feature film would seem to be acceptable at any time, and industrial subjects are always appropriate; but an indiscriminating run of educationals might result in some exhibitions as untimely as snow in summer.

Along historical lines, and patriotic occasions and aniversaries, there is both the need and the supply for particularly interesting programs. We are in close proximity to two important dates and occasions: Decoration Day and Independence Day; without taking up space here there will be found, by reference to the published lists, ample choice for subjects of more than simple suitability, but of entrancing interest. A consultation with the Grand Army posts will secure in each town a support and interest which would redound to the credit and profit of all. In like manner constant consultation with the various authorities, such as the boards of health and school boards, with the printed list in hand, would result in an encouraging co-operation. The spring of the year and summer time, are each respectively met with pictures in the natural history series which will inspire the young people by the tens of thousands.

The old and long taught truth, that "prevention is better than cure," was never more thoroughly illustrated than it is today by the moving picture. The sociological and hygienic lists contain subjects which are not, as supposed by some, as of a dry and difficult scientific nature; they are of lively common everyday interest, thrilling the most unlearned with information that they have been proved to devour with a keen appetite. The cleanliness of homes, schools, working places, and even certain forms of personal care, are vividly portrayed with an interest which makes such pictures welcome even at "a show."

The wide choice of scenics and travel pictures is such that they afford opportunity for a careful selection, suitable to the times and seasons, so that the "stay at homes" and locally "shut ins" may journey abroad with a proportionate profit to that experienced by the tourist.

While we have said that industrials are always welcome, even here there is room and opportunity for educational discrimination. Agriculture and other industries have their peculiar seasons, and these may be very properly arranged to cause the public to see that they are designed to attract them in a way that will at the same time please, interest, and instruct. To the high-minded exhibitor a satisfying program is the best advertisement. The flaming poster is first alluring, then disappointing, then ignored. The truthfully announced program is first tried, proves surprising, grows with reflection, leaves a pleasant impression, gives help with pleasure, and magnet-like attracts again thus proving the best advertisement, besides winning the support and co-operation of the best people, and they come again, and again, because it pays them in pleasure, and the growth of a profitable knowledge acquired without effort.

The exhibitor who thus studies the timely use of proper pictures, will find that he is filling a valuable place wherever his house may be, and helping forward that which he himself most desires to obtain, while giving the same to his patrons.

Keep Up the Demand.

An exhibitor writing to this paper, and whose letter appeared in the last issue, commends "the good work in striving to elevate the moving picture business," which has ever been the aim of the Moving Picture World and Educator. He also further adds "keep up your fight for more educationals." This last exhortation is worth special notice. The fight for educationals is an old one, long and close, but we do not hesitate to declare that it now seems as though "The fight is o'er, the battle done."

And now the victory is won! The educational picture is the most established fact in the world of moving pictures; from now on it will not need to be the cry "more educationals" for they are nearly legion, but rather more demand for the use of them, and a greater and wider circulation. Less than three years ago this class of picture was a rarity, and little called for; it is now in excess of the demand. It is gratifying to have letters like the one referred to, not only because it shows how intelligent exhibitors like the correspondent are increasing, but because of the fact that there is a growing demand pressing itself upon the exhibitors from their patrons.

To encourage this demand, is now more necessary than to ask for more pictures; more than three thousand educational pictures are now listed, and the educator knows of hundreds more of which even the titles have not yet seen the light of day; an increase in the demand will bring them from their resting places. Another important fact worthy of special mention is that the supply is being given more attention than any other class of picture as there are those at the helm of the production of educational subjects, who are quietly working along lines indicative of the belief that there is going to be a sudden and wide-spread use of the moving picture, along these lines that will require an immediate response; keep up the demand for their use as fast as they are produced.

BUILDING BRIDGES OR ROBBING BANKS?

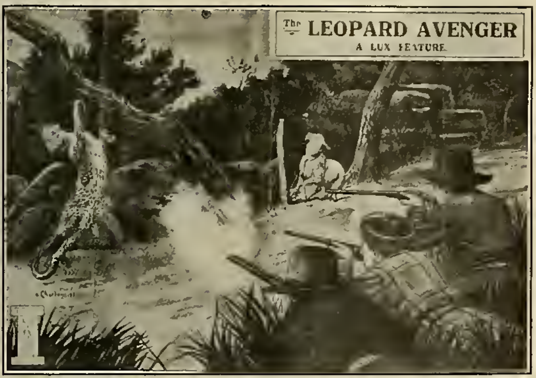
At a meeting of certain educationally inclined people (so far as moving pictures are concerned), a prominent city worker told how one interested in the association of the young people and the pictures made it his object to inquire among them for the purpose of obtaining their views and predilections. The most interesting experience was that of a bright schoolboy who at an ordinary exhibition, had just seen an industrial subject describing the building of bridges. Anxious to know the way in which such pictures were received, the boy was asked how he liked them? "I would rather see pictures of building bridges than of robbing bands," was the extraordinary reply.

An analysis of this strong answer is full of important interest. In the first place it shows the way in which educational pictures are received, also that the average or representative youth is not seeking the sensational or lurid unsatisfying picture. It further revealed the discriminating ideas of right minded people, the criminal picture needs no censorship by the authorities when it is repellant to the young patrons; these makers who supposed that pictures on the order of "yellow journalism" were needed, met with a severe rebuke at the mouth of this schoolboy; even if they do occasionally happen to satisfy a certain class, they are only responding to a degenerate appetite which it is a pleasure to find is not common with the average American youth. The boy's preference is a splendid advertisement for the educational picture, and this is by no means the first time that there have come in reports as to the welcome accorded the industrial picture.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

NEW SERIES OF LUX PICTURES.

We understand that among the summer visitors that we may expect to see pretty soon will be the widely known and popular Mr. R. Prieur, the American agent of the Lux films. His American representative, Mr. Paul Hernoud, says that he will be in this country shortly to arrange for a wider distribution of the greatly improved output of the Lux factories. Like some other manufacturers, the Lux people have been specializing on animal pictures, and some of their releases in the near future will be as realistic and thrilling as could be desired. The Lux studios are among the largest in Paris. They have heretofore largely produced short comics, but recently turned their attention to dramatic subjects. "Pursued by a Lioness," "Face to Face With a Leopard," "The Man Eater" and "The Leopard Avenger" are titles ot some of their recent productions that have met with exceptional success all over the world. Instead of a comedy subject for every weekly release, the American offices at 10 East 15th Street, New York City, will, for the future months at least, release one of these animal pictures every other week, and their well-known comedy subjects will be continued on the alternate weeks.



Scene from "The Leopard Avenger" (Lux).

Mr. Prieur has several agencies on the Continent, but his London office is the one that is taking most of his time at present. Beside representing the Lux films in Great Britain, Mr. Prieur is the agent for the Nestor Film Company and the Powers picture plays and three or four other European brands. His London office is in the center of the film district of the British metropolis and now does a larger business than any of his other offices. He has been one of the largest advertisers in the British trade papers and he is now one of the largest distributors of films in England. With his various offices in every country, his duties have been such that his American friends have seen much less of him for the past two years than formerly. His success has been achieved through his boundless capacity for hard, constant work and his tenacity of purpose.

THE ESSANAY WESTERN.

For this roster of the Essanay players now at Niles, Cal., we are indebted to Charles R. Holmes: G. M. Anderson, Miss Bessie Sankey, William H. Todd, Mrs. Todd, Arthur Mackley, Mrs. Mackley, Miss Evelyn Selbie, Brinsley Shaw, Frederick Church, Miss Edna Sharp, True Boardman, Miss Virginia Ames, Gus Carney, Miss Margaret Joslin, Victor A. Potel, Mrs. J. J. Robbins, Jay Hanna, Baby Audrey Hanna, Mrs. Hanna, David Kirkland, Patrick Rooney, George Briggs, Jesse J. Robbins, cameraman; Col. Elder, properties.

"BILL," (Essanay).

"Smiling Billy" Mason is the whole show and then some in this picture. His acting as Bill, the idiotic office boy, is something that will captivate the audience upon his entrance. Rarely have we seen Mason to better advantage. His work as termed by the Essanay publicity department, is "superlative and aristocratic. Following is a short synopsis: John Steppling borrows three thousand dollars from his father-in-law to pay his debts. He promises his wife never to speculate again. That afternoon, John Wallace, a broker, calls on Mr. Steppling and gives the latter a good "tip" in corn. Bill, the semi-responsible office boy, absorbs the conversation and comes to the conclusion———. Through persistent persuasion Steppling falls a martyr to his old ways, and is induced to return home and get the money he had locked in the desk that morning. This he gives to Bill with instructions to deliver immediately to Wallace. Instead of delivering the message post-haste, Bill loiters on the way and proves himself a good samaritan to several who are in trouble. First he furnishes a postage stamp to a charming young lady, who had forgotten her stamp book. Second, he assists a young errand boy by giving him a handle by which he could carry a heavy package. And so on until he reaches Wallace's office after the newspapers had notified the world that corn had fallen to a desperately low price. Steppling buys a paper and discovers that he is again bankrupt. Mrs. Steppling then finds that the money had disappeared from the desk, rushes to her husband's office, where she tells him what she thinks of his ungentlemanly procedure. Bill enters at this untimely moment and is kicked bodily out of the office. With the determination of Napoleon he again enters and hands his employer the undelivered message. Mr. and Mrs. Steppling are overjoyed at the return of the money, and reward Bill with a crisp bill for his tardiness. This production is booked for release Wednesday, April 30th.

SELIG PICTURES HOYT'S "A MIDNIGHT BELL."

Something of a sensation was created when the Selig Polyscope Company announced it had secured the moving picture rights for the entire series of farce comedies from the pen of the late Charles Hoyt, who in his generation stood on a par in popularity with that which at present obtains for George Cohan as a maker of entertainments. The first play of the series to be released will be "A Midnight Bell," which makes its premiere on May 5th. The importance of this play chronologically in this list is that it represents the highest ambition of the author in play making, as it incorporates many of the devices of the traditional drama. It is particularly strong in character type and deals with the life of a New England village in winter, when the amusement season reaches its height in the church social.

Scene from Selig's Adaption of Hoyt's "A Midnight Bell."

In the fads and fancies of the bucolic community the dramatist found much material for congenial characterization, but he did even more in arranging a thrilling situation, involving the hero, discrediting him in the eyes of the heroine and setting the whole community by the ears. How the wrong man jealous of the right one takes the funds from the bank and hides them in the cushion of the old church pew and then pursues the beauty of the village with his unwelcome attention while the good young man is made to hide his head in a cloud of false accusation. How the clever detective from the city suspects him in spite of his cleverness, how the hard cider drinking deacon gets caught in a bear trap when he goes to oil the old church bell and then witnesses the actions of the guilty man that lifts the imputation from the innocent one, are all features of this interesting story in pictures.

R. L. FRANK IN MINNEAPOLIS.

Roy L. Frank has taken charge of the Minneapolis office of the Sedig Feature Film Company at 555 Temple Court. This office is purchasing all Sedig, Solax, Itala and Gaumont features for Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana and the north of Michigan. Mr. Frank has been in the exchange and manufacturing business for the past nine years, but this is his first attempt at the feature end of the game. His experience and knowledge of the field should spell success.

GLORIA-FILMS COMING.

It is announced that "Gloria" films will have a representative in the United States. Gloria films will be produced by Mario Caserini, for nine years with the Cines Company at Rome, and later with the Ambrosio at Turin. With him will be associated Domenico Cazzulino, who is well known in the trade. A new studio is being built at Turin. Two, three and four-reel productions will be made.

RICHARDSON'S "DOPE" GOOD FOR "INDIGESTION."

Philip Haywood, of Haywood & Co., has opened the "Queen" moving picture theater in Cincinnati, O. The new house is situated in McMillan Street. Although Mr. Haywood has been in the picture business for many years, he admits that he does not know all there is to be known about projection and its allied branches and says that he finds much efficacious "dope" in F. H. Richardson's handbooks and "Projection Department," which is good for "indigestion" of the projection end of the business.

IN CORRECTION.

In a recent criticism in Comments on the Film, attention was called to the fact that "Memories of His Youth," a Lubin production, of which Clara S. Beranger was the author, was very like one of F. Hopkinson Smith's stories, "An Old-Fashioned Gentleman." Not being gifted with second sight, the critic could not know that this story was accompanied by a letter from Mr. Smith granting Mrs. Beranger the privilege of making his story into a photoplay, and the alert Lubin press agent thoughtfully refrained from making use of this valuable advertising fact. Mrs. Beranger backs up her statement of facts by a letter from S. McCloskey, the Lubin editor and the World is very glad to set the matter straight. In the interest of accuracy both "Memories of His Youth" and "Art and Honor" are based on the story and are reproduced by permission of Mr. Smith.

UNIVERSAL COMPANY ENTERS OBJECTION.

In our issue of April 19, our Los Angeles correspondent called attention to a three-reel picture of the Mexican revolution that was being shown there and that had caused a formal protest from the Mexican consul. It was stated that the picture was a special release of the Universal Company. We are advised by the Universal Company that the only pictures of this nature that they have released is their well-known two-reel feature, every foot of which they guarantee. A thorough investigation is being made of the matter. As our correspondent specifically mentions three reels, it seems as though something had been added by someone, even if two of the reels were really the output of the Universal Company.

CLEVELAND BACK IN VAUDEVILLE.

W. S. Cleveland, of vaudeville fame, who has been considerably before the public recently on account of his numerous lawsuits, fighting the efforts of the "interests" to prevent him doing business as a booking agent, now announces his speedy return to his chosen field of endeavor. He has been successful in his legal battles, and the last suit brought by him against Kohl & Castle, of Chicago, resulted in an unqualified victory for Cleveland. He has just returned to Broadway after a long distance "marathon" around the country visiting managers of theaters, parks, fairs, et cetera, in the interests of his "Cleveland Circuit" booking offices.

Cleveland claims to have broken all records in the number of cities and towns covered in a given length of time. His combined trips totalled thirty-nine days. He traveled over the larger part of twelve States, and visited all the larger towns in Ontario and Quebec, Canada, calling on managers of one or more places of amusement in one hundred and forty towns, or on an average of a little more than three and one-half towns per day—some going. He states that he can verify this record, and challenges all comers to duplicate it.

"IN THE HAREM OF HASCHEM" (Lubin).

"In the Harem of Haschem" is a romance of Arabia. The story is thrilling and the costuming and scenery realistic and beautiful. The tale is told in Bagdad and the atmosphere of the Arabian Night's dreams is well sustained. The touch of tragedy is well compensated with the sequel of a love episode.

Maisara, a collector of revenue for Haschem, the Caliph, wrongs a widow woman. She appeals to the Caliph and he orders the Maisara shall repay her an hundredful and lose his place. Vowing vengeance Maisara seeks his kinsmen, the tribal spirit being an Arabian characteristic. They counsel with him and decide Masiara shall send his daughter, Amina, to the Caliph as an ostensible peace offering, but in reality that she may assassinate him. She falls in love with Haschem and fails to redeem her promise. Maisara warns her that unless she carries out the undertaking he will do so himself. It drives home the horror of the deed she has promised. She throws the dagger from her and this is taken to Maisara by Zied, his cousin. Under pretense of seeing Amina, Maisara gains entrance to the harem, where Haschem is not closely guarded and where the blow can be struck before help can be summoned. Amina is horror stricken at his appearance. Her distress is secretly observed by Haschem, who is on guard against the treachery and takes the dagger from Maisara. On Amina's plea Maisara's life is saved and Amina finds happiness in the arms of the Caliph.

A NEW FILM VIEW OF CITYGIRL.

In the films Citygirl is almost always shown as a heartbreaker without heart. Countrygirl, on the other hand, has come into celluloid notice as a confiding, affectionate creature who loves as she is loved. Citygirl heartless, that is—Countrygirl loving. Just watch the screen!

But Thanhouser upsets some film traditions in a story of a young farmer who is won from his Countrygirl, by Citygirl, who is in the country on a vacation. In her grief, Countrygirl goes to victorious Citygirl with her story of the sweetheart lost.

And to assist the country girl to win back the man, the city girl fools him into thinking her (the city girl) a totally unrefined and undesirable creature, whereupon he immediately renounces her!

So he weds the country girl. This story of a city girl's "heartlessness" is released Friday, May 2, under the title of "The Widow's Stratagem."

HIAWATHA AT THE BERKELEY.

So great was the demand for a projection of the Hiawatha picture-masque after it was given at the American Museum of Natural History, that Mr. F. E. Moore has taken the Berkeley Theater, 19 West 44th Street, New York City, beginning May 3rd, with three performances, one at 10, the second at 11:30 and the third at 1:30, all of these at special prices for school children. There will be no performances on the Sundays, but each day, beginning May 5th, regular performances will be given at 3 and 8:30, and extra Saturday performances for children. At all performances for children, souvenirs made by the Indians will be given each child, and at every performance Mr. Pigott will recite Longfellow's poem.

EDISON STUDIO NOTES.

Mary Fuller recently had an opportunity to show what she knows about "first aid" when an automobile in which she was riding collided with a delivery wagon. The driver of the vehicle was injured. Miss Fuller was the first to reach his side and attended to him until the arrival of an ambulance.

William West denies with some vehemence that he is the actor of that name recently reported dead.

Richard Tucker, a comparatively new arrival on the screen, has made a tremendous impression by his excellent work in Edison films. He combines youth and good looks with a convincing manner that is winning him a host of friends.

VITAGRAPH STUDIO NOTES.

Miss Leah Baird will be seen shortly in an interesting love drama, "A Soul in Bondage," produced by the Vitagraph Company. In addition to playing the leading part, Miss Baird is also the author of the play. Several other Vitagraph successes owe their credit to her fertile imagination. Among them are "The Dawning" and "A Woman."

Among the recent additions to the menagerie of the Vitagraph Company are four lions and lionesses, and also some kangaroos. One of the latter animals escaped last Sunday while a pictureplay was being enacted on a farm near Metuchen, N. J. The animal led his keepers a lively chase across the fields, over which he proceeded with twenty-foot leaps. The men following him lost all track of the beast, but he was finally secured by some farm boys, who found that the animal had some way or other managed to break its leg. The photoplay in question was "The Circus Comes to Town." This will probably be released by the Vitagraph Company some time in June.

The Vitagraph motor boat enthusiasts are very busy just now getting their craft ready for business. Competition between them is keen and some interesting races are promised later in the season, probably after the return of Mr. Blackton, secretary of the Vitagraph Company, from the vacation he is now taking in Europe. Wally Van and Walter Arthur are especially keen on the sport and make a good combination against Charles Chapman and Eddie Wentworth, who are also well-known citizens of the motor boat world.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY NOTES.

The phenomenal success achieved by the Power's Cameragraph since its introduction to the London market some two years ago, has enjoyed a steady growth.

At the recent exposition in London the Walturdaw Company, Ltd. (sole agent for Nicholas Power Company), occupied one of the largest spaces. The fact that this company sold twenty Power's Cameragraphs in a single week is conclusive proof of the superiority of this machine.

In view of the many and varied makes of projectors on the English market this result is both emphatic and gratifying.

Power's No. 6A with motor and mechanical speed control has been approved for use in Galveston, Texas.

The following installations have been made during the past week:

A No. 6A complete Moyer and Bateman, Johnsburg, Pa., through the General Film Company, Buffalo, N. Y.

A No. 6A at the Majestic Theater, Worcester, Mass., by the New England Universal Film Company of Boston, Mass.

A No. 6 Cameragraph complete with Dissolving View Attachment at St. Stephen's Church, Winnipeg, Man., through the Canadian Film Co., Ltd., of Toronto.

One No. 6A complete with motor and mechanical speed control by Rosen Bros., 393 Grand Street, Brooklyn, through Picture Theater Equipment Co., 21 East 14th St., New York City.

"QUO VADIS" MOVIES SUPERIOR TO PLAY

Spectacular Aspects of This Famous Drama Superbly Shown at the Astor.

ROME REALLY IS BURNED.

Nero's Orgies and Persecution of Christians Make Thrilling Views.

No theatrical Canute has yet ordered the approaching waves of movies to retreat. On the other hand the managers seem inclined to make a virtue of necessity and open their theaters to the inevitable conquerors. There will soon be few temples of dramatic art in this city without a movie on their records.

Fresh evidence of the wonders of the pictures was supplied at the Astor Theater yesterday afternoon. A series to illustrate Sienkiewicz's "Quo Vadis?" was shown for the first time. Daniel Frohman contends that the public will not grow weary of moving pictures, but of inferior specimens of their kind. The combination of outlay and skill never produced anything so fine as the pictures shown yesterday.

With a good memory of several productions of the Polish writer's novel in dramatic form it is quite possible to say that none of them seemed to reconstruct the period of the play with the same completeness that these views do.

Massive pillars stand in front of the house of Vinitius and through the open doors of Petronius' corridors the spectators glimpse a garden rich in foliage and the white ornamentation of marble figures. The orgies of the court in Nero's palace proceed with a degree of naturalness which would never have been possible on the stage. The crowd in front of the palace as Rome burns; the Emperor hearing with astonishment their imprecations, and the sight of Petronius turning their affections once more to Caesar—these episodes were accomplished with a vivid flash of reality impossible to the dramatic stage.

It was of course the burning of Rome which most fully revealed the capacity of the pictures to indicate spectacle. Through streets swept by smoke and flame rushed panic stricken people. Houses tottered and crumbled about them as the flames advanced relentlessly.

With striking reality is the burning of the city represented; and the later views of charred and ruined buildings added their effectiveness to the scenes.

It was perhaps the most striking novelty of these pictures that the backgrounds never seemed to have been created for the special purposes of these various views. The action seemed on the other hand to be taking place in just the spots it would naturally have happened.

This sense of reality was of course secured by the trouble exercised in imparting a look of solidity to the scenes. Some of the out of door pictures, especially those showing the Christians at their devotions, sometimes in moonlight and at others bathed in the morning sunlight, were uncommon in their photographic quality.

These pictures were presented by a company of actors whose names were printed on the programme quite as if they were to appear in person on the stage of the Astor Theater yesterday afternoon instead of having acted these pictures in Italy. They were a competent lot, although modern in manner and appearance.

One of them was a Novelli, although not the famous Ermete. His first name began with "A."

Finer moving pictures were never seen here. What a pity they are not in color.

"QUO VADIS?" SEEN IN MOVING PICTURES

Thrilling "Movie" Drama Produced for First Time in Astor Theatre.

If any one has any doubt about the effectiveness and dramatic power that lies in moving pictures, let him hurry to the Astor Theater and witness that movie "punch," "Quo Vadis?" A finer film production could hardly be asked than this big stroke in motion picture drama that the Kleine-Cines Company showed here for the first time yesterday afternoon. They bill it as "the supreme masterpiece of photodrama," and one does not feel at all justified in contradicting this statement.

Sienkiewicz's famous story of Nero is closely followed in a magnificent series of pictures vibrating in dramatic composition—lifelike panorama of Nero's time. The story is strongly told in three acts, the first two of three parts each, and the last of two parts.

The staging of "The Burning of Rome" for this photo drama and, even more so, that of the great series of spectacles given in the Roman amphitheater, is a triumph of realism. Exciting chariot races cross the screen with so much "go" that they make those of the circus seem like child's play in comparison.

Certainly no scene the equal of that showing the lions let loose on the Christians in the arena has ever been shown on any stage or in any circus or other animal show. It is a marvel in photography, let alone motion pictures. But to go on and enumerate the "big" scenes in this tremendous photo drama would require too much space. The production is one of those things that must be seen to be appreciated, and to see this striking film production is to appreciate the important part the photo drama must play in the future, and to be alive to its tremendous appeal at the present time.

In the making of this film dramatization of "Quo Vadis" an exceptionally good company of actors—mostly Italians—was used. It is a pity their names cannot be printed here, for each deserves high praise.

"QUO VADIS?" SEEN IN STRIKING FILMS

Motion Pictures at the Astor Theatre Closely Follow the Text of the Story

BRILLIANT SCENES DEPICTED

Cohan & Harris plunged into the moving picture field last night when they showed at the Astor Theatre "Quo Vadis," an eight-reel film made by the Cines Company, of Rome, Italy, and brought into this country by George Kleine, of Chicago, a licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Company. The moving picture is an adaptation of the book by the same name.

American manufacturers will learn one thing from this film if they ever will learn it. That is that it is not necessary to keep the actors down on the ten-foot line all the time. The additional perspective gained in this picture by keeping the camera further from the players and action lends 50 per cent. to the spectacular worth of the production.

DIVIDED INTO THREE ACTS.

The action of the film closely follows the book. It is divided into three acts, the first two of which have three parts and the last has two. Scenes at a Roman banquet, not forgetting pointed intimations of the orgies of decadent Rome, are introduced in the first act, together with expository ac-audience that Vinitius, a nephew of Petronius, who is Nero's favorite, is deeply in love with Lygia; a Christian girl held by Rome as a hostage. Ursus, a huge slave, is Lygia's faithful ward and rescues her from the unwelcome attentions of Vinitius.

In Act II, the burning of Rome is the main spectacle. Great columns crash to the ground. The streets are filled with rabble, hurrying hither and thither, taking their scanty baggage with them. Red flames and black smoke fill the air. Inserted scenes show Vinitius searching for Lygia and Nero, at last gratifying his desire to see Rome in flames that he might have inspiration for his Iliad.

In the last act the mammoth arena is unrolled, crowded with people, with Nero in the royal box. The Christians are driven, dumbly protesting, mothers with children by their side among the number, into the arena. The lions come out by a trap door. As they get about ten feet from their prey the scene shifts to Nero gloating over the spectacle, and then the action shows the great animals crunching the bones of the dead.

URSUS RESCUES THE MAIDEN.

A huge bull dashes into the arena with a woman lashed to its back. "Lygia, Lygia! I believe! Oh, Christ, a miracle!" cries Vinitius. Ursus, pushed into the arena, sees the bull, wrestles with the animal and rescues Lygia. The anger of the populace forces Nero to give the thumbs up signal of mercy.

In the last scenes Chilo tells the people that it was Nero who burned Rome. The Apostle Peter and Nazarius are leaving Rome when the figure of the Master appears before them. "Quo vadis, Domine?" ("Whither goest thou, master?") they ask. He bids them turn back.

The reign of Nero is ended. With the people in revolt he tries suicide and one of his followers drives the dagger home.

The work of several of the cast is conspicuous. C. Cattaneo as Nero, G. Serena as Petronius, A. Novelli as Vinitius, Miss L. Giunchi as Lygia and Mrs. A. Cattaneo as Eunice, a Greek slave, later Petronius' mistress, are especially good.

Judging from the reception it received on its first appearance, "Quo Vadis?" in motion pictures is entitled to hold and occupy, on its merits, a legitimate place among Broadway attractions.

"QUO VADIS?" AT THE ASTOR

Moving Pictures of Famous Story of Rome Shown for First Time Here.

The Astor Theatre housed a moving-picture production for the first time yesterday, when the Kleine-Cines's presentation of "Quo Vadis?" was given there. The pictures, which were made in Italy, followed the events of the successful novel of that name by Sienkiewicz. The presentation was divided into three acts, which took more than two hours to show. Special incidental music was provided on a mechanical orchestral player.

The pictures represent the most ambitious photo drama that has yet been seen here. The production has many spectacular scenes and is full of pictorial effects that are striking. One of the notable things about the production is its success in fixing the atmosphere of the days of Nero. It is plain that a wealth of effort has been spent on details, and nothing occurs to destroy the illusion. The arena scenes are almost painful, so faithfully do they paint a picture of ruthless cruelty.

The two biggest scenes are the burning of Rome and the arena scene. Both employ hundreds of people, who are handled in a masterly manner, and the results are highly realistic. In the arena scene there are gladiatorial combats, chariot races, more than a score of lions, whose destruction of the Christian martyrs is managed in a way to bring gasps of horror from the audience and finally the combat between the giant Lygian, Ursus, and the bull which carries Lygia on its back.

In none of the pictures is there the slightest suggestion of canvas and paint, all of them being taken with a natural background. It is said that a huge arena was specially built for the production, and the film gives visible proof of the statement. The films are fine examples of motion-picture photography, all of them being perfectly lighted and the handling of the small army of supernumeraries admirable. If a feature moving-picture production can fill a Broadway theatre, "Quo Vadis?" ought to be able to do it.

'Quo Vadis' Done in 'Movies' at the Astor

Broadway Playhouse Has Its First "Film Drama" That Vividly Depicts Famous Novel.

They turned the Astor Theater into a motion picture playhouse yesterday, when for the first time in its history a "film drama" was presented. As the home of animated photography the Astor is different from other Broadway motion picture theaters, for its attraction is perhaps the most pretentious motion picture play that has been seen here, being a dramatization of Sienkiewicz's novel "Quo Vadis?"

If you would see Rome burn and witness the terrifying scenes which accompanied that disaster, then the new "Quo Vadis" motion pictures fill the bill, as it were. The Kleine-Cines Company, producers of the film, is said to have obtained special permission to take many of the views, several of which were taken in the Coliseum and among the Roman catacombs. The series of conflagration scenes is only one of the several interesting features, not the least of which are the struggles of the Roman gladiators in the arena and the charge of the lions among the Christian martyrs.

The action, which follows closely the events told in the book, is rapid. There were no waits while the operator was changing films and the intermission between the three "acts" were about the right length. Where once an orchestra of union musicians played popular airs, a Wurlitzer organ with gilt pipes discoursed sacred compositions at intervals and imitated the roaring of a lion.

Whether the Italian actors who played before the camera are more proficient as "movie" actors than American players is hard to say. The spectacular features of the film, the lions, the chariot races, and the burning of Rome are what will attract persons to the Astor.

(Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin)

"Quo Vadis" Pictures

The church and the stage are drawn mighty close together in the photo-drama, "Quo Vadis?" which was given its initial production at the Astor Theater last evening. Wonderfully interesting is this masterpiece of motion pictures as presented by the Kleine-Cines Co. For two hours, with only two brief intermissions, the pictures of the religious drama follow in rapid succession, unfolding the story that is so well known.

The burning of Rome is probably the most remarkable moving picture, or series of pictures ever shown. From the time that the torch is applied until the splendid buildings totter and fall, one realistic spectacle follows another; and while Nero fiddles and the persecuted Christians seek in vain for shelter, the flames seem fairly to leap from the screen.

The other "big scene" is the amphitheater, wherein several hundred lions are turned among the cowering Christians. As a fitting climax to this sensational spectacle a live bull with Lygia, the Christian girl bound to his back, rushes madly about the great arena until the faithful Ursus, by his wonderful strength, twists its neck and saves the life of his beloved mistress.

"Quo Vadis" is really the most wonderful moving picture entertainment ever presented. The religious coloring is heightened by incidental music upon a great church organ. A fashionable audience, which filled the theater, was moved to wild applause as several of the most startling climaxes. The "Quo Vadis" pictures are well worth seeing.

ARE YOU GETTING AN ABSOLUTELY "DEPENDABLE" POSTER SERVICE?

IF SO, DON'T READ THE FOLLOWING LETTER; YOU'RE NOT INTERESTED.

Columbia Am. Co., Columbia, Pa., April 15th, 1913.

Exhibitors' Adv. & Spec. Co., 30 Union Sq., N. Y. C.

Gentlemen:—I wish to compliment you on the excellence of your poster service. You have the splendid record of never having made a mistake in filling an order during the whole period (covering many months), we have done business together.

Respectfully, WM. E. POWELL, Manager.

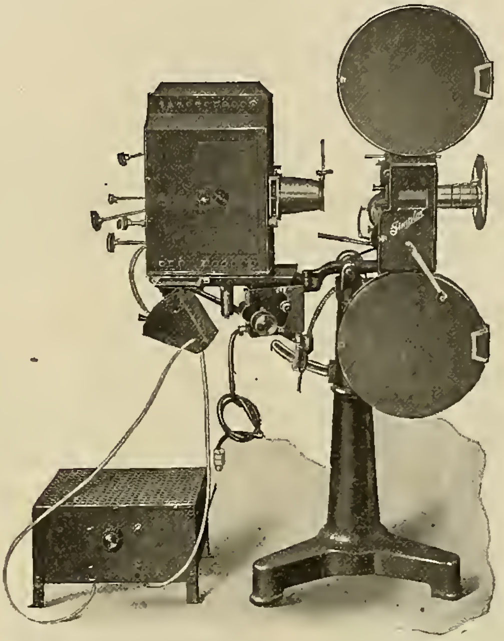
See a Simplex at Our Expense

ASK your exchange or dealer to order one for you to look at. Don't let him talk you out of it.

Perhaps his profit is greater on some other machine.

He runs no risk if you don't buy it, for we will take it off his hands and pay the transportation charges both ways.

We want every exhibitor and operator to see a Simplex projector. Compare it, part for part, with the others. Judge for yourself of its merit.



Catalogue A fully describes the Simplex

You are under absolutely no obligation to buy it if you don't like its design and construction, but for your own satisfaction see it before you buy another make of machine.

If your dealer hesitates about ordering one, write us, and we will give you the name and address of a dealer or exchange who will gladly supply you.

CORRESPONDENCE

NEW ENGLAND.

ON SUNDAY, April 6, the Moving Picture Operators' Union, Boston Local received reports that the situation in one South Boston theater was unchanged. Agent Franke reported that he had offered three moving picture machines and operators to Mayor Fitzgerald for the flood sufferers. The Mayor has sent a vote of thanks for the proffer. This local is in a most flourishing condition, and things are working harmoniously among its members.

A recent incorporation is the Mayer and Hirshfield Company, of Boston. Adolph Mayer, Kathryn A. McDermott and Wilton Hirshfield are the promoters. This is a $2,000 concern.

On Monday, April 7, Douglas Fairbanks and members of his company, presenting "Hawthorne of the U. S. A." at a Boston theater, were the guests of Edwin Bower Hesser, at Tremont Temple, Boston, to view the Kinemacolor pictures of "Actual Scenes of the Balkan War" and the "Making of the Panama Canal." As the scenes of 'Hawthorne of the U. S. A." are laid in the Balkans, the interest of Mr. Fairbanks and his company, are particularly directed to that portion of the Kinemacolor entertainment. "The Chocolate Soldier," with its scenes also laid in the Balkans, is soon to come to Boston, and the writer understands that members of that company will also be invited to attend the Kinemacolor exhibition at Tremont Temple, which is drawing capacity houses.

Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass., has at last recognized motion pictures, and this week, for the first time, moving pictures were thrown upon the screen, at the Harvard Union, when members of the freshmen class assembled for their weekly entertainment. The inherent value of the Kinematograph is surely breaking down every prejudice that may be raised against its universal use.

The Victor Amusement Company, of Worcester, Mass., was incorporated for $10,000 this week, with Albert V. Pickering, Richard Pickering, Albert Fisk, George Walts and Frank W. Wellis as the promoters. A moving picture and vaudeville theater is proposed by the new concern for Worcester.

On Wednesday evening, April 16, the Catholic Club of Everett, jointly with the Everett theater, gave a performance for the benefit of the flood sufferers. A minstrel show, with 65 people in the cast formed the entertainment. Manager Brown of the Everett theater was only too happy to give the free use of his theater to the Club, for such a worthy cause. Manager Brown has always been particularly active in co-operating with the local societies of his town, and has reaped his reward in the way of increased business, as his theater is held in the highest esteem.

West Somerville, Mass., people were interested in the announcement that Joseph A. Hobbs, owner of property at the corner of Holland and Dover Streets, with a frontage in Davis Square, is ready to replace the old building with a first class theater, with a seating capacity of 1,200, provided Mayor Burns will agree to issue a license for the operation of a moving picture and vaudeville theater. The writer understands that plans for the proposed theater have already been submitted to the Mayor. A majority of the business men of Davis Square are said to be in favor of the plan, and, although Mayor Burns has hardly begun his investigation, it is thought that he will grant a theater license at this location, under certain conditions. There surely can not be any good reason why the license should not be granted unless West Somerville insists on being way behind the times.

The Bowdoin Square theater, Boston, has secured the right to show Kinemacolor pictures, starting April 14,. This is the first time that Kinemacolor subjects have been shown in this city, at a ten-cent admission price.

On Sunday, April 13, the Boston American used the greatest portion of a full-page to explain how motion pictures were used in the public schools to teach the proper care of the teeth. This special article was liberally illustrated, showing photographs from actual moving pictures.

New England exhibitors, using programs from the Mutual Film Corporation were most pleased to find out that the New York Motion Picture Company, producers of Kay-Bee, Broncho and Keystone photoplay, had signed a new two-year contract with that firm. The three brands controlled by the New York Motion Picture Company are particularly popular in this section.

Pearl White, leading lady in Crystal Films, visited Danbury, Conn., last week and while there, improved the opportunity to give a talk on motion pictures at the Majestic theater. Mr. Meehan, who owns the Empire theater, reports that Miss White interested her hearers to such an extent, that his patrons are now clamoring for a return engagement.

The First Universalist Church and grounds, have just been purchased by the E. J. Caron Amusement Company, at Manchester, New Hampshire. Mr. E. J. Caron states that about $25,000 was paid for the property, for which his company had been negotiating for months. A model photoplay theater will be made out of the church, which has a suitable location for this business.

D. P. Egan, of Bridgeport, Conn., announces that he has had plans made calling for a moving picture and vaudeville theater to seat 750 persons, and will start building in the near future.

S. Z. Poli announces that the plans for the construction of his new theater at New Haven, Conn., have just been prepared and passed. This house is to seat very nearly 2,500, of which total there will be a balcony seating about 700, a gallery, holding 600 persons and an orchestra of approximately 1,150 seating capacity. The new house will stand on a piece of land measuring 150 by 100, and it is estimated that the cost will be well over $200,000. Mr. Poli hopes to have this theater ready for its opening performance by January 1, 1914. Vaudeville and pictures are scheduled to do the business.

James H. Clarkin, of the Park Casino, Hartford, Conn., is no longer in charge and F. C. Curtis, has now taken over the active management. Mr. Clarkin states that Mr. Curtis intends to make very extensive alterations and improvements, and then will operate the Park Casino as a moving picture and vaudeville theater, to seat 2,000 people.

A large number of the S. Z. Poli theaters in New England will change over from vaudeville and picture shows to stock company attractions, for the Spring and Summer season. This plan is carried out each year, but the houses never fail to return to vaudeville and pictures early in the Fall. Poli's theaters at Springfield and Worcester, Mass., and at Bridgeport, Hartford and New Haven, Conn., are all scheduled for stock shows.

John Keon, known to all the New England trade, had a most encouraging opening day's business at his new Federal theater, Salem, Mass., on March 24, and up-to-date business has been increasing daily, until it is now a case of "come early or stand." Even with a seating capacity of about 1,600, Mr. Keon finds he is often at a loss to seat his patrons. John Keon, is well known to Salem photoplay fans, as he had owned and managed a theater there, previous to building the Federal, which is strictly modern and high-class in every particular. The Federal is of brick and cement construction, and is also thoroughly fireproof. Good programs of photoplays, projected by two brand new, improved 1913 model Motiographs, tell the story of the Federal's success.

Messrs. Yeaton Brothers report that business is good with them, which explains why these enterprising exhibitors are about to build two new theaters, one at Wolfeboro, and the other at Newmarket, N. H., to take care of all the people wishing to take in a real good moving picture program. The Masonic Temple at Wolfeboro seats 700, while the Star theater at Newmarket has a capacity of about 500. A straight program of photoplays, and illustrated songs is bringing home the "bacon" for Yeaton Brothers.

Active preparations are being made for the coming exposition at Bridgeport, Conn., at which moving pictures are scheduled to play a most prominent part. Moving picture cameras are now busily employed in this city; taking views of local scenes, industries and celebrities. Some of the larger business houses of Bridgeport are being photographed to show the commercial progress of this city.

William Fox announces that he has just entered into a contract, whereby all of his theaters will soon begin to use Kinemacolor film service. This contract applies to the Fox theaters in New England, as well as elsewhere.

George Arnold is about to start work on the erection of a new moving picture theater at Rockville, Conn., to seat 425 persons.

The Scenic theater, Westbrook, Me., was sold this week by Woodman Brothers to Ray Poole, formerly associated with the Thanhouser Company. Mr. Poole will continue to operate the Scenic as a photoplay theater. The Star theater, which is managed by Alfred Fredette, is the strongest opposition to the scenic, but both houses do a nice business.

The Hartford, Conn., "Courant," a very live and enterprising newspaper, is making quite a success of its moving picture department. It would pay every editor to look into the advisability of instituting such a department, that would surely appeal to all readers.

Middletown, Conn., has a very broad minded and intelligent gentleman, in the person of the Rev. George B. Gilbert, a clergyman, who realizes the true worth of the pictures. Rev. Gilbert is intending to show moving pictures at Lakeview Park, near Middletown, this summer.

The Columbia theater, Taunton, Mass., is being completely renovated, and a stage has been added, as also has been a balcony. The theater has benefited greatly from the many needed improvements.

The Hudson theater, South Main Street, Springfield, Mass., is a new theater, and one of the finest in that city. It has a seating capacity of nearly 1,000, and is of fireproof construction, and thoroughly first-class and modern in every way. John Hudson, formerly of the Globe theater of that city, will be the general manager of the theater bearing his name. When it is taken into consideration that Mr. Hudson is thoroughly familiar with what Springfield theatergoers demand in the way of moving pictures and vaudeville and also that it has a fine location, it is easy to predict that the Hudson theater should be a prosperous house.

The Children's Welfare League, of Roxbury, Mass., held a public meeting at 4 P. M., April 18, in the ward room of the Roxbury Municipal Courthouse, for the consideration of moving pictures. Representatives of the Parents' Associations, the schools, and of moving picture theaters, spoke.

At Tremont Temple, commencing Monday, April 28, and for the following two weeks the citizens of Boston will, for the first time, have the opportunity of seeing the "Life of John Bunyan," and his classical allegory, "Pilgrim's Progress," made by the Hochstetter-Pierson Company. This picture contains the celebrated findings of F. W. Hochstetter, the greatest since the days of Deguerre.

S. Z. Poli, owning a chain of New England vaudeville and moving picture theaters, will have a regular press bureau next season, provided the permission of E. F. Albee can be secured. Abe Levy is the man Mr. Poli has in mind for this position. Mr. Poli hopes to be able to secure much free newspaper publicity for his theaters by means of this new scheme of his.

The Roderick Theater, Monson, Mass., was sold at public auction this week by Raymond J. Jodoin. This house was playing photoplays and illustrated songs, but business was slack.

Springfield, Mass., exhibitors, were interested last week in watching the results of the attempt of one of their number to show an unauthorized picture of "The Miracle." A. H. Woods, who controls the real "Miracle" pictures, immediately notified Attorney Thomas J. Barry, of Boston, to take action in the matter. Mr. Barry quickly made for Springfield, and had but little difficulty in securing an injunction restraining the exhibition of the pictures. The courts of Massachusetts and New York have both upheld the genuine Prof. Max Reinhardt pictures, as having the sole right to the use of the name "Miracle" in connection with the moving pictures.

The Empire Theater, Holyoke, Mass., is finding that the theater-going public of that city is not over-enthusiastic about the stock-company attractions it has been presenting. April 26 marks the end of this policy, and vaudeville and pictures are expected to be inaugurated in its stead.

Harry Cohen, who has been connected with Poli's Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., for the last eight years, has severed his connection with that theater, and has been engaged as treasurer of the Broadway Theater, Springfield, Mass. Mr. Cohen is well-known among the trade, and considered a capable worker.

W. D. Ascough, manager of Poli's Theater, Hartford, Conn., was made an honorary member of the Governor's Foot Guard Band last week. This action was considered quite an honor, as the Band is a rather exclusive organization.

The Princess Theater, Hartford, Conn., is now presenting Kinemacolor pictures, also the Casino Theater, of that city. The Princess will continue to exhibit some black and white subjects, while the Casino intends to use Kinemacolor exclusively.

Walter T. Murphy, manager of the Lyceum Theater, New London, Conn., will show Kinemacolor subjects on and after May 1. The Lyceum holds the reputation of being the best house in New London devoted to vaudeville and pictures. Manager Murphy states that his business is increasing in good shape.

James P. Baxter is considering the advisability of building a new theater at the corner of Congress and High streets, Portland, Maine. The location is excellent, and a theater can be erected to seat well over 1,000.

It is rumored that the Park Theater, Manchester, N. H., is to give up its policy of stock-company shows, and replace it with vaudeville and picture programs.

The Kinemacolor entertainment at Tremont Temple, Boston, added an extra attraction this week, "Washington Women's Suffrage Parade" and the "Inaugural Parade." "The Making of the Panama Canal," and "Actual Scenes of the Balkan War," are the two Kinemacolor subjects that are creating no end of favorable comment in Boston.

M. Blumenberg, owner of the Casco Theater, at Portland, Me., may build a second house in that city. The Casco is a rather small house, but it does an unusually large business, with photoplays and singing specialties. This house is unusually well managed.

S. Z. Poli secured no end of free publicity for his Poli Theater, Springfield, Mass., when he promised a guarantee of at least $1,500 to the building fund of a new Y. M. C. A. The papers commented on the liberality and public spirit displayed by Mr. Poli in such a worthy cause.

Up to a while ago, Mayor Hardy, of Fitchburg, Mass., granted licenses for Sunday exhibitions of moving pictures. This attitude on the part of Mayor Hardy immediately evoked a great deal of talk and opposition on the part of the local clergy. In fact, so noisily did the clergy clamor, that Mayor Hardy decided to abide by the wishes of the reverend gentlemen, and refused to grant further licenses. Salem, Mass., is another Massachusetts town in which Sunday conditions are the same. It's about time that the exhibitors of these towns got busy, and try to see what they can do to change matters.

One of the largest real estate deals ever consummated in Rutland, Vt., was closed last week, and included the site for the new $75,000 theater for Thomas A. Boyle, the well-known and popular manager of the Rutland Opera House. The plans for the new theater have already been accepted by the local authorities. The new theater is slated to have a seating capacity of 1,400, and will be located on Center street, the main thoroughfare in that city, and in the very heart of the business district. Ground will be broken within a very short time. Mr. Boyle hopes to have his theater open by the latter part of August. Rutland has sorely needed a first-class, thoroughly modern and up-to-date theater, which is exactly what the new house will be. The house has not been named. The policy will be vaudeville and pictures, and some road shows.

Mayor John F. Fitzgerald, and members of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, who are going on a tour of inspection of the Panama Canal, secured a private view of those scenes of the Kinemacolor pictures at Tremont Temple, Boston, having to do with the construction of the canal.

The Hyperion Theater, New Haven, Conn., has booked the Kinemacolor pictures of the Panama Canal and Balkan War, for an extended engagement. The week starting April 14, was the beginning of the engagement, and Manager E. D. Eldridge states that he is well pleased with the business thus far. The Hyperion is considered the best house in New Haven, and, as a rule, plays nothing but the best road shows.

Bath, Maine, is to have a new theater, seating about 1200 people, built by the Abrams Amusement Company, of Portland, Me. Mr. Hiram Abrams states that the new house will be by far the best in Bath, and further, that nothing will be left undone to erect a handsome, fireproof and thoroughly modern theater. Vaudeville and pictures will form the program.

Louis M. Boas, manager of the Academy Theater, Fall River, Mass., offered an unusually large bill of vaudeville and pictures last week, due to the fact that the Academy passed its fortieth milestone during the week. In all its long career, it is very doubtful if the Academy has ever been more prosperous than it is at present, under the able control of Mr. Boas, one of the cleverest vaudeville and photoplay men in this section.

J. J. Haggerty, who has been connected with the Court Square Theater, Springfield, Mass., for a long period of time, is now associated with the new Broadway Theater of that city.

Both the Pastime and Premier theaters, of Lowell, Mass., are closed, but it is expected that they will be reopened in the near future, with programs of motion pictures and illustrated songs.

Boylen's Theater, Taunton, Mass., which was recently opened to the public, has been leased by Messrs. Donovan and Walker, for a long term of years. Boylen's Theater is thoroughly modern, and one of the best in the city. With programs of vaudeville and pictures, it is safe to say that Walker & Donovan have a winner in Boylen's. This concern is a growing one and now is interested in four theaters at Taunton, all of which are doing very well with photoplays.

Very extensive alterations are being made in the Columbia Theater, of Taunton, Mass., and it will not be ready for another week or two. A great many badly needed improvements are being made. The regulation programs of pictures will be offered as usual by the Columbia.

On April 14, the Opera House, Lawrence, Mass., opened to the public, under the management of Mr. William White. The Victoria Theater, also of Lawrence, playing programs of pictures and illustrated songs, is likewise under the management of Mr. White. The Opera House will show vaudeville and feature pictures, and there is every reason to believe that it will make good. Manager White knows what the people of Lawrence want, and is prepared to give it to them.

HENRY.

ST. LOUIS.

THE Franklin Avenue Improvement Association, composed of prominent business men along that thoroughfare, met recently and discussed plans pro and con relative to the erection of a $65,000 motion picture and vaudeville house. It is the purpose of the merchants who are live, energetic hustlers to improve that street by erecting a popular price house which will cater to the many thousands of patrons of the popular price houses and put forth a brand of amusement somewhat similar to the class of entertainment now offered by the Hippodrome, which has done so much good for Sixth Street, and which has caused that thoroughfare to be christened the "St. Louis White Way." A committee was organized to raise the necessary funds. C. A. Smith was chosen president; Herman Mauch, vice-president; A. C. Neidringhaus, secretary, and W. F. Durkham, treasurer.

Captain Roald Amundsen, discoverer of the South Pole, lectured at the Odeon, Monday, March 3rd, and with the aid of motion pictures showed some interesting views of life on the ship "Fram" and other interesting features connected with the now historic attainment of reaching a goal long sought for by hardy spirits for many centuries.

Frank L. Tabot, owner of the Hippodrome, was recently presented with a $400 set of silverware by attaches of that theater for his many acts of courtesy toward them in the past, and especially for the donation of the house on last New Year's, which he turned over to allow the employes to give a benefit.

Chief Inspector H. C. Henley of the Fire Prevention Bureau, aided by the fire insurance men of St. Louis, is strongly urging the Municipal Assembly to pass a bill now pending before that body asking for the regulation of film exchanges situated in the downtown fire skyscraper district, due to the fact that the said film exchanges carry an explosive, very dangerous, in the shape of "a film of nitro-cellulose, which burns with explosive violence and cannot be extinguished by the devices usually at hand." Chief Henley says that film exchange managers do not attach enough importance to the danger this explosive carries, and earnestly solicits the Assembly to pass the measure. The bill, if passed, will provide that each reel of film containing 500 feet or more shall be kept in a separate metal box, except when it is being examined or repaired. The bill also provides that films shall be stored in a concrete or brick vault provided with tight-fitting automatic bank vault doors. The vaults must be lighted only by vapor-proof incandescent lamps, the wiring to be carried in iron conduits and controlled by switches outside. The bill forbids the use of any heating apparatus except hot air, hot water or steam, and all smoking is strictly prohibited. Another important provision in the bill is to the effect that no film exchange shall be conducted in any building higher than two stories, or in any building used as a habitation, with the maintenance in every room containing nitro-cellulose films of two three-gallon chemical fire extinguishers, two pails of water and two pails of sand, with a penalty for violation of any provision of the ordinance amounting to not less than $25 nor more than $500. It can readily be seen from the above that the measure is drastic, to say the least.

The Grand Central, at Sixth and Market Streets, is doing a thriving business. With vaudeville to right of him and vaudeville to left of him, Mr. Sievers, who has managed this house for years, continues to demonstrate that the public knows what they want when they want it. Mr. Sievers has the best organ in town and a corps of assistants looking after the wants of the patrons. These assistants are the essence of politeness, and picture house managers could learn a good deal by patterning after them.

The office of the St. Louis representative of the Moving Picture World is now located at 909 North Third Street, and all matter respecting St. Louis news will be taken care of if addressed to that number.

The New Grand Central, a $150,000 theater the perfection in moving picture houses, was opened Monday, March 31. The new theater is located at the northeast corner of Grand and Lucas Avenues, and was put up by a company composed of William Sievers, manager of the present house known as the Grand Central on 6th and aMrket Streets, in the downtown district. Associated with Mr. Sievers in the building of the new playhouse are Edmond Koeln, City Collector, Otto F. Stifel a brewer, Theodore Rassieur, a lawyer. The New Grand Central makes the fourth new picture house to go up in the Grand Avenue district, which has come to the front very rapidly the past few years as an amusement center. The New Grand Central is built of re-inforced concrete as the basis of its structure with concrete floors and rough cast stucco as the exterior cover, the only wood in the house is in conjunction with the furnishings for the seats. The total seating capacity is estimated at 2,000 of which 1,200 are on the lower floor which measures 80 x 100 feet. The proscenium arch is 40 feet wide by 25 feet high adhering to the general dimensions of the present downtown St. Louis theaters. The plans for the theater were under the supervision of Hirsch Helfensteller and Watson architects.

The temporary injunction granted to the Street and Smith Publishing Company, restraining the Atlas Film Co., -of St. Louis, from using the title Nick Carter fiction hero and detective in the Atlas production of "The Great $100,000 Jewel Mystery" was recently reversed by the United States Court of Appeals. Street and Smith who publish a weekly containing the adventures of the said "Nick Carter," charged that the Atlas Film Co., had no right to use the name. The Court of Appeals held that because the Street and Smith Co., had no copyright to the name there had been no infringement, and the Atlas people were within their rights in dramatizing any of the stories of Street and Smith under the same name.

Negotiations are under way for the erection of a moving picture house at southeast corner of Market and 23rd Streets. The house will be erected by C. H. Turpin of the Adler Goldman Commission Co. The area of the site is on a lot 100 feet by 144 feet and was leased on a basis of four per cent. on a valuation of $50,000. Vaudeville will also be shown in conjunction with the pictures.

Mr. O. E. Goebel, president of the St. Louis Motion Picture Co., 25th and Montgomery Streets, has announced the purpose of his company to enlarge the factory and double the capacity of the business. The fact that the St. Louis Motion Picture Company has had to keep three shifts of employees working night and day for months to keep up with orders led to the plans for increasing the plant.

Kalem's magnificent picture "From the Manger to the Cross," was put on Easter week at the Talbot Hippodrome and crowded that popular house to the doors. So many people being unable to see the pictures Easter week, Manager Talbot decided to give the public another chance and the reel was put on again the week of April 12.

The Grand Opera House, the oldest playhouse in the city, has been remodeled and was opened to the public the past week when in conjunction with eleven acts of vaudeville, the Edison talking pictures were put on. The New Grand as it will be known has been remodeled to a greater seating capacity and will seat over three thousand, making it the largest in the city.

LUBIN.

PEDRO'S TREACHERY (May 5).—Ned Fields and Helen Andrews are sweethearts, when Bob Murry, the new foreman, arrives. Helen is immediately infatuated with this handsome cattleman, and leaves Ned much chagrined. A Mexican workman observes this and gives Ned the laugh. Ned knocks him down and Pedro, the Mexican, swears vengeance. Helen and Bob, the new foreman, later get married. Pedro, in the meantime, sees an opportunity to square his account with Ned. He steals Ned's chaps from the bunkhouse, and disguised by a handkerchief and Ned's hat, sneaks into Andrew's home and steals the money which Bob had procured to pay off the men. Old man Andrews catches him in the act. A struggle ensues and Andrews is mortally wounded. Ned, returning from searching for some absolute suspect, goes to the door of the home and hears Helen tell Bob and the doctor that she saw Ned disappear through the door as she entered the room.

Knowing that no pity will be shown him by the cowmen when they learn of this, he determines to cross the border until he can clear his name and prove his innocence. He does so, and there meets a Mexican Senorita and falls in love with her. Chapo is caught being cruel to an animal and discharged from the Andrews' ranch. He also goes to Mexico and is hired by Juanita, later meeting with Ned. He attempts to bribe Ned by showing him a clipping from a home paper. Pedro, being unable to blackmail Ned, he takes the clipping to the girl, Juanita. Ned calls on Juanita that evening and learns of the act, and determines to settle with Pedro. They have a struggle, a revolver is discharged, and Pedro is seriously wounded. The sheriff, in the meantime, who has secured evidence of Pedro's guilt through the confession of his (Pedro's) squaw, appears upon the scene in time to arrest the guilty one and send the sweethearts into each others' arms.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE DEEP (May 6).—Olly, the lighthouse keeper's daughter, is persuaded by her father to accept the attentions of Joe, a fisherman, whom she dislikes. Dick Mathews arrives at the seashore with his mother to spend his vacation and calls at the lighthouse in view of renting a boat for a daily row. He meets Olly and it is a case of love at first sight. They are seen quite frequently together by Joe. The seed of vengeance now sprouts in his heart, and being cognizant of Dick taking a daily row, saws the oars partly in half in the hopes that Dick would row out to sea, the oars break, and that he would perish. It occurs, however, that Olly, deciding to play a joke on Dick, takes out the boat. When out quite a distance the oars break and she is tossed around by the waves. Dick goes down to where his boat is kept, followed from behind by Joe, who is anxious to see his plans fulfilled, but is surprised to see that his boat is gone. He finds Olly's bonnet, and, thinking that she has played a joke, passes on. Joe is horrified to see the boat gone, and on finding Olly's bonnet, it occurs to him instantly that the fate he prepared for Dick has befallen Olly, and he rushes to her father, stating that Olly must have drifted into the sea. The father rushes down to the sea, followed by Joe, and they start a search, Joe in a boat, the father searching the shore. Dick, on looking from a rocky elevation overlooking the sea, spies Olly frantically waving her apron in the drifting boat, and with the aid of two fishermen, rows out and rescues her just as she collapses from exhaustion. The sea becomes very rough and Joe's boat is wrecked and he swims to a reef, where he finds the wreck of Olly's boat. He becomes remorse-stricken, but he realizes that he is doomed. The next morning Olly is taken to her father, whom she tells of Joe's dastardly attempt to kill Dick. The father, wild with rage, rushes out to search for Joe. He finds Joe's body washed ashore and proceeds to denounce him, but sees that he is dead.

HATTIE'S NEW HAT (May 8).—Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Smith, neighbors of the Hotalings, have new hats, and Mrs. Hotaling tells her husband that she really must have a new lid to be equal with the others.› Arthur demurs, but Hattie not only gets the price, but takes her husband with her to bring the package home. When Arthur sees the box he nearly swoons. It is big enough to hold a rocking chair. To navigate the streets and get by without injuring people, requires all of his optic measurement, and with all of his care he runs a-foul of many offensive and inoffensive pedestrians, which cause arguments that are annoying. Reaching home Mrs. Hotalling shows the neighbors the largest box and dearest little hat ever seen. Arthur is worn out with the job and well nigh demented, attempts suicide by getting into the box and attaching a gas heater hose. Hattie rescues him and administers a spanking to make him behave.

SHE MUST BE UGLY (May 8).—Robert Burns is tired of having his stenographers quit their jobs to get married. He hits upon an idea—to advertise for a stenographer that is so ugly there is no chance for her to get married. Pretty girls apply for the position, but are decidedly turned down on account of their good looks. Mae Hotely decides to make herself ugly and applies for the position. The boss engages her. One Sunday afternoon, while he is out walking in the park, he meets her in her own proper person, and falls violently in love, not knowing that she is his own stenographer. He tries to scrape up an acquaintance with her, but she appeals to a policeman for protection. He is utterly miserable until one day in the office, when Mae's smoked glasses fall off. He sees through the rest of her make-up; she is the girl of his dreams. Everything ends happily, as she promises to be his stenographer for life.

A MOCK MARRIAGE (May 9).—John Colby, fortune spoiled and a reckless ne'er-do-well, on a jaunt to the little town of Westbury, meets Betty Carter, the daughter of 'Lige Carter, the country grocer. Betty is artlessness personified, and Colby fills her mind with tales of city life, and then leaves her dreaming of gay parties and autos. Upon returning to the city Colby boasts of his conquest to several of his reckless companions. His friends doubt the story. Colby becomes angered and says that he will show them. He loads the party in an auto and speeds out to the cross roads grocery. The party finds Betty at the well and the girl is the recipient of much flattery when Colby introduces all of his friends. The old grocer sees the visitors and the sand of suspicion is blown into his eye. He orders the party away. One of Colby's companions proposes a mock marriage ceremony, and Colby, angry at the girl's father, agrees. The girl is sent for and the preparations made for the pretended ceremony. Old man Carter sees Betty steal away, and, seizing a shot gun, follows. He comes upon the young profligates just as they are going through the ceremony, and as they prepare to take Betty away with them. The old grocer fires, mortally wounding Colby. Betty turns against her father. She has Colby taken to her father's home, where she nurses him back to life. During the interim the city chap has fallen in love with her. This time a real minister is brought into service, and all are made happy, even old Mr. Carter, who is pleased that matters were so easily mended.

A GIRL SPY IN MEXICO (Special, 2 parts, May 10).—In the hills of old Mexico the skirmishings that ravished the lives of its people continued intermittently for weeks. Lieut. Blanco's sweetheart, the Senorita Armaje, having heard no word from him, goes to his camp, finds him, and determines to work for her lover's side of the question.· She dons the garb of a red cross nurse and enters the Federal lines and conveys to Blanco from time to time important information. She is finally discovered stealthily returning to camp and is placed under arrest. The spy, who has been sent out by the Federal Colonel Ferro, is badly wanted by the Insurgents, and is thrown in the hands of the Insurgent's leader by the braveness of Armaje, who, as he is climbing over a cliff, chops the rope in two with rocks and throws him into their arms. Lieut. Blanco conceives the idea of dressing in Federal uniform and entering the Federal camp in person, using the spy to show him the way. After arriving in said camp, he discovers that his sweetheart has been placed under arrest on the serious charge of being a spy. He effects her escape. Col. Ferro, a ferocious Federal officer, after learning of her departure, makes dire threats to capture every Insurrecto in his territory and starts out to accomplish his end. He invades the Insurgent's stronghold, and there, after terrific fighting, lasting several hours, he accomplishes his desires, and Lieut. Blanco and his sweethetrt are made prisoners of war, the Colonel marching them onward to what end we know not.

SELIG.

AN OLD ACTOR (May 5).—Murdock, a mediocre actor, is nearing the end of his career. All his life he has had the ambition to play the part of Richelieu. He is now, in his old age, playing a small part with Edwin Irving, a star who is impersonating the great Cardinal Richelieu. Old Murdock's memory is beginning to fail him, and his heart has had "spells." He fails to turn up on time at rehearsal one day, and when he does get there, he can't recall his lines. A repetition of this sort of thing occurs, and he is discharged. He falls asleep in the "extra" dressing-room and dreams he is playing Richelieu. The other players dress for the street and depart. The electric lights are turned off. The old janitor comes around with a lantern to lock up. He discovers Murdock and throws him out. The old actor, bewildered and with his dreams still vividly before him, wanders back to the theater, gains entrance to the deserted stage through a coal chute, gets into the star's dressing-room, dons the Richelieu costume, turns on all the stage lights, and plays Richelieu grandeloquently and to his heart's content. His ambition is realized; but his feeble spark of vitality spends itself in the heroic effort and old Murdock falls back into the throne chair, dead. The next day at rehearsal they find him there, a sublime old figure clothed in the scarlet and ermine of Cardinal Richelieu.

A WELDED FRIENDSHIP (May 6).—Violet Trevor, whose mother has recently died, starts out to find her father, who sometime before had gone to Alaska to search for gold. After a long, difficult, and fruitless journey, she finally reaches an obscure Alaskan village. She sees an American flag outside one of the snow-banked huts, and stumbles inside utterly exhausted. John Bowling, owner of the hut, helps her to a chair and hastens to make her comfortable. She tells him of her search and announces that she is the daughter of Mary Wilton, who had married Paul Trevor. Then she sinks into a sleep of utter exhaustion. John Bowling sits and stares into the fire. In the flames he sees a retrospective vision of the past twenty years.

Handsome young Paul Trevor, candidate for State's Attorney, meets and falls in love with pretty Mary Wilton, a stenographer in the office of Martin Kelly, a crooked politician. Later Kelly attemupts to take liberties with Mary, and Bowling, a friend of Trevor's, kills him, while attempting to protect the girl. Trevor is accused of the crime, but Bowling and Mary save him by their testimony. Before Bowling can be rearested, he departs for the Arctic on a whaling schooner. He is shipwrecked, but eventually finds his way to a semi-civilization in Alaska. In the meantime Trevor and Mary Wilton have married. The flames die out; Violet awakes and hears Bowling's story. Together they start out to hunt for her father. They eventually find him, and his mine—which is called "The Welded Friendship."

HATCHING CHICKENS (May 6).—An educational subject demonstrating the efficiency of the incubator.

BELLE BOYD—A CONFEDERATE SPY (May 7).—Belle Boyd was one of the most daring and dashing figures of the South in the great Civil War. She was captured and imprisoned a number of times, and was personally commended by General Stonewall Jackson for her distinguished services on behalf of his army and her country. The details of this story are fictional, although it is an historic fact. Belle Boyd went through the zone of fire on a battlefield, escaping by dropping to the ground between every volley and then jumping to her feet and running toward the Confederate battery.

The scene opens with the home of Belle Boyd in neutral ground. She and her girl companions are "sewing-up" the gallant battle-scarred Southerners, whose uniforms were necessarily neglected after the first few years of strenuous service. The watchful darkey runs into the parlor where the tailoring is proceeding on the living models and sounds the alarm, "The Yanks are coming." The Confederate officers desert their sweethearts, mount in hot haste and make for their lines. They are well out of the way when a Federal troop of cavalry escorting General Shields and staff come upon the porch. The General says they must use the house a few moments to discuss battle plans. Aunt Cloe ushers them into a parlor at the invitation of Belle Boyd. This parlor is rather dilapidated. The General sends his orderly out to inspect the premises to observe if they are safe from eavesdroppers and posts a sentinel at the door of the parlor. The soldier inspects, but he no sooner leaves the room above the parlor than Belle Boyd emerges from hiding in an old armor. She darkens the room, draws aside the rug in the center and looks through the hole in the ceiling, sees the plans exposed on the parlor table below and hears of a plot to capture General Jackson. She makes note of them, as they are most important for "the cause." When the officers depart she is at the front door to bid them "good bye" and through substituting a blank roll secures the battle plan from an enamored subordinate. Men follow her wild ride and her race through the battlefield, bringing information that saves Jackson's corps from defeat.

HER GUARDIAN (May 8).—John Broderick, wealthy bachelor, globe trotter and devotee of outdoor sports, is seated in his den enjoying a pipe and a magazine when his Japanese valet hands him a letter which proves to be a turning point in his life. It is from his life-long friend, Samuel Farley. Farley is dying and writes to Broderick that he has appointed Broderick the guardian of his young daughter and looks to him to bring her up in proper fashion. One day Louise Farley arrives unannounced. When Broderick returns home and finds this bit of budding womanhood on his hands he is considerably perplexed. He turns her over to his housekeeper, and wonders how he is going to adapt himself to the new conditions. But time goes on. Louise forces her way into his heart deeper than he realizes. He sends her away to boarding school, and takes himself off to hunt in Africa, to overcome a loneliness which her absence makes him suddenly realize. Finally the day of her graduation arrives and he hurries home to receive her. At school Louise has become interested in young Dick Davis, and invites him to call on her at Broderick's home. On seeing the girl again Broderick is overwhelmed with the realization that he loves her, not as a father, but as a lover. Dick arrives, and one evening Broderick inadvertently surprises the two in a lover's embrace. He then bravely acknowledges to himself that youth must needs seek youth, and that he must not stand in the way of his ward's happiness. He manfully turns Louise over to Dick—and once more seeks the solace of the bachelor's pipe and fireside.

IN THE DAYS OF WITCHCRAFT (May 9).—A story of Puritan New England in the days of Cotton Mather. One morning Adam Radcliffe and his wife find an abandoned baby on their doorstep, with a note telling them it is of gentle birth. Mrs. Radcliffe, an austere woman, is determined to have nothing to do with the child, which is declared by the wiseacres of the village to be of witch parentage; but Adam is tender hearted and succeeds in keeping the baby in the family. The child, named Anne, grows up to be a beautiful girl. A young cavalier by the name of Yorke visits the colony from England, with a letter of introduction to Radcliffe. Lady Beresford, a beautiful but unscrupulous noblewoman, in love with Yorke, follows him to New England. Yorke falls in love with Anne. To cause the separation of Yorke and Anne, Lady Beresford pretends to have been bewitched by Anne. Anne's foster mother, who has never been kind to her, sides with Lady Beresford and a formal accusation is brought against Anne. She is tried before Cotton Mather, and sentenced to the stake. At the last moment Yorke succeeds in rescuing her from the jail and escapes to England with her.

ESSANAY.

THE CRAZY PROSPECTOR (May 3).—John Harlan, a crazy prospector living with his daughter in Nevada, accidentally discovers gold. He is so enthused over it that he immediately goes to the town saloon, where he informs everybody. Harriet, the daughter, discovering her father has not returned, goes to the saloon, where she is informed by her half-witted father that he has told the men of the location and that they have already departed for the hidden treasure. Broncho Billy enters the saloon and Harriet implores him to help her keep the men from staking out the property. Driving his stage-coach at dare-devil speed over rocks, through marshes and small streams, he finally reaches a high spot in the road, where the deep canyon yawns below. Harriet unhitches one of the horses and rides to the claim agent's office, where her name is filed on the state's books for the property. With the certificate of the state in her hands, she dashes madly to the gold pit, where she stakes out her claim. In the meantime, the men arrive on horseback and are prevented from passing the coach, which takes up the whole road. Broncho Billy saves the claim for the crazy prospector and wins the hand of his daughter as a reward.

A TANGO TANGLE (May 6).—Mrs. Beverly Jigger writes to her dear friend, Mrs. Styles, that she will be unable to attend her dance, as she does not know how to dance the Tango. Hubby takes a different view of the matter, however, when he discovers an "ad" in the newspaper, stating that the advertiser will teach anyone how to dance the Tango. Mr. Jigger learns rapidly. Mrs. Jigger reads the same "ad," and she too becomes a Tango enthusiast. Mrs. Jigger calls at her husband's office and discovers a handkerchief on the floor. She comes to the untimely conclusion that her husband is not true to her. When hubby returns home that evening, Mrs. Jigger informs him that she is going home to mother. Hubby informs his wife that she may remain, that he will leave. Their trouble and misunderstanding comes to an abrupt end when they hear the mellow tones of a grind organ in front of their house. This starts their feet agoing, and they dance the Tango, much to the surprise of each other. Hubby explains that the handkerchief was dropped by one of his clients. Wifey forgives.

THE PROPHECY (May 7).—John Carlton is accused of the murder of George Skinner, a baker. Sheriff Davis testifies that he encountered Carlton and Skinner in a furious religious argument. Circumstantial evidence convicts Carlton. Bert Sampson, a cobbler, and manufacturer of counterfeit money, tried to pass a fake bill on Skinner. Sampson kills him. Anita, daughter of John Carlton, consults a palmist and is informed that she will meet a man that will steal her heart away. Ralph Peters, a traveling salesman, calls on Sampson to collect a bill past due. He is paid with counterfeit money. Peters informs the sheriff, who arrests the cobbler. Carlton is exonerated. Peters is rewarded by the acceptance of a proposal of marriage to Anita.

TWO WESTERN PATHS (May 8).—John Lynch, sheriff of Lone Pine, Montana, falls in love with La Tunita, a dancing girl. The following morning, while on his way to work, Lynch discovers La Tunita beside the railroad tracks and carries her to the postoffice, where she is given into the care of the post mistress. A few months later, the sheriff marries the pretty girl of the stage. Some time later, La Tunita's former manager returns to town. The dancing girl tells him that she is tired, wretched and miserable with the life she has been leading, and wants to go back to the bright lights. The two are about to run away when Lynch enters. Realizing that he is keeping the woman he loves from what is most dear to her, he gives her some money and bids her a fond farewell. He sacrifices his happiness for her's.

A WOMAN'S WAY (May 9).—Marion Walker, engaged to Dudley Mason, becomes jealous of her sister, Adele, when she discovers that Mason is treating her courteously. That evening, for spite, Marion refuses to go to a dance with Dudley. Dudley takes Adele. A few months later, we see Dudley married to Marion's sister, living in wealth and splendor. Marion sobs out her grief. The life that Adele led in her artificial atmosphere, makes her forget her new baby for the social whirl. Baby Dudley is taken sick and Adele refuses to stay with him, but leaves for a week-end party. Mason calls Marion on the telephone and asks her to come to his assistance in nursing back the strength of his son. Marion complies willingly. Adele is killed in the Omaha tornado. Five years later, Marion and Dudley join hands in marriage, to the joy of Dudley Jr.

ALKALI IKE'S MOTHER-IN-LAW (May 10).—For some unknown reason or other, Alkali Ike cannot get along with his wife. To make matters worse, Mrs. Alkali invites her mother to visit her. Mother-in-law starts right in trying to reform her son-in-law. Alkali meets her at the railroad station, and instead of hiring a bus to carry up her baggage, she makes Alkali carry three or four hat boxes, a parrot, and a trunk, on his back to the house. Alkali enters the house, throws his hat on the table. Mother-in-law sees this, takes Alkali by the hair and gently but firmly requests him to hang his hat up where it belongs. That night Alkali Ike decides to visit his friends at the Green Turtle, but mother-in-law decides that he will remain right in the house and listen to her selections on the organ. Wifey assists her mother by rendering a solo. Alkali finally sneaks out. He purchases a book teaching hypnotism, and what he doesn't do to his mother-in-law is a caution. Wifey interferes just as her mother is about to make her exit from the town under a hypnotic spell, and the tables turn. Just see what happened to Alkali Ike.

BINGLES MENDS THE CLOCK (May 5).—Saturday, being a half-holiday, Bingles volunteers to help Mrs. Bingles with the housework. She sends him to the clock-maker's with a clock that she wants repaired. Bingles thinks that the clock-maker's charge is too high and brings the clock back again. He will mend it himself. His troubles soon begin. After he has taken the clock to pieces he finds that he needs some machine oil. On the way to the hardware store he meets some friends, who are celebrating, and they persuade Bingles to lubricate himself as well as the clock. Finally he gets away from them and goes home again. By the time he gets there he is feeling rather quarrelsome, and when he finds that the children have been trying their hands at clock-mending, he makes some rude remarks. He spanks all the children and then turns them and his wife out of the room. She, thinking him a brute, decides to go back again to home and mother. Dressing the children in their best, she leaves the house with her wailing family, placing on the table a note for her husband, telling him where she has gone.

Bingles finds most of the clock works and puts them together. Then, hanging the clock on the wall, he looks at his watch. It is supper time and he is hungry. Going in search of his wife he finds her note and is plunged into despair. Supper or no supper, he decides to start the clock. Putting it to the right time, he sets the pendulum moving. Bingles begins to doubt his sanity. That clock certainly does go. It goes at double express speed backwards, from 6 p. m. today to 5 a. m. yesterday in five minutes. He looks at it upside down, sideways and several other ways, but he cannot make head or tail of the matter. Making up his mind to give the clock-maker a job, he decides to fetch his wife home to cook supper. No more economy for Bingles.

OMENS AND ORACLES (May 6).—(The Belinda Series, Number Three). "See a pin and pick it up, and all the day you'll have good luck," says the faithful Belinda as she finds one on the doorstep. Just then a good-looking young man comes along, looking for a boarding place. He makes arrangements with Ophelia, Belinda's mistress, and she shows him to his room. Ophelia falls in love at first sight of the stranger, and confides in Belinda. A policeman, who is "walking out" with the cook, finds a fortune-teller's card on the sidewalk on his way to visit her. While the cook is giving him a feed, Belinda comes in, and, after flirting with the policeman a little on her own account, she gets the card, which she takes to her mistress. Miss Ophelia decides to go to the fortune-teller, Madam Miriam, and takes Belinda with her. Madame Miriam tells Ophelia that a blonde young man will fall in love with her. Both Ophelia and Belinda think the young man must be the new boarder. Sidney, the boarder, finds that he has not enough money to pay his board bill, and to get on the right side of Ophelia, he takes her out to an ice-cream parlor and spends his last quarter on her. While they are gone, Belinda finds a photo of Sidney's wife in his room and sees that the wife is none other than Madam Miriam. Belinda is very much shocked. Madam Miriam sees Sidney and Ophelia on their way back to the house and she follows them in and claims her husband. Ophelia will not let him go until the board bill is paid, and calls the policeman up from the kitchen to arres him. Madam Miriam pays the bill and bears off her husband in triumph. Belinda does her best to comfort her sorrowing mistress, thinking it is all her fault.

THE DEERSLAYER (Special, 2 parts, Mar. 7).—PART ONE.—Wah-Ta-Wah, or Hist, the lady-love of Chingachgook, a Delaware chief, has been captured by the warlike Hurons. Chingachgook asks the aid of Deerslayer, a white man brought up among the Indians, in rescuing her, and the two men arrange to meet at Lake Otsego, then called Glimmerglass.

Deerslayer sets out for the meeting place, accompanied by Hurry Harry March, a trapper, who acts as his guide. Hurry takes him to meet Hutter, another hunter, who has established a permanent home on the lake. With his two daughters, Judith and Hetty, Hutter lives in a peculiar fortress, called the Castle, set on piles in the middle of the lake, and also spends much of the time on a strange vessel called The Ark, similar to the Castle, but built on a scow. It is on this vessel, fishing up a small stream, that they are found by Deerslayer and Hurry Harry. The two men receive a hearty welcome from Judith, who is betrothed to Harry, and who at once greatly admires the evident strength of Deerslayer.

News arrives that the Hurons are on the war-path, and all hasten to get the Ark out of the stream and out into the lake. That night, Hurry Harry, Hutter and Deerslayer take the canoe and land on shore. The others wish to go on a scalping expedition to the now unprotected Indian encampment, but Deerslayer will not accompany them. When the camp is attacked, both men are captured and Deerslayer is obliged to return without them, Hutter having charged him with the care of his daughters in case harm should have befallen him. The next day, Deerslayer goes to the foot of the lake, where he meets his friend, Chingachgook, and brings him to the Ark. Hetty, the simple-minded daughter of Hutter, secretly takes the canoe and goes off to shore to plead for her father and Harry, whom she loves greatly. She is treated kindly by the Indians, who always revere the simple-minded, and given the freedom of the camp. While there, Hetty meets Hist, and having told her that Chingachgook is at the Ark, she is given a message for him. She is brought back the next day to the Ark by one of the Indians, who is given a present for his chief by Deerslayer, who offers a ransom for his friends. Harry and Hutter are exchanged for a pair of ivory chess-men, castles mounted on elephants, and are soon back again with Deerslayer and the anxious girls.

PART TWO.—Hist had sent a message saying that she would be awaiting her lover at sunset, and accordingly Chingachgook and Deerslayer set off to fetch her. By heading off the Indians in another direction, Deerslayer makes good the escape of Hist and Chingachgook, but is himself captured. Rivenoak, the Huron chief, promises Deerslayer his life if he will join the tribe and marry Sumac, wife of a brave he had killed in the struggle, but he will not accept the offer.

Hutter has not been near the Castle for some days and goes there with Hurry Harry, notwithstanding the warning they receive from Chingachgook. They are ambushed by the Hurons, who scalp Hutter. Harry gets away and brings the dreadful news to his daughters at the Ark. He proposes that Judith, long betrothed to him, now marry him, that he may have the right to protect her and her sister. She refuses because of the secret love she had conceived for Deerslayer from the moment she first saw him.

Hurry then leaves the two girls in the care of Chingachgook and Hist and goes to the British fort, where he tells of the death of Hutter and the capture of Deerslayer, and asks for aid. While he is gone, Judith, who would give her life for the man she loves, goes to the camp, masquerading as a queen, seeking the release of Deerslayer. The Indians, who have never seen her before, are at first taken in, but her identity is unwittingly betrayed by Hetty to Chief Rivenoak. The chief tells Judith that at sunset the brave Deerslayer must die.

Meanwhile, Hurry Harry March is bringing the soldiers towards the Indian camp. They arrive just in time to prevent the death of Deerslayer and rout the Indians after a short but sharp skirmish. When all fighting is over and examination made of the wounded, it is found that Hetty has been hit by a stray bullet and is dying. In her last words she confesses her love for Hurry Harry, and, asking a kiss from him, dies in his arms.

Judith, now deprived of father and sister both, is offered a home by the captain of the soldiers, who will take her back with him to his wife and sisters at the fort. She will not at once answer him, however, but asks time to consider what she shall do. She goes with Deerslayer a little apart from the camp and there confesses her love for him, telling him that if he return her love, she will understand by his silence. Deerslayer listens to her gravely and with all respect, but answers not a word.

DISCIPLINING DAISY (May 7).—The girls of the Phi Beta Kappa sorority are highly indignant at the conduct of one of their members, Daisy Manners, and resolve to teach her a much-needed lesson. By hook or by crook, she must be cured of the borrowing habit. They overhear Phil Matthews ask her to go with him to a garden fete that evening, and they lay their plans accordingly. Daisy is dressing for the occasion, and goes round to the rooms of various fellow co-eds, on borrowing bent. Everyone seems to be out, but that does not bother her. She just helps herself and leaves notes explaining that she has taken the things. In this way, Daisy acquires a new party dress, a new hat, a new pair of shoes, a necklace, earrings and even some false hair. Attired in all this finery she descends to join the expectant Phil.

As soon as Daisy has left the Chapter House the other girls go to their rooms to see what she has taken. They plan to set out in a body to reclaim their missing belongings. They reach the fete just as Daisy and Phil are having dinner. First the owner of the false hair demands her property, much to Phil's amusement. Then the others in turn take what is theirs, leaving Daisy with no hat, no shoes, her hair all mussed up and wearing an old sweater coat that was brought her to replace the fine "borrowed" dress. Daisy finally gets home, wearing an old pair of shoes that Phil has bought from a beggar for a nickel and sent to her by him. She finds Phil having a good time with the other girls. After listening to their singing and laughing for a while, her anger dies down and she is quite ready to own that she herself is to blame. She resolves never to borrow again.

INSPECTION OF THE QUEBEC POLICE (May 7).—Showing the splendid police force of the oldest Canadian city, the men that now patrol the Historic Heights of Abraham, the scene of General Wolfe's famous exploit.

THE WRATH OF OSAKA (May 8).—Kobe, the father of Miro, is a grouch. Miro is beloved of Osaka, a poor man, whose suit is rudely rejected by Kobe, who, in a drunken orgy, offers his daughter to the highest bidder among his friends. She is won by Okyto, a rich profligate, who takes her away with him to his summer palace, refusing to allow even her faithful servant, Suzi, to accompany her. Suzi tells Osaka of the marriage, and when he attempts to speak with Miro, he is rudely beaten off by Okyto's attendants. Osaka then goes to Kobe and tells him that if harm comes to his daughter, Miro, his life shall pay the forfeit.

After reaching the palace with her husband, Okyto, Miro is treated shamefully. On one occasion, she is rudely pushed aside in favor of geisha girl. Miro flees into the garden and drops unconscious, where she is found by Suzi. Okyto presently seeks her and again handles her roughly. Osaka sees him, forces his way into the palace grounds, approaches him and a terrific struggle takes place between the two men. Osaka is victorious and leaves Okyto bleeding upon the ground. He then picks up Miro and carries her off, tries to revive her, and being unable to do so, he leaves her in the care of Suzi and goes to wreak his vengeance upon Kobe, whom he kills.

While Osaka is away, Nikko, a peddler, whom he has befriended, comes up and by means of a powerful elixir, to which he holds the secret, restores Miro to consciousness. When Osaka returns, he is overjoyed and departs with Miro, Suzi and Nikko, to find a new home in the fertile valleys of Nippon.

CUPID'S HIRED MAN (May 9).—The laughing stock of a small country village is an old maid, Miss Anne Matthews. In desperation she decides that if she cannot get a real lover, she will hire one. In the middle of the night her house is entered by an amateur burglar, who has been driven to dishonesty through lack of employment. Miss Matthews captures him, holding him up at the point of her revolver. As a condition of freedom, he agrees to pose as her lover, for which she is to pay him five dollars a week and give him his board.

All goes well, until the night of the church social, when John Henry Jones, one of Anne's former lovers, who has made his fortune in New York, tries to flirt with her. The "hired man" interferes and succeeds in making Mr. Jones very jealous, so much so, that the next day he calls upon Miss Matthews to propose marriage. The proposal takes her entirely by surprise and conscience-stricken, she tells him the truth about her hired lover. Jones agrees to forgive her, providing that the burglar be sent away. At this moment the burglar lover interrupts them and a quarrel between the two men seems inevitable. The burglar does not want to lose what he thinks is a soft job. At last he sees that nothing is left for him to do but resign, so he demands his pay. Jones, who is feeling full of joy at the thought of his coming marriage with Miss Anne, insists that he will settle all demands. He hands the burglar fifty dollars and hustles him away at top speed. Everything has turned out well after all. Jones and Miss Matthews are each happy at having secured a life partner, while the "hired man" is glad of the chance to follow again his own inclinations and get away with a whole skin.

THE SEA MAIDEN (May 10).—Just after bidding a fond farewell to Stella Chapman, his sweetheart, Edmund Vance, receives a telegram telling him that he has acquired a fortune. He rushes back to tell Stella of his good luck, but finds her in the arms of another man. Disgusted by her faithlessness, he demands the return of their engagement ring and immediately leaves her. Stella finds out about the fortune and realizes that she has lost. She determines to get back at him and to this end seeks out Madeline Turner, a young and pretty girl who has recently lost her father in a very tragic manner. Mr. Turner had been involved by other business men, in some underhanded stock transactions. Exposure had come and as a result, he lost his money. The sudden loss of his fortunes gave the old man a shock which he did not survive, leaving Madeline and her mother almost penniless. Stella tells Madeline that it was Edmund Vance who ruined her father and poisons her mind against him. Madeline agrees to win his love and then break his heart. Edmund goes away to Catalina for a vacation, where the two girls follow him. Madeline, by pre-arrangement with Stella, makes it possible for Edmund to see her posing as a sea-maiden and he at once falls in love with her. She, very much against her will, also falls in love with him, but, nevertheless, when he proposes to her, she accuses him of being the cause of her father's ruin and death. Later, Stella tells Edmund that she had lied to Madeline about him and gloats over the effect her disclosure produces. Madeline, overhearing the conversation, enters the room and faces Stella, who now sees that the game is up. Stella laughs scornfully and retires, calling them a pair of fools. Madeline, her heart torn with anguish that Edmund should know that she had been led to conspire against him, turns to depart, but is stopped by Edmund, who, understanding her position, forgives her and warmly clasps her to his heart.

MELIES.

A TRIP THROUGH THE "NORTH ISLAND" OF NEW ZEALAND—From Auckland to Wellington (May 8).—Part one of this reel is of the beautiful city of Auckland and its environs. Panoramic views of Auckland: a characteristic New Zealand ferryboat bringing business people from the suburb of Takapuna to Auckland; striking Waterside workers on parade; picturesque Albert park; Grafton Bridge, the longest single concrete arch in the world; and the Kauri log industry.

Part two is of a New Zealand ostrich farm. A baby ostrich; hooding the ostriches to pluck their feathers, a method employed because the ostrich, ordinarily a wild, nervous bird, becomes as tame as a house cat when its sight is obstructed.

Part three is of a present day Maori village, Paranuui. A typical dwelling, showing the crude native inventions supposed to aid comfort and health; a homemade water hoist.

Part four is of Wellington, the great seaport of New Zealand, where the great products of the country are transferred for shipment to all parts of the world. Methods of loading and unloading flax and tallow into and from the holds of great steamships by the use of hydraulic cranes are shown in actual operation.

of her dad, one or the other of these is favored by paterfamilias. The minister, however, is Arabella's choice. But dad being the boss of the situation, it looked as if the poor girl was doomed. Brother Dick, however, evolves a plan which brings the two loving hearts together.

THE HOUSE OF DARKNESS (May 10).—A noted judge is one of the most violent patients in the sanatorium until it is discovered that music has the power to quiet him. One day he escapes and going to the house of a former nurse, now the wife of a physician, he finds her alone. In his capacity as judge, he sentences her to die in five minutes. It is then by mere accident that the terror-stricken woman learns the power of music.

PATHEPLAY.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 18, 1913 (April 28).—San Francisco, Cal.—One of the most interesting features of the Blossom Festival is the auto-polo game on the Heyward Field.

Jacksonville, Fla.—The University of Pennsylvania scientific expedition, en route to explore the upper reaches of the Amazon River, arrives at Jacksonville for coal and provisions.

Adrianople, Turkey.—The graves of the Bulgarians, dead in the siege of this city, are a sad reminder of the rigors of the campaign.

San Francisco, Cal.—The fire department accomplishes an interesting and difficult drill before the Fire Commissioner.

Washington, D. C.—President Wilson throws the first ball of the season at the ball park after Chance and Griffith have shaken hands.

Madrid, Spain.—The King and Queen attend the laying of the corner stone of the College of the Naval Officers' Orphans.

San Francisco, Cal.—Mayor Rolph digs the first shovelful of earth, thus beginning the work on the new City Hall.

Pahleo Beach, Fla.—The life-saving crew presents their drill for Mayor McClellan after he has given them the key to their new building.

Memphis, Tenn.—Two thousand persons, made homeless when the Mississippi River overflows its banks here, are cared for at Camp Crump.

New York, N. Y.—On the first anniversary of the Titanic disaster, a memorial lighthouse, erected on the roof of the new Seamen's Institute here, is dedicated with appropriate ceremony.

Comic Section.—Jeff meets a sand-storm—and an ostrich.

THE ANT-LION (May 6).—The ant-lion is a very interesting little creature about a quarter of an inch long whose principal occupation, as the name suggests, is the trapping of ants. It chooses a patch of soft sand on which to build the trap and then buries itself in it. By maneuvering underneath the sand the ant-lion forms an imitation ant-hill with a hole through the center. When the ant passes across the hill the sand slips beneath his feet and the more he struggles the deeper he goes until the ant-lion feels the pang of hunger which prompts him to reach through the sand and make sure of his prey.

THE CHATEAU OF BLOIS (France—May 6).—A castle high on the bank of a beautiful river. The chateau is an architectural masterpiece reminiscent of the days of royalty and replete with historic mementos.

THE CROOKED BANKERS (May 7).—John W. Turnbull, a banker and his partner, Paul Brower, after a hard struggle to avoid it, find themselves face to face with bankruptcy. An elderly man hurries into the office at this juncture and tenders $65,000 to the bankers to be held in trust for his wife and daughter should anything happen to him on a journey he is about to undertake. Turnbull gives Jenkins, the depositor, a receipt for the money and the latter is leaving the office with it when he drops dead. Here is a strong temptation for the bankers. They succumb to it, take the receipt from the dead man's pocket and under cover of darkness leave his body in an unfrequented part of the city. They divide the spoils and with his share Brower leaves town. Five years later he returns to Turnbull's office, broke and bent on blackmail. The natural sequence of events brings the plight of the women he has helped to rob home to Brower and through his efforts Turnbull is forced to make restitution.

HER MOTHER'S AMBITION (May 8).—Nancy Hanford is loved by two men, Frank Merrill, a young man with prospects of success, and Harvey Dixon, a wealthy broker. Nancy loves Merrill, but does not love Dixon and Nancy's younger sister, Marion, also loves Merrill. Mrs. Hanford, being ambitious to marry off both daughters to advantage, brings all her influence to bear to make Nancy marry Dixon and after no little persuasion Nancy consents to the sacrifice. A while later Frank falls in love with and marries Marion. Nancy's marriage is not a happy one, but when she finds that the man she loves has married her sister she secrets the hunger in her heart and suffers on, silently—a martyr to her mother's ambition.

MONTREAL, QUEBEC AND HALIFAX (May 9).—This film offers an opportunity to everyone to visit every place of interest in these three thriving cities of Canada. No country in the world has more scenes of historic interest and historic landmarks than this and persons by means of this film, may view at their leisure the monuments and landmarks in a more comprehensive manner than would be possible through a personal visit with its resultant expenditure of much time and money.

IN THE VALLEY OF VESUBIE (France—May 9)—The Vesubie River, rising in Italy at a height of 6,000 feet, winds its way through the Alps to France and the spectators follow its course through a valley, beautiful in black and white, but whose beauty is enhanced by handsome coloring.

PUTTIN' IT OVER ON PAPA (May 10).—Papa Sinclair, a prosperous farmer and very headstrong, refuses to accept Jack Wilcox, an artist, as his son-in-law, so Bessie Sinclair and Jack elope. After the wedding father is still obdurate, but Jack has a plan. Disguised as a farmhand, he secures a position on Papa's farm. The next day Bessie comes home with the story that Jack has deserted her. Papa says "I told you so." Several times in the course of the day he nearly catches his daughter in the arms of the new farmhand. At a barn dance in the evening, Papa introduces Jack to Bessie with the remark "If you had married a man like that I would have been glad." The young folks laugh, Jack removes his disguise and although he rants around for a while he admits the joke is on him and gives the couple his blessing.

KALEM.

THE CHEYENNE MASSACRE (Special, 2 parts, May 9).—PART ONE. Ellis, an intrepid young lieutenant, is located at the frontier post, Fort Bryson. He pays ardent court to General Foster's daughter, Gertrude, and is a prime favorite with his comrades.

At a military ball Ellis steps out for a stroll and finds Lieutenant Allen annoying Mountain Dew, an Indian girl, who has been attracted by the music, and who has found innocent entertainment in watching the dances at the window. Ellis roundly denounces the thoughtless officer and his intercession in Mountain Dew's behalf wins the girl's gratitude.

Some time later Mountain Dew's father, Chief Swift Bear, comes to the post with a band of his tribesmen and openly defies the authority of General Foster. The Chief cites imaginary grievances and declares that his people on the reservation will no longer submit to the white man's rule. General Foster attempts to pacify the Indians and bids them return in peace.

The crafty Chief, waiting for an opportunity to incite an outbreak, sends two vicious braves to the cabin of John Simmons, a settler, to make a demand for food. Knowing that the Indians are well provided for, Simmons refuses and orders the two away. The braves bring their message to the camp and Swift Bear, flying into a passion, gathers the tribe and declares war. All determine to wreak vengeance on the settler.

That night John Simmons sends his son, Bob, to the spring, and during the boy's absence the Indians sweep down upon the cabin. Simmons and his wife barricade themselves against the fusillade of bullets and arrows and bravely defend their lives until the marauding savages burn down the cabin.

Bob, in terror, watches the attack from the distance and is powerless to protect his parents. When the howling tribe proceeds on its way, bent on further depredations, Bob reaches his home and finds it a mass of burning embers. Overcome with grief he goes in search of his horse, which has broken away. The faithful animal responds to Bob's call and the young settler sets forth to warn Fort Bryson. At daybreak he reaches the post and tells his pitiful story.

PART TWO. General Foster gives a sharp command. The bugle is sounded and the troops dash away to quell the outbreak. Scouts who have kept a keen surveillance on Fort Bryson, hasten to inform Swift Bear, who ceases his spoliations and forms an ambuscade in the pathway of the approaching soldiers. Besieged on all sides, the troops are almost annihilated and the survivors flee in panic to the post.

Foster returns to Fort Bryson, realizing that his forces are insufficient to cope with the Indians, and he endeavors to communicate with the next post by telegraph. Suspecting the General's purpose, Swift Bear orders the wires cut and feeling assured it will be impossible for Fort Bryson to withstand an attack, he gathers his tribesmen at the camp.

Finding the fort imperilled, General Foster calls for a volunteer to discover the enemy's numbers and secure aid. Lieutenant Ellis responds and starts on his hazardous journey. As he comes in sight of the Indian camp, Ellis meets and overpowers an Indian, whose blanket he takes. Masquerading as the brave, the young officer approaches to observe the Indians' movements and is discovered by Mountain Dew, the girl whom he has befriended. She bids him flee, but Ellis has no intention of doing so, and while he watches Swift Bear marshalling his forces, he is detected. With a quick movement Ellis places his revolver at the girl's temple and declares that he will fire at the first suspicious action. Still covering Mountain Dew, the lieutenant jumps on his horse and speeds away.

Swift Bear is beside himself with rage and leads the tribe in an assault on Fort Bryson. General Foster is not unprepared, but his weakened forces have little hope of resisting the Indians.

Meanwhile Ellis dashes madly down the valley and reaches Fort Craig. The commanding officer responds to the call for reinforcements and Ellis, with a fresh horse, leads the troops to Fort Bryson.

The Indians break through the stockade and a terrific hand to hand battle is being waged when Ellis with the command from Fort Craig surrounds Fort Bryson and saves the day.

THE HEART OF AN ACTRESS (May 5).—Alice Stewart and her parents are in destitute circumstances. Their plight comes to the attention of Jane Thompson, the daughter of a wealthy manufacturer and she renders timely aid, thus gaining the eternal gratitude of Alice.

Alice secures a minor role with a theatrical company and after a patient struggle she becomes a popular favorite. Thomas Morton, the sweetheart of Jane, attends a performance and is captivated by the beautiful actress. He obtains an introduction and a warm friendship is established. Soon Tom and Alice find they are deeply in love and Jane is forgotten.

Jane cannot understand Tom's indifference and seeks an explanation from his father. The elder Morton is infuriated when he reads a press agent's article that his son is to marry the actress. He takes Jane to Alice's hotel and a mutual recognition takes place between the girls. Alice declares that she will restore Tom to the girl who befriended her.

After the performance that night Alice gives a supper on the stage for the members of her company, which is attended by Mr. Morton and Jane. Tom arrives and is horrified to discover that Alice is the leading spirit of a gay wine party. He can scarcely restrain himself when Alice accepts a check from Morton and laughingly announces that she has been paid to give up the young millionaire. Alice, overcome with emotion, retires to her dressing room and Tom, rushing in to denounce her, learns that the supposed check is blank and that the wine glass of the hostess is untouched.

Jane, appreciating the sacrifice which the actress has made, leads Tom's father from the scene and love claims its own.

THE ALIEN (May 7).—Paola, a skilled mechanic in a modler's factory in Italy, defends his friend Brocco, when the latter is discharged and incurs the foreman's enmity.

The treacherous Brocco steals an empty six-pound shell, which Paola treasures as a relic of the war, and makes a bomb, with which he wrecks the modler's factory. A piece of the bomb which bears Paola's name is found and on this evidence the innocent man is sent to prison for five years.

When Paolo is liberated he has a lodged hatred for the law and takes his two children to America, where he secures work as a stevedore and establishes a comfortable home.

Federal authorities are advised that opium is being smuggled into the section where Paolo resides, and through peculiar circumstances, the Italian becomes the unwitting tool of the crooks. Anxious to accommodate the clever rascals who have cunningly won the friendship of his children, Paolo innocently meets one of the smugglers' accomplices and carries a package of the contraband goods to the rendezvous. When the smugglers are arrested and brought to justice it appears that Paolo is hopelessly implicated, but the Federal officers establish the fact that he is innocent. Full of gratitude, the Italian develops a wholesome respect for the laws of his new country and takes an oath of allegiance to the United States.

THE HASH HOUSE COUNT (May 9).—When Jim proposes to Jane she declares that she has determined to marry a title. Jim regards his case as hopeless until a brilliant idea occurs to him while dining in a cafe. He bargains with Adolph, a portly waiter, to masquerade as a count, thinking that Jane will be disgusted with royalty when the supposed nobleman, with his uncouth manners, is introduced.

But Jim's plans miscarry. Adolph's skill at mixing salads greatly impresses the girl and when Jim forbids the pretender from seeing Jane again, the temperamental gentleman announces "I too, love the fair Jane."

Driven to desperation Jim hires several ruffians to visit the cafe and complain of Adolph's service but his plans go wrong a second time and the toughs are forcibly ejected.

It is now up to Jim to convince Jane that Adolph is not a count and he invites her to the cafe. Adolph pleads illness to the headwaiter, but Jim will not stand for any substitutes. What happens when Jane sees the pretender in his real position is best shown in the picture.

TOOTHACHE! (May 9).—A wealthy broker, suffering from a severe toothache, discovers that the town's only dentist is absent for the day. He secures a hot water bottle and endeavors to make himself comfortable. A tramp, suffering with a similar ailment, passes the broker's window and seeing the hot water bottle, determines to secure possession of it. A lively tussel ensues and the broker is unable to buy off the tramp. Finally they compromise and through one touch of nature they become akin.

THE RIVER PIRATES (May 10).—The Robert Judson Fruit Company receives word from the Mayport distributors that the former's recent shipments have not reached their destinations. The Mayport people are inclined to believe that a gang of river pirates is located along the route.

In the employ of Judson is a rough individual by the name of Caesar who is really a secret agent of the pirates and who informs his chief of the dates of the shipments. Caesar becomes alarmed and returns to the gang, where his attentions to the chief's neice, Zelma, are repulsed.

Robert Judson, Jr., decides to locate the gang and sets forth alone. He meets Zelma, who is greatly impressed by the stranger, but while Robert endeavors to secure the information which will enable him to bring about the capture of the pirates, he is made a prisoner.

Zelma's attempts to liberate Robert are frustrated and Caesar, infuriated at the girl's intercession in behalf of the prisoner, is about to deal severely with the young man when a pirate signals from a tree top that a heavily loaded steamboat is coming down the river.

Immediate preparations are made to seize the cargo and Robert is left in the cabin securely bound. Alarmed at his son's absence, Judson, Sr., has sent his shipment ahead under the guard of several armed men.

The pirates meet with unexpected resistance and flee to the camp in panic. Caesar determines to make an end of his rival, but his desperate attempt is thwarted by Zelma and the outlaws are captured.

ECLIPSE.

THE DIVIDING WALL (May 7).—Ernest Wilkinson, plaintiff in a lawsuit started by his grandfather against his country neighbor some years back, receives a letter from his attorney requesting him to call at his office, as a settlement is about to be made.

Simultaneously, Suzanne Johnson, the defendant in the case, receives a like letter.

A wall dividing their properties has been the cause of the feud. Unaware of each other's identity, they become acquainted under the most humorous circumstances on the train going to the country, but the steward of the Wilkinson estate and the housekeeper of the Johnson estate terminate their pleasant conversation when they meet their respective guests at the station.

They arrive at the attorney's office on the appointed day. He quickly sees their thoughts are more of each other than of the lawsuit, and dismisses them for a few days. The dividing wall at this time plays a prominent part in a pretty, romantic scene, where a truce of peace is reached between Ernest and Suzanne. However, the bitterness between the servants is not abated.

Ernest and Suzanne are again called to the office of the attorney under the pretext that a decision has been reached.

After they arrive, the attorney, with a mischievous smile, hands each a copy of the judgment. When opened up, it proves to be only an agreement of marriage. A demure smile on the part of the girl, an awkward "will you?" from the man, and the decision is approved by both parties.

The anxiety of the servants brings them to the office entrance, where they impatiently wait the outcome of the case. An argument starts between them; words fly thick until, at last, the wool flies!

Imagine the spectacle they present when out walks Suzanne on Earnest's arm!

CINES.

THE MISER'S MILLIONS (Special, 3 parts, April 23).—A despicable old miser lives alone with Peter, his butler. His greatest pleasure is hoarding away money in a secret vault in the cellar of his house, access to which is only gained by a series of concealed trapdoors operated by electricity. When he espies Peter watching him in the treasure-vault, a fight ensues in which the miser is accidentally killed and Peter, having been turned over to the police, is later sent to the penitentiary.

His property descends to Mrs. Rice and her daughter, Dorothy, but his money cannot be located. Peter, now serving time, confides the secret of the hidden money to a fellow prisoner. The latter finally escapes, and remembering the story told him by Peter, starts out to find the house. While attempting to procure the money in the vault, he tampers with the wrong levers and is instantly seized by two steel arms and held fast as in a vise, with no one to hear his death cries.

Some years later, Peter obtains a pardon through the gratitude of the warden and returns to his home town. He finds the widow and daughter have mortgaged everything to meet the demands of their creditors and are about to be thrown out. Dorothy is beloved by the mortgagee's son, but the stern father will not allow his son to marry her. The secret of the treasure-chamber is told Dorothy, and when her lover's father hears of it he goes in search of the money. He is successful in gaining entrance to the cellar, where his eyes behold the skeleton of the ex-convict still in the clutches of the steel arms. In his frantic effort to leave the grewsome place he finds himself shut in. However, his faint cries are heard. With the assistance of Peter, the vault is again opened and the father staggers out. The vast hoard of gold is found to be intact, thus clearing up a mystery that has perplexed the vicinity for years. Dorothy is then happily married.

WHEN LOVE IS YOUNG (May 11).—Harry Esmond, the son of a noble southern family visits the Barringtons, who are also old southerners. He is smitten with Pearl, the beautiful daughter of the Barrington household. Harry and Mr. Barrington play chess while Pearl is an interested onlooker. She hears the welcome noise of carriage wheels coming up the wide pathway and leaves the room. She receives, in the garden, George Castleman, the scion of another wealthy southern family, and another one of her ardent admirers. Harry excuses himself to Mr. Barrington and goes out to the garden in search of Pearl. He sees her and George and becomes insanely jealous. When Pearl and George return to the house Harry lies in wait until Pearl has gone upstairs and enters into an altercation with George. Pearl hears the row and steals downstairs. She is just in time to see Harry strike George and to hear the challenge to a duel. Realizing that duelling is prohibited the rivals agree to place two cards in a hat, and that the one drawing the card marked X shall kill himself, leaving the other as the sole suitor of Pearl. They exit to the gunroom to get their guns. Pearl, realizes the seriousness of the situation and substitutes a blank card in place of the marked one. The rivals come back, each draws a card and goes to his room to find out his fate. They each are happy in the thought that they have been saved. Pearl, determining to have some fun with them shoots off a revolver, and the love smitten youths imagine themselves the cause of the other's death. They enter the parlor and collide with each other and after their surprise has given way to anger, they accuse each other of cowardice. However, Pearl steps out from her hiding place and explains her part in the bloodless duel and compels them to shake hands and they leave as friends.

HIS AWFUL DAUGHTER (May 11).—Nellie loves Ned. Her father won't have Ned around the house and insists upon choosing Nellie's callers. He finds Ned at the house one day and telephones to Freddie, a rather effeminate youth, asking him to call immediately. Freddie does and Pa makes Nellie talk to him while he engages Ned in conversation. Ned gets disgusted and leaves. Freddie in his awkwardness, steps on Nellie's dress and tears it. That finishes him and he leaves. Father determines to get a real man for his daughter the next time and sends for Captain Fitzbugle of the town militia. The Captain calls and Nellie sees him. He boasts of his feats of courage to father, and pa thinks he is the bravest in the world. Nellie decides to have some fun with her father and the brave man in uniform and dresses in her father's clothes, wearing a mask. She gets an old horse pistol and enters the room where the Captain is still waving his sword. She points the gun at them and they collapse. She makes the Captain stand on his head and he runs from the house with Nellie close at his heels, waving the gun. The Captain runs into a policeman who chases Nellie through the streets and back into the house. She runs into the parlor and the policeman is about to arrest her when father explains that the desperado, unmasked is his daughter, and the policeman, after taking the gun away from her leaves. Father seeing that he is unable to curb his daughter's waywardness, writes Ned to call, hoping thusly to cure her bad habits. Ned accepts the invitation and Nellie and he are reunited.

CHAMPION.

THE SHARK GOD (May 5).—The young Hawaiian athlete, Keoli, is a leader in the outdoor sports so beloved of the natives. He and his sweetheart, Keala stroll off. They are watched by another who adores Keala. Visitors from a nearby village arrive. One of them is Piilani, a dancer. A dance is held and Piilani fascinates Keoli; she gradually draws him away from his sweetheart. Piiliani makes seducive love to Keoli who loses his head over her fascinations. Kane watches with the girl he thinks so much of. Kane goes to the foolish young fellow and reasons with him, but can make but little impression; poor Keala grieves.

Keoli recovers his reason and goes to his love for forgiveness. Piiliani, seeing her power has gone, seeks out the witch doctor, begging him to pray to the Shark God to strangle her rival to death. The old man does as he is bid and starts to pray the girl to death. She is affected and starts to strangle despite the efforts of her lover. Kane sees her too, and seeks out the dancer and tries to find what she has done. The woman boasts of her deed and Kane, taking a native weapon, goes to the old witch doctor and, as he sees the man's triumph, he strikes him down. The girl immediately recovers. Kane, horrified at what he has done (for the old man is held sacred in the islands), starts out to sea for his last swim, to sacrifice himself to the Shark God.

THE RISE OF OFFICER 174 (2 parts, May 1).—Police Officer King Baggot 174, is in love with Jane, the stenographer to the "man higher up," who has the whole of the criminal element of the city in his grasp. One evening while Jane and Officer 174 are walking along the street, he identifies the cleverest picture thief in the world getting out of an automobile and entering millionaire Forgan's Art Gallery. Suspecting that something is wrong, Officer 174 tells Jane to go home, and he, by a clever ruse, overcomes the chauffeur, puts on the chauffuer's uniform and hat and takes his place in the automobile. The picture thief comes out with the priceless treasure under his arm, and, not suspecting that the chauffeur is an officer, gives him instructions to drive rapidly away. Officer 174 drives him to the nearest police station and puts him under arrest. For his clever work he is thanked by the Commissioner of Police, who makes him a detective officer.

The city is so thoroughly alarmed at the predominance of vice and gambling that the mayor appoints Officer 174 as lieutenant of the squad. Immediately all the denizens of the underworld, thoroughly alarmed, appeal to the "man higher up" to protect them. He sends his emissary with an offer to Officer 174 of a position at a fabulous salary as manager of an orange grove in Florida. Officer 174 promptly sees through the whole thing and kicks the emissary out of the place. He rushes with dismay to the "men higher up" and tells him that Officer 174 cannot be bought. By this time the inhabitants of the underworld are in fear. Levenstein, proprietor of the Nestor Gambling Club in the tenderloin, defies law and order and insists upon running his club. Officer 174 makes a sensational raid and arrests Levenstein, his operators and his guests. The underworld, now thoroughly frightened, is determined to adopt drastic measures, and two notorious gunmen are hired to get Officer 174 out of the way. He, by a clever ruse, outwits them by placing a dummy in his place. They fire at the dummy. Thinking they have succeeded in killing him, they rush back with the news to the "man higher up." To their amazement they find this is not the case. Then the "man higher up" makes his first mistake. He interviews the Commissioner of Police, telling him that Officer 174 is a grafter, and to prove it, he hands the commissioner some bills and asks him to mark them, and that he will find them on the person of Officer 174 in the office of the "man higher up" at 3 o'clock that afternoon. He then sends a message to Officer 174 to the effect that if he comes to the office that afternoon at 3 o'clock, the "man higher up" will make a confession and give evidence, laying bare the whole system. Jane, the officer's sweetheart, through the use of the dictophone, overhears the plot, and when he arrives she tries to persuade him not to go into the office; but she is too late. While he is in there the marked bills are placed in his hand. The commissioner, with several police officers, accuses Officer 174 of grafting. He is arrested and the marked bills are found in his hat. The commissioner tells him that he is to leave the force in disgrace and ignominy, when Jane arrives on the scene with the dictophone and compels the commissioner to listen to the voice, wherein the whole plot, the "man higher up" and his accomplices are revealed. Then the commissioner arrests the '"man higher up" and the city is relieved of a terror that has menaced it so long.

THE WHOLE TRUTH (May 5).—George Truthtell has a wife who keeps close watch upon his pay envelope and always demands its surrender every pay day intact. Temptation befalls George in the person of Miss Demure and after a few hours in a cafe, George loses his sense of responsibility only to find at the end of the joyous hours that he has lost considerably more. Unable to summon up courage to tell his wife the true happenings to the pay envelope, he has himself bandaged up by a friendly druggist and concocts a tale of heroic rescue of an old lady by himself and later falling into the hands of a horde of desperate ruffians, led by the ones he first defeated and how, despite a fight he was vanquished and all his valuables taken from him. The tale succeeds in changing wifie's suspicion and unbelief to faith and tenderness and admiration, but a further complication between Miss Demure and a clever policeman, who recognizes in the girl a misdemeanor, nearly wrecks George's successful "cover-up:" but quick thinking brings matters to a happy conclusion to all concerned.

THE SHERIFF'S RIVAL (May 8).—Since childhood the sheriff and Edythe have been sweethearts, but their love, as far as Edythe is concerned, has never progressed beyond the boy and girl stage. With the sheriff it is different. He is shy and awkward when it comes to telling her so, but he loves Edythe with his whole heart. Because he understands the human male animal he does not loose his temper when his deputies administer a ruthless joshing as they catch him starting for Edythe's home with a hugh bouquet. Despite laughing espionage by a brother, Edythe and the sheriff manage to put in a very pleasant evening.

Not long after this a stranger arrives in town. This stranger is a gambler who is known to Edythe's brother and who is well supplied with money. Before he has gone a dozen yards from the stage which brought him he is offering to buy a drink. Because of this acquaintanceship with her brother it is a very easy matter for him to secure an introduction to Edythe, when he sees her riding into town. Lee, the sheriff, sees this introduction and is much hurt by it.

The introduction paves the way for an acquaintanceship. Edythe rides much with the gambler and it seems that the sheriff has in him an able rival. As time goes on and their friendship grows, Edythe and the gambler are more and more together. One day Lee sees them embrace and realizes that there is no hope for this affair any longer. In his mind he relinquishes Edythe to the gambler.

By an accident the sheriff later sees upon the gambler's arm a scar and asks about it. He is really careless about the matter, but the gambler attaches some concern to the question. A sheriff comes from a neighboring country searching for a man wanted for manslaughter. While he talks to Lee about him, giving a description from which Lee recognizes the gambler, through the scar, a deputy posts the town with offers of a reward for this man. The gambler sees one. Realizing that the officers are after him and growing desperate he jumps upon a nearby horse and makes a hurried flight.

Meanwhile Lee is having a struggle with himself. For Edythe's sake he desires to shield the gambler, while as an officer he should aid in his capture. He solves the question by denying knowledge of the man. To make this act compatible with his official capacity he feels that he must resign. This he does to the surprise of the president of the county supervisors. Then he goes to Edythe's home.

Meanwhile the gambler's horse has gone lame, and he too, has come to the ranch home. He begs Edythe to hide him. Edythe sees the sheriff entering the gate, apparently in search of the fugitive and she conceals him in a closet. The sheriff enters and shortly finds, through a couple of involuntary slips made by Edythe, that the gambler is not only in the house, but near him. He places a chair before the door, folds his arms and invites the gambler to come out. This the fugitive does with a rush. He covers the ex-sheriff with a revolver and is about to shoot him but the cool courage displayed disarms him. For Edythe's sake, Lee gives the gambler his own horse and lets him go.

ECLAIR.

MATHILDE (2 parts, April 23).—Owing to his gambling proclivities, Viscount de Lancry is reduced to a state of absolute penury. Mathilde, a niece of Mme. de Rochegune, is courted by the Viscount and Chevalier Lugarto. She favors the latter. Knowing that his rival cannot marry Mthlide without money, the Chevalier, through his diabolical machinations, inveigles the Viscount into accepting a check for 20,000 francs. But the Chevalier does not intend to help his rival, the offering of the check being given for the sole purpose of confirming his belief that the Viscount is without money. The Viscount leaves the room and upon returning, he finds a note from the Chevalier to the effect that he has left for abroad. Being unable to find the check, and thinking that it must have been lost, the Viscount forges the signature of the Chevalier to another, cashes it and receives the money.

A few days later the Chevalier calls upon the Viscount, and is well received. Ignoring the fact that he had received a check from the Chevalier and that he had taken it away from him while he was out of the room, the former reveals his true character and forces the Viscount to sign a paper acknowledging that he obtained the 20,000 francs by forgery. Even though he finds himself in the villainous clutches of the Chevalier, the Viscount marries Mathilde. Fearing that his wife will learn of his illegal deed, the Viscount goes to the Chevalier and begs that he destroy the incriminating paper. But he is informed that the paper has been sent to the Chevalier's lawyers in London. As soon as the Viscount has left for abroad, the Chevalier lures Mathilde to a place where she is at his mercy. He is about to show Mathilde her husband's confession of forgery when it is quickly snatched away from him by Mr. de Rochegune, who has learned of the abduction. The Chevalier tries to escape through the chimney, but meets his death there by suffocation.

POOR LITTLE CHAP HE WAS ONLY DREAMING (April 20).—When "Snookums" started to cry, Da-da thought it was because there was no milk in the house, and so he started on a run to the nearest store. Here he aroused the proprietor, who had been sleeping peacefully, and purchased a bottle of milk for a dollar. But in running back to the house Da-da slipped on some ice and landed on one ear. Incidentally, the bottle of milk was broken. Back went Da-da on the run, and again he got the storekeeper out of bed. This time the precious milk cost two dollars for the bottle, but Da-da "should worry" when it was going to make "Snookums" happy. So he raced home and climbed cautiously up the steps, which were covered with ice. Into the house he crept quietly, so as not to disturb the precious darling. But it was dark in the house and Da-da's only match soon burned out—the very next step, and he went headlong over a chair, breaking the second bottle of milk. He was making a few remarks on the subject in no gentle tone, when "Snookums'" mother appeared and cautioned him against making such a disturbance, since Snookums was sleeping so peacefully.

FIRE (April 20).—This subject is both beautiful and instructive, since it shows the many forms of fire, from the days when the ignorant savages first rubbed two sticks together, up to the blue blaze of an air torch.

SONS OF A SOLDIER (3 parts—May 7).—The earlier scenes depict the members of the older branches of the Primrose family in the trying crises of the Revolution and the Civil War, showing their mettle and preparing the way for the incidents of the main narrative, in which the sons of that sterling race become prominent factors in the fearful death struggle of East with West.

Young George Primrose, on leaving West Point, receives a lieutenant's commission, and is detailed at once for active service in the war. Shortly after his departure his elder brother is elected to the office of president. The ancient homestead of the Primroses, which has sheltered four generations of patriotic scions of this tree, has fallen into the hands of the Japanese, who are using it as their military headquarters. The grandfather of the two boys, and old soldier of Lookout Mountain and Gettysburg, though driven from his home and failing in health, is yet a lusty and active partisan, fighting vicariously for the land he loves through the medium of his two grandsons.

Lieutenant Primrose is sent to the Commander-in-Chief with a dispatch of vital importance. Attempting a short cut through an everglade, he loses his horse and becomes himself bemired, his strength having been undermined by a fresh wound from the carbine of a Japanese guerilla. Just as he has fainted from exhaustion, Denison, his classmate at West Point, comes upon him. This man hates the young officer, as he has been an unsuccessful aspirant for the hand of Polly Blake, Primrose's fiancee. Denison extracts the paper from Primrose's belt, and makes good his escape.

The hue and cry is out after the young lieutenant. The evidence all points to desertion. Denison pursues his advantage with the girl, declaring that he has tried to retrieve his friend's disgrace by delivering the dispatch himself. He produces the paper as proof. Primrose is finally found and brought on to Washington for court martial. Denison's testimony turns the case, and the order is issued to shoot the traitor. The old grandfather who loves the boy more than anything in the world, is the most unrelenting of his judges.

On the day set for the execution, Polly Blake arrives at the Capitol and demands immediate audience with President Primrose. She has discovered a thumb mark in blood on the dispatch which Denison gives her. The fact that the latter has received no wound arouses her suspicions. The thumb print is identified as George Primroses. The president's reprieve saves his brother from disgraceful death at the last moment, and the treachery of young Denison is unmasked to the world.

THE INDIANS SECRET (2 parts—May 6).—Raymond receives a letter from his brother, Dudley, telling of his finding an old Aztec Temple. He leaves his brother's baby, Myrtle, with her aunt Mildred, and with his wife and child, goes in search of the ancient treasures. Raymond finds the Temple and gets imprisoned therein by the falling of a pillar upon his leg. When he manages to get it off, he finds that the party have all been murdered, including his wife. He becomes a maniac and returning to the Temple he lives there, obtaining food and drink from the Sioux Indians, who believe him to be a White Spirit. His little four year old boy is found, uninjured, by Big Cloud, the chief of the Sioux, who brings the boy up to believe he is an Indian and names him White Eagle.

Eighteen years later, Myrtle learns of the tragedy from her aunt, and with a letter to the commander of a frontier fort she obtains an escort and goes in search of the treasure temple and of news of her kinsfolk. She and others find White Eagle, who has been treacherously shot and left for dead by the Apache chief, Wolf, following a peace conference.

Myrtle takes a great interest in him, to the anger of young Lieutenant Gray, who has been placed in charge of the escort and who has fallen in love with her. Myrtle does not believe White Eagle to be an Indian, and the frequent meetings of the two and Myrtle's derisive refusal of the lieutenant's offer of marriage, make him desperate and fill him with a desire for revenge. He comes across Chief Wolf and makes a compact with him whereby he agrees to steal the ammunition so that the Apaches may attack with success and with the agreement that Myrtle is not harmed is handed over to him.

The Sioux Chief, Big Cloud, alarmed at the absence of his beloved White Eagle, and seeing a vision of his son being attacked, calls his braves together and they set out to search for White Eagle. They are in time to rescue Myrtle and her party, including White Eagle. Big Cloud invites them to stay a while in their camp and the pipe of peace is smoked. A messenger is sent back to the fort to report the disturbance.

The lieutenant is again repulsed by Myrtle and he again seeks out Wolf and his Apaches. Wolf kills Big Cloud, believing him to be White Eagle, the latter rides out with his Indians to exterminate them. The Apaches hide and ride back to kill the hated whites, who escape to the Aztec Temple, which Myrtle has found by following Raymond.

The Apaches attack and many are blown to pieces by the maniac Raymond. The identity of White Eagle is established and he and Myrtle are happily united.

THE COUNTRY COUSIN (May 5).—Eddie is well content with his bachelor quarters and life. He is not interested as he should be when his affectionate Uncle Russell, backed by Aunty, write reminding him that he will lose a legacy of $75,000 if he is not married by his 25th birthday, which is fast approaching, and begging him to come and meet the bevy of nice girls and boys he has invited for a visit. Eddie likes the old couple and rather than disappoint them, he wires an acceptance of their invitation.

The guests have arrived—a bevy of pretty girls and smart boys. The girls are all agog over the coming of the young man—the boys indifferent. When Uncle Russell goes to the station to meet Eddie, the girls insist upon going to. The boys are disgusted at their conduct. Eddie scents trouble, and making Uncle get in the back with the girls, he sits in front with the driver.

Uncle Russell is an artful soul. He goes among the girls and tells them that if Eddie marries he will inherit $75,000. Each girl thinks she is the only one who knows, and makes up her mind to land such a desirable prize.

There ensues a bad time for Eddie, for they all try to amuse him and practice all the artful wiles at their command. Eventually he escapes in a canoe and paddles to the only haven of refuge—the middle of the lake. Returning, he sees a simply dressed little girl carrying a grip. It is the little country cousin, Louise, who has arrived late. The girls are outwardly polite to her, but laugh at the quaint country maiden behind her back. Eddie notices it and is disgusted at them and finding out that it is the possible money which interests them, he evolves a plan to escape from the sirens.

Eddie goes to his lawyer and obtains a letter from him stating that a new will has been found leaving all the money to charity. It is read and all the girls become cool toward him and the boys sneer. Little Louise alone shows sympathy. Eddie has much fun in trying to persuade the girls to go with him, but the refrigerator is wide open. Louise sees him snubbed and shows her sympathy. He proposes and is accepted, and all the boys and girls listen to the reading of a later faked telegram stating that the second will was found invalid and the provisions of the first will hold good. At this touching moment Eddie introduces the girl who makes the $75,000 a dead certainty. It is the little country cousin Louise.

girl, is infatuated with Hal, does not hesitate to show it. Hal is naturaly kind to women, no matter who and what they are. He tells her he loves another girl and she, furious at being put aside, follows him to find out who the girl is. She sees him enter the Barton Ranch gate and cautiously creeps behind some bushes and is an eye witness to a scene in which Mert attempts to take Madge in his arms after her refusal to countenance his attentions. Hal arrives in time to fight him off, takes his gun away and sends him about his business.

Papita picks up a letter from Hal, which Madge was reading and which she dropped during the struggle, and follows Mert; together they hatch a plot. They forge Hal's handwriting and send a note by a Mexican half-breed to Madge, telling her to keep an appointment at the bridge.

Madge, believing the note to be from Hal, rides slowly along to keep the appointment. Passing the saloon, she sees Papita, and speaking a kindly word she throws a flower. Papita takes it wonderingly, for her conscience smitted her. She enters the saloon and is grossly insulted by a drunken cowboy. Hal interferes and thrashes the brute and goes. It is too much for Papita. She runs after him and tells him of the infamous plot. They apprise the sheriff and the three of them ride off to the rescue.

Madge arrives at the trysting place and is seized by Mert and the Mexican and taken to a deserted cabin. Here Mert tells the girl that her only hope of release is to marry him. The rescuers creep up and the Mexican is overpowered, while Mert puts Madge before him and aims at Hal. Papita sees the danger, and throwing herself before Hal she receives the fatal bullet. She dies happy in the thought that she has righted the wrong.

THE BROTHERS (May 5).—Robert and John Gregory were left orphans. Robert, a, worthy soul, found his health failing and the doctor advised him to seek the lower levels. John, drunk most of the time, agreed to accompany him. The senor, Estaban, lived with his pretty wife and sister in the little cabin in the valley. Alone in the woods he found Robert and John, Robert prone upon the ground from exhaustion and John, quite drunk, beside him. The Spaniard took them home and in the days that followed Robert's health returned, and he grew to love the Spanish girl. John, on the other hand, made violent love to the wife of the senor and when she repulsed him, threatened to kill her. Behind the barn Robert came upon them, she struggling to free herself from John's embrace. All ties of blood were swept away in Robert's fury and he struck his brother to the ground. Slinking away, John discovered an aged mendicant who agreed to kill his brother and the senor in consideration of certain money. They went toward the little cabin home and the beggar demanded his money. This John refused, promising pay when the job was done. An argument arose between them. John, in drunken fury, struck the thug, who fell. Turning over on his side, the mendicant fired and John dropped dead. A little later the occupants of the little cabin gathered solemnly around his body.

HUMAN KINDNESS (May 8).—Old Jasper, now in his eightieth year, affectionately kissed his aged wife good bye and started for his day's work on the big estate. Ralph Martin, a young overseer, looked at his watch and spoke roughly to the old man of his tardiness. Old Jasper, without answering took his spade and rake and started work. A pretty flower caught his eye and he plucked it. When Miss Mabel, daughter of the owner of the estate, passed by, he offered it to her, but she only frowned and passed him by in silence. A moment later Martin bruskly told him to stop that foolishness. Pretty Betty, from a neighboring estate, passed into the big garden on her way to visit Miss Mabel. She took the pretty flower which the kindly old man offered her and pressed it in her book.

Later, with Miss Mabel, she passed him by and smiled kindly. That afternoon, a young man applied for work. Martin gave him a peremptory "No;" then seeing old Jasper feebly digging, called him back and hired him. He discharged Jasper, who, tottering from excitement and worry, found his way home to the arms of his aged spouse.

A few days later pretty Betty, again visiting Mabel, asked for him. The overseer was called and replied that he had discharged him. Mabel shrugged her shoulders, but the news worried Betty. On a bench in her own garden she picked up her book and found the pressed flower. Then she went to old Jasper's home and gave him work. There was much joy in the old gardener's home that night and in the days that followed old Jasper's wife and Betty were inseparable companions.

YOUTH AND JEALOUSY (May 10).—Big Ben from the Bar N Ranch called often on Margaret. As the two were inseparable, it soon became known that they would soon marry. This news greatly displeased Bill Higgins, who promptly set about to make trouble. He wrote an anonymous note and attached it to Ben's saddle, saying "She don't love you. She was with Bill Higgins all day yesterday. A Friend." When Ben found it he frowned and tucked it idly into his pocket. This happened regularly thereafter. If Ben had been a trifle older he might have smiled derisively, but he didn't. Youth and jealousy are old acquaintances and so Ben made his visits shorter and shorter. One day, lonesomeness overcame him and he sent the notes in a bundle to Margy. She read them and promptly burst into tears. Then, with true Western suddenness, she hurried into the house, where she told her brother all her trouble. The latter only smiled, but looked more serious when he caught Margy loading a big six-shooter. He told Bill to watch out for himself and ceased further to trouble himself. But Bill was more wise. Carefully unloading the bullets, he substituted blanks and when Margy later threatened him he only smiled. And then Ben rode up, utterly miserable and determined upon an understanding with Margy. This was easily obtained to the vast satisfaction of everyone concerned, but Bill Higgins.

MAJESTIC.

OLD MAMMY'S CHARGE (April 27).—Beatrice Prentiss, a southern girl, marries a chap from the north against her father's will. He casts her off and with her husband and Old Mammy, the girl goes north. Things do not go very well after that and when a baby is born, the girl wife dies. The young husband soon follows and Mammy is left to care for the baby herself. She brings little Beatrice up and takes great pleasure in keeping the child dainty and pretty. Time passes. Old Mammy washes clothes for a living and has her home in the colored section of the city. People notice the well-dressed white child in the woman's care and much speculation arises concerning her. Finally some well-meaning people bring the matter up in the court and Mammy is summoned to appear.

About this time old Major Prentiss has arrived in the city, in search of his long missing daughter whom he wants to bring home again. He is in the courtroom on the morning that Mammy appears and recognizes the old servant at once. Explanations follow after which he learns that his daughter and her husband are dead.

He then takes Mammy and the little girl back home where peace and comfort await them.

THE BAWLEROUT (3 parts—April 30).—Miss Sullivan, the bawlerout for Charker & Co., loan bankers to the poor, is the terror of every unfortunate who has to borrow money on his salary. If they do not pay up promptly she is the one who goes to their place of employment and "bawls them out."

Young Dick Lewis, a bank clerk, to help his fellow clerk, Jack Gray, borrows $200 of Charker & Co. The bawlerout is sent to his home to find out all about him. She pretends to be a book agent and talks with his mother—a kindly old gentlewoman. Satisfied that the boy is all he said, Charker & Co., advance him the money.

Dick is engaged to Edith Downs, the pretty daughter of the bank cashier. She is a selfish, heartless girl, caring more for dress than she does for anything else. When Dick—owing to the fact that he has no evening clothes—finds himself unable to go to a hall with her, she calls his rival on the 'phone and makes an appointment to go with him.

Dick's friend refuses to help Dick pay back the money he borrowed for his sake; so the bawlerout is sent to the bank to disgrace the boy. But as she begins she sees his mother entering with the bank president. The sight of the gentle old lady softens the girl and she goes away without accomplishing her purpose.

John Howard—a reformer—disguises as a workman to find out the truth about the loan shark establishment. He interests the bawlerout and together they find out that President Bendis of the bank in which Dick is employed is the real head of Charker & Co.

Edith's father, to keep up with his daughter's extravagance, borrows money from the bank which he is unable to repay. The girl, learning of this and dreading to see her father disgraced, suggests that as Dick loves her—he take the blame. The boy agrees.

Miss Sullivan, who has become friendly with Dick's mother, is a constant visitor at the house. But she has never permitted herself to soften toward Dick, who, despite this and the fact of his engagement to Edith, falls in love with the erstwhile bawlerout.

Howard and Miss Sullivan secure the necessary evidence against Charker's. In the bank the money is missed and Dick accused. He says nothing and is about to be arrested when Howard enters with the bawlerout. Bendis is told that he is wanted by the police and Miss Sullivan, seeing Dick handcuffed, asks the reason and is told. One glance from the boy to the shrinking cashier convinces her as to just who the thief is. She "bawls out" Downs and breaks him so that he readily confesses. As he and Bendis are taken away, Edith turns to Dick and informs him that she is done with him—she has become engaged to the other man.

With a great sigh of relief, Dick holds out his arms to Miss Sullivan, and she, despite her past coldness, enters his embrace. And it is thus that Dick's mother finds them a little later.

THANHOUSER.

ROSIE'S REVENGE (April 27).—Rosie was born and brought up on a farm, but had longings for the gay life of the city. She was not pretty, far from it; in fact even she realized there would be no place for her on the stage, except in support of the Cherry Sisters. She couldn't be an artists's model, or a grand opera singer, so she compromised on stenography. The station agent in their village (he was a distant relative), gave her two lessons and then she went forth to conquer the metropolis.

Rose got a job. No one could ever explain how she did it. Her tenure of office work was one hour and seven minutes, at the end of which time she was discharged for incompetency. She blamed her employer and vowed vengeance. It must be admitted that he talked harshly to her, but on the other hand it cannot be denied that Rosie's work on the typewriter was pretty coarse. She tried for other positions, but did not succeed in landing one. When her money ran out she was induced to take a position as cook in a private family and there demonstrated that she was in her proper sphere. As a typewriter Rosie was an insult, as a cook, she was a delightful dream.

Ten years after, her one essay at office work, Rosie was employed by a wealthy young widow, who lived alone in the country. The widow had a suitor, a clean cut young business man, and Rosie heartily approved of him. Then one day Rosie's former employer appeared. It developed later that he had hoped to retrieve his fortunes by marrying the widow, who was a friend of his sister. He was received graciously, but Rosie determined to get rid of him without delay.

She was an excellent cook, and she easily accomplished her purpose. The poor man had a most horrible meal, and could not understand how the widow and her other suitor enjoyed it. He did not know that he as partaking of a special diet, but the little he ate worried him, and he finally fled from the house, never to return.

The widow in time married the merchant and they retained Rosie, who became even a better cook as the years passed by.

THE GIRL DETECTIVE'S RUSE (April 29).—A gang of counterfeiters made their headquarters in a large city and the police, despite many determined efforts, were unable to arrest them.

One of the cleverest detectives in the city's employ was a young girl who had won a name for courage. She learned that a certain woman counterfeiter, who had been sentenced to prison with her husband was soon to be released, and a daring plan occurred to her. The convict resembled the detective in appearance, and the latter felt sure that, properly disguised she would be taken for the other woman. Arrangements were accordingly made, the prisoner was detained in the penitentiary, while the detective, wearing the shapeless clothing given to discharged prisoners, slunk out of the prison yard. As she had anticipated she was met by men who warmly greeted her and escorted her to a waiting automobile.

The woman counterfeiter had been noted as an engraver, and the detective's "friends" were none other than the gang of which the police were in search. At their headquarters the girl, firmly established in the gang's confidence, learned all the information necessary and sent a cipher message to the chief of police, telling him to raid the place.

The convict's husband escaped from prison on the day set for the raid. He made his way to the counterfeiter's headquarters, and when presented to his "wife" denounced her as an imposter and a spy. The girl was in great peril, but her courage did not fail her. Seizing a chair, she smashed the lamp and the room was shrouded in darkness. While the angry men floundered around trying to find her, the detective fled to the roof of the building in an effort to elude her pursuers. She was overtaken and seized. Death was very near at hand when policemen poured in from adjoining houses and the counterfeiters were made prisoners.

The girl was complimented for her gallantry and promoted, and the woman whose place she had taken was released from prison and helped to lead an honest life.

THE WIDOW'S STRATAGEM (May 2).—The doctor diagnosed the wealthy widow's case as "too much society." He ordered that she leave the city for the summer, and spend at least a couple of months in some quiet farm house. With many sighs the order was obeyed, and the woman soon found herself the paying guest of a country woman far from civilization.

At first, time hung heavily on the visitor's hands, but she soon learned to reconcile herself to her surroundings. The fare was plain but good. She passed many happy hours sketching, and lastly, there was a "mighty nice boy" who came over almost daily to chat with her.

The widow was young and beautiful, but she never dreamed for a moment of falling in love with the youthful farmer. He, however, was dazzled by the style and beauty of the city resident and soon was paying much attention to her.

For some little time the widow did not know that she was causing sorrow for another. Her hostess had a daughter, an awkward country girl, and one day this girl confronted the widow. She told her that the young farmer had been her sweetheart, but was now being won away and dropping on her knees she pleaded "Don't take him away, he is all I have."

The blase city woman's heart was touched. She felt for the poor little girl who had had so few joys in life, and tenderly promised her that she would nip the undesired romance in the bud. She did, but the farmer never realized how it was accomplished. He simply found that the woman he had admired was not so beautiful as he had at first believed, that she was course and common, so almost insensibly he ceased to care for her and drifted back to the one who steadfastly loved him.

The widow returned to the city, her health fully restored, and again assumed her position in society. The country girl married the man of her choice and always realized that she owed her happiness to the success of the widow's stratagem.

KEYSTONE.

THE DARKTOWN BELLE (May 8).—Caroline is the belle of Coontown. Her sweetheart is Big Sam, a barber. Sam has an awful time keeping away the admirers of Caroline, and many fierce encounters take place. A new arrival comes—a regular dude—and meets Caroline. She gives him one of her photographs, and he goes to the barber shop to get shaved. While sitting in the chair he gazes at the photograph and kisses it. Sam sees the photo, and goes for him with a razor. The dude manages to get out of the shop, pursued by Sam, who finally catches the dude and begins to beat him and cut him up. Caroline, meanwhile, has annexed another admirer, and Sam catches sight of her kissing him. With a look of disgust, he releases his victim, gives him the razors and walks away, deciding that it is impossible to keep in check Caroline's wandering affections.

A LITTLE HERO (May 8).—Mabel has a canary bird, a tiny pet dog and a cat. She goes out, and the cat goes after the canary. Doggie hears the racket and takes in the situation. Knowing he is no match for Tabbie he runs as fast as his little legs will carry him to a kennel where he tells his troubles to three big collies, who run back with him. They secure entrance to the house through a basement window, and arrive in time to save the bird's life. Tabby runs away, and an exciting chase follows.

When Mabel comes home and sees the overturned bird cage and the canary's tail feathers pulled out she thinks her little doggie has chased the cat away, and hugs her hero.

ALGIE ON THE FORCE (May 5).—Algie secures a job on the force. A new chief of police is appointed, who wears a soft hat and a frock coat. A woman reports the theft of her watch by a thief with a soft hat and a frock coat and Algie goes out looking for the thief. He meets the chief of police and arrests him after a chase and a fight, and handcuffs his prisoner to a telegraph pole while he goes for assistance. The Captain's consternation can be imagined when he arrives with his men and finds his chief a prisoner. Algie gets bounced.

HIS UPS AND DOWNS (May 5).—A clever comedy, in which an aeroplane and a giant balloon are used. Ford Sterling takes a flight in the aeroplane, and interesting views are shown of Los Angeles and surrounding country thaken from the aeroplane at a great height.

BRONCHO

THE WAY OF A MOTHER (2 parts, May 7).—The brutality of Mrs. Cardigan's husband excites comment, and one day a miner named Norton intercedes in behalf of the wife. Norton agrees to take Mrs. Cardigan away from her vicious husband; but they are overtaken. In trying to escape with her half-dressed baby, a bullet grazes her temple and she falls unconscious upon the ground. Norton is killed in the skirmish. Indians, hearing the shots, attack the whites and take the baby, leaving Mrs. Cardigan for dead. The wife is found by the soldiers and is taken to the fort, where she recovers, and eventually falls in love and marries the colonel.

Twenty years later her baby, now grown, is appointed chief of the Indians, the old chief having died. The redmen, thinking the pin that he wears bearing his name, John, a charm, have named him Running Elk. One day Running Elk calls at the fort to sell furs, and has an altercation with a drunken soldier. In the fight that follows the soldier is killed and Running Elk is sentenced to death. The mother meets the Indian and learns that he is her son, but does not reveal her identity. When she hears that the Indian is to be shot, she effects his escape. She is discovered by the colonel and, in a dramatic scene, tells him of her past life, and he forgives her. Smarting under the indignities he has received, Running Elk incites his tribe to war with the soldiers. Seeing that the soldiers are losing, the mother decides to tell Running Elk who she is; but in climbing the stockade, she is struck by a bullet. With her dying breath she impresses upon her son that she is his mother. A truce is declared and she is buried amidst impressive Indian rites.

KAY-BEE.

PAST REDEMPTION (2 parts, May 9).—Through the efforts of the Rev. John Drummond, who comes to a small western mining town with his little boy, all the saloons are closed. Jim Howe and his daughter, Nell, being unable to carry on a liquor business in the town, move to the mountains, where he runs an illicit still and continues to supply whiskey to the Indians. The sheriff gets on his trail and he is soon placed in the custody of the law. Nell, determining to avenge herself for the capture of her father, fires a shot into a party of hostile Indians, secreting herself in a bush as she does so. The Indians, seeing the soldiers coming, and thinking that they fired the shot, rush at them, but are defeated. This plan of revenge having failed, she makes her way to the minister's home, but is prevented from doing any harm to him by the maternal instinct which rises in her when she sees his little boy praying for his mother in heaven. Just then the sheriff's posse captures her and is about to lead her off when the minister persuades the deputies to parole the girl in his custody. She falls in love with the reverend gentleman and they are later married. This incident causes the villagers to pass much adverse comment upon the pair. Being unable to withstand such criticism, Nell leaves a note on the table saying to her husband that she is going away. Soon after her departure the sheriff calls upon the minister with a warrant for Nell's arrest on account of her fight with a woman who has a vitrolic tongue. The sheriff and his posse decide to help the minister find his wife, and they start out. They locate the lifeless body upon the desert, and a pathetic scene takes place as the minister comes upon the body.

LUX.

THE MILLER'S DAUGHTER (May 2).—The old miller has only one treasure. His wife has long since left to struggle alone, and all his love is now centered upon his only daughter. He is angered, therefore, when he finds that she has given her heart to his assistant, and, in his anger, he dismisses the assistant and forbids his daughter to have any more to do with the young man. His daughter is very much grieved, and is soon discovered by her father meeting her lover in secret. At first the old man is angered, but the song of youth, bursting forth in his heart again, recalls him to his true self, and he writes to the young fellow telling him to come to the mill the next evening and they will celebrate the reunion. That day a friend of his warns him against the danger of a fire being caused at his mill through the fermentation of the grain, which has been stored there for a longer time than usual. The miller dismisses the matter, but that night, when his daughter goes into the upper storerooms to see that all is safe for the night, the lamp which she carries causes the gases to ignite, and a fearful conflagration follows. The young girl finds herself unable to escape. There she remains imprisoned by the flames, whilst her aged father hastens for assistance. Fortunately, the assistant arrives upon the scene, and bravely forces his way into the burning mill. He attaches a rope to the window sill and proceeds to lower himself and his sweetheart out of the window. The flames creep along the rope, and at last it snaps, and both are immediately thrown into the river below. They are in a danger even as great, for the river is deep, and the floods have caused it to run with more than its usual force and rapidity. The old miller entrusts his feeble person to a boat, and bravely succeeds in rescuing his treasured ones at a great personal risk. In after years he has occasion to be thankful for his brave deed, and for the song of youth that sounded in his heart at the right moment, for now, instead of having a daughter, he has a son as well.

O KOMA SAN (April 22).—Oishi Danjuro, the young Prince of Satsuma, meets a dainty giesha, O Koma San. He finds her charming. Both soon become enmeshed in Cupid's net. As their lovemaking progresses, the Prince is recalled to Tokio by an order from the Emperor. O Koma San is heart-broken at the prospect of an indefinite separation. She is somewhat reconciled when the Prince swears on the fan and dagger, given him by his father, that he will return within a year.

Time passes and the Prince doesn't return. Despairing, the little giesha goes to Tokio with the baby born of the love that had come to such an abrupt end. On the threshold of Oishi's palace she learns that the Prince has married the young Princess Fujiwara. The geisha forces her way into the palace and faces her rival, the princess. Overcome with jealous rage, the wronged girl threatens the life of the Princess. Anguish and hopelessness in her heart, O Koma turns the dagger with which she had threatened the Princess upon herself. It is the poor girl's hope that she will rejoin her lover by the banks of the Sai-no-Kaware, the River of Departed Souls. The Prince comes into the room to find her lifeless body, learning too late of the tragedy he has caused.

LESSONS FOR THE BASHFUL (April 24).—Young Marquis de Cargonet is a very apple-pious youth. He is the last of his line. He longs for the quiet cloister. He decides to renounce the pleasures of this world, enter a monastery and embrace the monastic life. His uncle writes, says that instead of embracing the monastic life, he will embrace the pretty lady selected for him.

The young Marquis arrives at his uncle's home, and is about as bashful as a garter snake. The young lady is not used to reticent gentlemen and tells his uncle that she will never marry such a stupid, that he is so thick that you cannot see through him with an X-ray.

Uncle, desperate, seeks the aid of the housekeeper, one of our best little flirts. She has made love so often that she can do it in the dark without missing a stroke. In fact, she can make love and chow-chow at the same time without changing hands. She instructs him how to flash the glad eye, how to bow until his eyebrows brush the sidewalk, how to put his arm around a lady's waist, how to bite his initials in her cheek and how to convince all round that he is a regular fellow.

He learns very well. He soon can do it with his fingers crossed. He takes up his courtship with the young lady of his uncle's choice and quickly shows her that he has forgotten more about lovemaking than she ever knew.

GREAT NORTHERN.

WHO IS MOST TO BLAME (May 3).—Mr. Parson is a wealthy banker and his wife is one of the most fashionable women in her set. Mr. Donald is a solicitor and had been an ardent admirer of Mrs. Parson before her marriage. The latter attends a reception, while her husband hurries to attend a meeting of the board of directors of the bank in which he is interested. At the reception she meets Donald and in a spirit of frivolity, invites him to her home, explaining to her hostess that she is suffering from a headache. In the meantime, Jennie, the maid in the employ of the Parson's, has taken advantage of the absence of her employers to invite the butcher's assistant to the house. The two are feasting and the butcher's clerk is smoking expensive perfectos when Mrs. Parson rings for admittance. The young man is hidden under a couch and Jennie hurriedly removes the remnants of the repast from the table. Soon after the arrival of Mrs. Parson, she receives the promised visit from Donald and the two are chatting amiably when Mr. Parson proceeds to let himself into the house. The fact is that after the meeting of the bank directors, the staid financiers visit a music hall and then engage in a friendly game of cards at the club. Parson becomes weary of the entertainment at the club and decides to hurry to his home. Before he enters, his wife secretes Donald under the same couch under which the butcher's clerk is hidden. The solicitor and the former meet for the first time under these awkward circumstances and all goes well until Mr. Parson discovers two empty glasses on the mantel. The maid arrives in time and explains that the mistress and herself had taken a little "nightcap." Then the banker finds a stub of a cigar which the butcher's helper had been smoking and once again his suspicions are aroused. Sounds of breathing from beneath the couch cause him to investigate and the serving maid's sweetheart is pulled from cover by the ear. Again Jennie comes to the rescue and removes an embarrassing situation by admitting that she had been entertaining her sweetheart during the absence of the family. Donald escapes unseen and on the day following he receives a visit from the butcher's apprentice. They laugh heartily over the strange predicament in which they found themselves on the previous night and all ends merrily.

THE HYPNOTIC COLLECTOR (April 24).—Willie Dunn is out of work, and broke. He is about to be evicted from his furnished room. He is in love with a beautiful girl, who in turn loves him. The girl's father, however, violently dislikes Willie. Willie sees an advertisement for a collector, answers it and secures the position. Then, his troubles begin! He goes to collect a bill from a society woman, and is unmercifully snubbed by her. When Mrs. Hooligan, who is not a society woman, won't pay, he attempts to take her pig, but Mr. Hooligan appears and does a few things to poor Willie Dunn that leaves him rather the worse for wear. His adventures with the tough saloon-keeper, the physical culture instructor and the liveryman are very funny to the observer, but not to Willie. He and his clothes are badly battered when, at the end of the day, he returns to his employer with no collections. He gets no sympathy, but is told he must see the same people next day, and if he doesn't get any money, he loses his job! Disconsolate, he wanders the streets, and with his last dime buys a copy of "Conquer by Hypnotism" from a fakir. He learns the art over night, and starts out in the morning with new courage. Hypnotism delivers the goods! He makes the debtors go through all kinds of funny antics, and finally marches the whole crowd to his employer's office, when he makes them pay up. Then he hypnotizes his employer into signing a contract engaging Willie for five years at $5,000 a year. His final and greatest victory is when he forces his sweetheart's father to consent to the marriage.

THE SONG OF SONGS (May 1).—Louise and Grace, sisters, who early in life were orphaned, grow up together with a deep love for each other. On Louise, the elder, has devolved most of the cares of the household, and her "motherly" care of her younger sister is repaid by the love the younger sister bears for her. Both are in love with the same man, though they have concealed the knowledge from each other, and when Louise accidently discovers Grace's love for him, with a sacrifice born of true love for her younger sister, she hides her grief, and leads Grace to believe she never cared fr him. Louise accepts a position to appear in concert work, and leaves, while Grace and John are happily married. Several years pass, and John and Grace are happy in their love of each other and of a baby girl, their only dark cloud being Grace's failing health. Louise has made a success in her chosen work, and has just received an offer for a world-wide concert tour, the goal for which she has been working when news is brought to her of Grace's death. Louise sacrifices her career to return to care for the motherless baby, which she learns to love as she would her own. In the passing years, however, her love for the baby and John growing stronger, and fearful of betraying her secret, she decides to leave, but in this she is prevented, and at the same time wins her reward, through her baby namesake, Louise.

Always at Your Service

The Motion Picture Annual, published by the Chalmers Publishing Company, is always at your service. Put it in your desk and always leave it in the one place and its pages will give you an answer to most questions which interest the exhibitor. The Annual gives you a complete list of all releases issued in 1912 (Licensed and Independent). This feature alone is worth the price of the book, which sells at one dollar and twenty-five cents per copy in paper covers or $1.50 in cloth boards. To compile this list has been the work of many weeks. Other features are the trade directory, a history of motion pictures, something by Richardson on Projection and contributions by other prominent M. P. writers. The book is a practical volume of reference. Get it without delay.

The "GLORIA" Artistic FILMS

THE achievement of the master-mind and the result of long years of experience, will soon be produced. A galaxy of experts have been secured by this company, and preparations are now being made for the initial production. In the most modern studio ever built, located at Turin, Italy, a band of famous actors and scores of mechanics are making what will be the sensation of the Universe.

THIS GREAT COMPANY HAS ESTABLISHED A UNITED STATES AGENCY

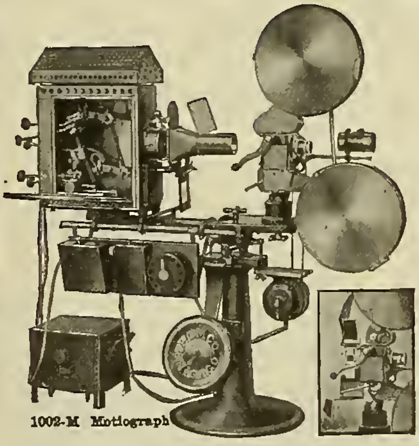
Full particulars will be given later. Watch for the name of the American Agent and the title of the first picture.

The "GLORIA" films will be all artistic; they will be in two, three and four reels. They will present exclusive productions from the masterpieces of the world's greatest authors. The greatest features yet known will be made.

Mario Caserini, nine years with the Cines Company at Rome and later with the Ambrosio Company of Turin, will be the director. Mr. Caserini's great success presages wonderful releases with the "GLORIA" Company.

Domenico Cazzulino, well known in the cinematograph world, will also be associated with the new company.

The decision has been made to show these great films in this country and the agency has been placed. Full announcement shortly.



1002-M Motiograph

The Owners' Stand-By The Motiograph Machine

EVEN A GOOD OPERATOR can ruin a good film UNLESS HE is given a machine that will protect the film in its entire passage from reel to reel. NO MACHINE offers this protection to the film so strongly as does THE MOTIOGRAPH.

ON THE MOTIOGRAPH the film is guided over the film sprockets by A FLANGED IDLER ROLLER (Patented and Controlled by us) which touches only the outside edge of the film and does not come in contact with any other part.

Do You Know The Motiograph?
Does Your Operator Know It?

Unless you are both familiar with this machine you are not only NOT UP-TO-DATE, but you are doing injustice to yourselves, to your patrons who are paying for good projection, but also to us, the manufacturer who has spent thousands upon thousands of dollars in yearly improvements to furnish you with a "QUALITY MACHINE" where an exchange of dollars brings you an equal amount of value.

A G-E Rectifier Will Advertise Your Theater

A G-E Rectifier in operation in front of the entrance of a moving picture theater is an excellent advertisement. Any mechanical device in operation attracts attention, and the peculiar greenish blue light given off by the rectifier is noticeable even on the most brilliantly lighted streets. In addition, the presence of the rectifier indicates to those who are well informed that the pictures will be projected by the most modern method, and therefore they will be of maximum brilliancy.

The G-E Rectifier not only advertises the theater and improves the projection of the pictures, but it also reduces the expense of operating the lamp by eliminating rheostat losses.

Write our nearest office for booklet B-3107, explaining the operation and advantages of the rectifier.

WARNER'S FEATURES

Have convinced skeptics that American-made productions in three reels are vastly superior to those made abroad. Our policy of "Quality First—Service Always" enters into every one of our transactions. That's why we the field in the rental of features. Warner's Features have "Punch." They express originality. They teem with the exciting situations. They over-awe spectators with their massiveness. They embody unusual, spectacular and thrilling incidents that place them in a class by themselves.

Have Your Theatre Smell Like a Garden of Flowers

Problem of Destroying Foul Odors and Purifying Air of Picture Houses Solved by New Scientific Chemical Discovery.

H. V. Flamhaft, a well known Chemist of Syracuse, N. Y., has solved a problem that has long puzzled many a Moving Picture House Manager. He has succeeded, after many experiments, in producing a highly concentrated and very powerful disinfectant, that not only purifies the air, almost instantly destroying Foul Odors and making Wholesome the close, tainted atmosphere of the theatre, but that leaves a delicious, delicate and lasting fragrance equal to that of the highest grade floral perfumes. Moving picture managers who have tested this new floral disinfectant, unite in declaring it the very best and most economical antiseptic they have ever used. A gallon of this product, which is called

PUROZONE

The Oxygen Air Purifier

is equal in strength to 10 gallons of the ordinary weak disinfectant solution, and in a large house will give splendid results for weeks. To show what it will do, upon receipt of $2, we will send you a gallon and an absolute guarantee of satisfaction. It is suggested that managers who have experienced difficulty in purifying the air of their houses take advantage of this trial offer. Address

Gundlach Projection Lenses

The Only Lenses Which Guarantee You The Best Pictures
The Only Lenses Giving The Greatest Possible Illumination
The Only Lenses Exact in Focal Length To Within 1-100 of an Inch

There were no high grade Lenses on the market until GUNDLACH LENSES were made and none now that equal them in optical quality and illuminating power.

The GUNDLACH NO. 2 PROJECTION LENSES made the long throw possible and already hundreds of theater owners have taken advantage of this opportunity to increase their theeters in length and seating capacity adding to their profits at the same time.

The superior quality of GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES is recognized by the leading makers of machines and they will be supplied to order in place of the ordinary lens equipment at very little increase in price.

No matter how well satisfied you are with your picture we invite you to order a GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENS for trial to see the difference. Nearly all our lenses are sold to exhibitors who have ordinary lenses, but are looking for something better. In many cases a customer orders one lens for trial and then re-equips all his machines, sometimes the machines of several theaters.

GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES are used by the Kinemacolor Company of America because they must have the best.

HER SISTER'S SECRET Tuesday, May 6th

The secret was a—Man, of course. Both sisters loved him. The one whom he fancied most, gave him up in the other's interests. And then the latter skipped out of the way to leave the fancied sister free to be won.

THE OTHER GIRL Friday, May 9th

It all happened at a California Rose Tournament, this grand outbreak of jealousy. His sweetheart wouldn't drive his "chariot," so he had to find a substitute. The substitute was very pretty and there you are! Complications began complicating and in the end his love-chart was upside down!

FACING defeat, on the third day, Gen. Lee gave the order to Gen. Pickett to charge, and the brave soldiers followed their leader through a murderous rifle fire and a fierce cannonading, nor did they stop until most of their numbers were stretched lifeless upon the field. This is the most heroic and sensational incident in the war history of the world, and is shown in the film in all detail.

THIS PICTURE WILL BREAK ALL RECORDS

As a production of magnitude and superb rendition it has already broken two records. The next record it breaks will be that of paid admissions. The wise state right buyer will discount the pessimistic theories of men who have bought state right "lemons" on the get-rich-quick plan. This is a real feature for real showmen. If you know your business, here is your chance.

WE are not offering you a lot of warmed over thrills for the mere sake of marketing a feature. The story is not made to order. It is known wherever books are read. We are advertising the pictured version of a literary classic, following the text of the story absolutely, with cultured intelligence, and enacted by the most capable actors of the French stage. Our big circular will stand the test of a schoolroom reading. It contains a couple of good lessons in itself, and we guarantee that any one who gets and reads it will never be content until he has seen the picture; not to mention the drawing power of our excellent line of special posters.

MILLIONS LOST

By Exhibitors Through Mismanagement and Lack of Knowledge!

IN the show business, the percentage of "chance" is greater than in any other business. Experience has taught that the showman who has been willing to speculate three dollars on the chance that it will bring back three-fifty is the showman who to-day is on top. On the other hand, the day of the "100 to 1" chance is gone.

It is understood—it is almost an axiom that "you've got to spend money in order to make money." No one appreciates this more than theatrical and moving picture producers. In the moving picture business, a manufacturer can, for a short period, get away with "piker" productions if he is backed by a strong distributing or exchange corporation. But it isn't long before the exhibitor "gets wise" and then down the toboggan goes the reputation of the "piker producer," and his "piker" brand, and the exchange handling it. Once down it is difficult to rise again.

The same conditions that govern productions, govern exhibition. The showman who gets into the habit of giving a "piker show" composed of "piker productions" attracts, if at all, piker patrons. The slogan of the real showman is "Give the public its money's worth" and not "Give it as little for its money as possible." The trouble to-day is that too many go into the show business with an idea of getting-rich-quick. The stigma these few leave behind after they are gone makes it all the more difficult for showmen who are in the business to stay.

"You have got to spend money in order to make money." Some exhibitors scratch their heads often and wonder why they are not making as much as their competitors. They cannot understand why persons will pass their theatres and pay to enter the theatre on the next block. This problem can be solved without scratching the head. The answer is self-evident. It means that his competitor is a better showman than he is. It is a question of delivering the goods, giving the public its money's worth.

Because of the keen competition among manufacturers and exchanges, exhibitors to-day are more powerful than they ever were. They can get what they want. The opportunities are really unlimited. Besides regular service they can get, if they have the enterprise, two or three features a week with which to bolster up their "slow" nights. The feature exchange to-day is as well established as the regular exchange. The general tendency, the general demand is for three-reel features. One subject for an entire evening's entertainment is in greater demand than anything else. Why waste opportunity? The service of a feature may cost a few dollars extra—Remember the slogan of all successful showmen is "Spend money to make money."

Facts and Comments

CONVENTION season for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' State organizations is now on. Members of those bodies are now taking stock of the year's work and planning for the year to come. Officers are being elected and delegates chosen to attend the big National Convention in New York City. These are all important matters to the several organizations and deserve careful consideration. But, with the elections and the banquets and the other good times that go with conventions would it not be well to give some thought to the character of the entertainment that is being offered to the public by the individual members of these organizations. We do not seem to catch that note in the reports of meetings that come to the editorial desk.

Suppose all the members of a state organization were to agree that they would not exhibit pictures which might, in the least degree, offend the most critical among their patrons, or which would arouse the antagonism of the self-appointed censors of public morals. Would not concerted action of this nature go a long way toward disarming the critics and quieting their demands for official censorship? Would not such action serve as a notice to that class of manufacturers who deal in the ultra-sensational and the objectionable picture that such productions are not wanted? It is a mistaken idea that exhibitors are compelled by the exchanges to take what is given them regardless of quality and character, and determined and concerted action by the exhibitors will go a long way toward impressing the manufacturers with the necessity of making pictures that will not offend.

This naturally leads to a few remarks upon the question of censorship. Why should not the exhibitor be his own censor rather than to turn the job over to politicians whose only interest is to create a few more easy berths for political "heelers." Under the proposed official censorship the exhibitors will find that the cost of the system will add considerable to their schedule of fixed charges. Why should the exhibitor be the goat?

IT is announced by the chairman of the committee of New York exhibitors which is handling the Motion Picture Exposition that is to be held at Grand Central Palace in conjunction with the National Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League during the week of July 7, that the success of the venture is positively assured. Reservations of space have been liberal and the amount of rentals is something over $20,000—more than sufficient to cover the cost of the exposition. The committees in charge of the convention arrangements are busy with the plans for the entertainment of delegates and visitors. A large attendance of members of the Exhibitors' League and other exhibitors is expected, together with a big delegation of exhibitors and others connected with the motion picture trade from abroad. That the event will be the most auspicious in the history of motion pictures in America there is no longer any doubt. Those who have been hesitating should get in the band wagon at once, for no one identified with the trade can afford to remain on the outside.

A CORRECTION FOR OUR EUROPEAN READERS.

Some misunderstanding has been caused by an account in our English contemporary, the "Kinematograph Weekly," of a dinner given to the editors of the Kinematograph journals attending the recent Exhibition in London. Mr. H. Samuels is mentioned as representing The Moving Picture World. There is no one of this name on the staff of The World in any capacity whatsoever. As noted in a former issue of The World, Mr. F. E. Samuels attended the London Exposition as the representative of the Exposition Committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Neither Mr. H. Samuels nor Mr. F. E. Samuels has any connection with The Moving Picture World.

Correspondents will please note that all mail intended for The World should be addressed to Post Office Box 226, Madison Square Station, New York City, as per title and cover pages of the paper.

THE WORM TURNS.

Out in Portsmouth, Ohio, Judge Blair, proprietor of the Portsmouth Blade, and the Ministerial Association, joined to cause the arrest of the managers of Portsmouth picture theaters for running Sunday shows. Now the picture men have turned on their persecutors and have caused the arrest of Judge Blair and many other proprietors of businesses operated on Sunday. The picture men declare that if they are to be prosecuted for breaking the Sunday laws all the rest of the violators must be punished as well.

Why Is a Censor?

By Louis Reeves Harrison

EVERY day, during afternoon and evening, during twelve hours of the twenty-four, twelve thousand little theaters are patronized by ten or eleven millions of our people, a number aggregating per week nearly three quarters of our entire population. The pictures shown at these little theaters have steadily improved in character, and as they gain wider and wider vogue it is to be presumed that they will eventually command the solid support of those who believe that any thing exhibited in public should be clean enough to be exposed to the eyes of their producer's friends and family.

The workman who puts on his coat and shirt collar after dinner and goes out to the picture show for an hour or two of diversion might not be deeply offended by certain imbecilities and vulgarities of the screen, but he sometimes takes his wife and children, and the same program shown him in the evening is held up for the amusement and edification of an audience largely composed of women and children in the afternoon. There is no doubt that certain objectionable, if not ribald phases of life appeal to those in over-sympathy with its coarser expressions, especially of the spine-thrilling kind, but their tastes need not cause so much concern, any more than a small boy's predilection for dead cats. They will get over it in time.

"Getting down to nature" has become a trick phrase to cover glaring indecencies that are the spawn of decadent minds. Whatever elevates a man above that kind of "nature" is the making of him. The animals that man eliminated from the face of the earth were close down to nature of that kind—the spirited and splendid things he has been doing are all in the way of getting control of nature's forces. He is in a state of progress; he is relegating the past to the past; he is transforming himself and his kind by his wondrous energy and self-determination. Moving pictures, while they may sanely deal with the tremendous and dramatic influences of self-preservation and reproduction, must not be used to confuse or degrade, but to assist in the general struggle for spiritual, social and political freedom if they are to appeal to all the people all the time.

The producers of photoplays are nearly all keen business men who are operating in syndicates. Many of these men are superior to those conducting the theatrical syndicates in artistic appreciation, and others are liberal in engaging talent. The best of them have done finer and therefore more immediately profitable things on the screen than theatrical managers have done on the stage. Their scope of action is wider, their audience is to be counted in millions rather than in thousands, and that they have been progressive is shown by the tremendous advance in photoplay quality so noticeable in the last twelve months. They were not afraid of censorship.

"I am willing to turn out the best pictures brains and money can produce when there is a demand for them," said one of the largest producers in reference to this subject. The false conclusion implied was that the people were not ready for photoplays of superior character. I always resent an implication that there is a lack of intelligence on the part of the audience, though I am fully aware of the common impression that the poor, the industrious, the overworked members of the community, constitute an ignorant class, but that is no reason why we should fill their minds with false ideas. If a certain class of people now kept in poverty and toil by lack of knowledge is given to spending hard-earned nickles and dimes at the little shows, is that any reason why pictures should be used to lower or corrupt them?

I am getting at the false reasoning in this matter, and I may have to shock some who have made no study of humble moving picture audiences when I assert that I have yet to find a lack of ability to appreciate what was beautiful, what was inspiring, what was instructive among the poorest of our working people, but, to the contrary, I have found an eagerness to fill the vacant places in their defective knowledge with whatever was true and tending to lift them above their condition. I asked the man who said he would respond to the demand for better pictures why he had not actually done so.

Driven from point to point, he admitted that he was better able to put out a higher quality of photodrama because of what he had learned in the trying. He acknowledged that the superior performance was more remunerative in the end. He granted that criticism had been of undoubted value, and he finally conceded that it was poor business policy for a firm to expend time and money on a release which might not pass the constituted Board of Censorship. By piecemeal a confession was extracted that censorship had accomplished a purpose that might not have been wholly in the minds of those who inaugurated it—it established the whole business on a higher plane and a more profitable basis.

False conclusions drawn from little knowledge of the subject were then the principal guide to action at the outset and error is very persistent about "what the people want." A great deal of rot is still being shown on the screen for which profound apologies are due, but which do not come under regulations for suppressing the unfit. Some of it is comparatively harmless, strained attempts to get a hand or a laugh; much of it is obviously cheap, and still more of it displays wearisome repetition of worn out themes, but there is improvement enough to rouse high hopes for the future.

Without that improvement, without those achievements in screen presentation which attempt to keep pace with the times, the entire New Art would have suffered and the pockets of those depending on it in proportion. I sound this note of appreciation of what has been done by the Board of Censorship because it has been a profitless and almost thankless undertaking. The worst strictures that have been cast come directly from beneficiaries. There is no such thing as censorship in this matter for its own sake—it is founded on a broad and humanitarian basis by generous men and women, who are engaged in breaking down the artificial inequalities of society.

Every once in a while some man or woman shoots up a rocket on the subject of censorship, but it is only brilliant for a fleeting instant, not at all illuminating so far as permanent problems are concerned. A remedy for censorship of all kinds, one which might exert a powerful influence for the betterment of moving pictures, one which would materially increase the pleasure and the profit of moving picture audiences, would be a united demand for screen presentations—bright, entertaining, instructive, softening in variety—from the exhibitors themselves. The pictures would then be more popular and still greater agents of civilization.

Yankee Films Abroad.

An Interesting Budget of Information on Picture Conditions In Great Britain.

Written on the Spot by W. Stephen Bush.

If you want to realize what can be done with American-made films, do not fail to come to London. If you happen to be an exhibitor it might pay you to come and see, and then go back and put your experience into dollars and cents.

There are, indeed, in some of the very cheap sections in the East End, moving picture theaters where they charge as low as 1d. (2 cents) and 2d. (4 cents), but in the West End the prevailing price of admission is 6d. (12 cents) ranging upwards to as high as 10/6d. (2 dollars 62 cents). English capital which is hopelessly shy about supporting any film producing enterprise, is remarkably eager to invest in moving picture theaters or "cinemas" as they are called over here. The concrete and immediate strongly appeal to the British mind. While through the lack of financial support, English film making enterprises languish like an exotic plant on unfriendly soil, the city is dotted with modern superb moving picture theaters. I will not attempt on such short acquaintance as I have, to theorize about this, and to explain why the London exhibitors are generally prosperous and the British manufacturers generally poor, while the renters too are coming in for some of the cream. Perhaps the open market has something to do with this. Perhaps the liberal patronage of the London public may help to explain it, and perhaps it is the superior method of presentation or perhaps it is due to a combination of all these factors.

In the West End Cinema, where I attended a moderately good entertainment last evening, consisting of six reels, the scale of prices was as follows:

Orchestra Seats in the Rear	50 cents.
" " · nearer the curtain	25 "
Second Balcony	25, 35 and 50 cents.
First Balcony	60 and 75 cents.
Private Boxes	$2.60.

At 10 o'clock the house was crowded. The seating capacity was only 800, but that is good enough with such a scale of prices. The furnishings were of a high order throughout. There was an invisible orchestra, which played music suitable to the pictures. Please take that word "suitable" in its actual, and not in its American or Pickwickian sense. No doubt the music had been carefully rehearsed, as it invariably struck home at the psychological moments. I have a painful recollection of an orchestra in New York engaged in an effort to follow the pictures with suitable music, and frequently coming to a dead stop at precisely the wrong moment, closing, for instance, with a crashing finale just a minute before the climax of the play on the screen. The highest price in the New York theater was 15 cents. I will leave it to the reader to draw his own conclusions. I characterized the program as moderately good, and barring the luxurious surroundings, the splendid music and the perfect management. I have seen moving picture entertainments at home a grade better than this, and charging no more than 10 cents. Again I leave the reader to draw his own conclusions which lie on the surface.

It is evident to even the inexpert eye that the exhibitor has a decided say in the moving picture industry hereabouts. Both the renter and the manufacturer respectfully consult his wishes. The progressive London exhibitor with possibly two or more theaters has his "viewers" or "selectors" scouting about projection rooms, and when the "viewers" or "selectors" commend something to the exhibitor, the latter suggests to the renter the purchase of the film, and as a rule the renter accepts the suggestion and acts upon it. The exhibitor's freedom in the selection of his program is absolute, and because he is able to grade his service according to the character, and demands of his audience, he gets the crowd, whether he is in a fine residential section or in a rougher neighborhood, or in a location where he depends on the transient trade.

Mr. Seymour Hodges, the Manager of the Marble Arch theater, admittedly one of the finest in England, was quite emphatic on the subject. "If," said Mr. Hodges who had had theatrical experience on our side, "we had to depend for our supply of film on just one single group of manufacturers we would soon suffer. The present arrangement enables us to select just what we think our patrons like best." The splendid crowd in the Marble Arch theater at 10 o'clock p. m. seemed to indicate that this particular exhibitor at least knew the tastes of his audience. Music, projection, management worked co-operatively toward absolute perfection, nor were there any first runs. The backbone of the particular program was an Edison subject, which an American friend at my elbow, had seen at St. Louis three months ago, and which must have been in England at least a week or two. If the American film of today continues to hold an easy supremacy over the rest, it is due largely to the good judgment of the British exhibitor. There are not a few somewhat irresponsible men in the exhibiting business here, especially in the City of London, who have a small place, and can never under any circumstances, see one inch further than the entrance to their theater. But for them, the exhibitors organization in this country, would be a deal stronger than it is. These men, however, care nothing about the common weal and are stumbling blocks in the path of progress. The larger exhibitors, on the contrary, are keenly alive to the fact that harmony and co-operation make them strong and powerful, and they are well united. The result is, that they have a pretty free hand in the selection of their programs, and I think that helps to explain their success and prosperity. But a short time ago, there happened to be a short and sharp conflict of interest between the exhibitors and renters on the one hand, and certain manufacturing interests on the other. No attempt was made by any of the parties to the conflict to resort to "steam-roller" methods, there were amicable conferences, and a final agreement to disagree on certain matters and to re-unite on others. The liberty of the exhibitor to arrange his own program as long as he pays for it, remains in full force and vigor.

The only films which seem to appeal to the British public are the products of either purely American or partly American films. It is a high compliment to American-made films that they are hardly ever objected to by the Censor. The very fact that they are of American origin seems to create a presumption in their favor. I have seen a few French and German films, which would drag down almost any program to either the level of licentiousness or stupidity. The unadultered or rather unpurified French products are apt to rouse the ire of the Censor, while the ordinary German melodramatic films, mostly in two or three reels, have value only as an unfailing antidote for insomnia.

I have heard and read a whole lot about the superior projection in the capitals of Europe, and as far as London is concerned I have seen much actual proof of it. Projection varies here too, some of it is good, some of it indifferent, and some of it awfully bad, but the average is high. The trade conditions are far more settled here than they are on the other side of the water. There are no daily changes of programs here. Programs are changed twice or three times weekly, and this applies to the cheap as well as the expensive theaters.

It is a pleasure to relate that the educational film is doing well here in London. I have just had a long talk with Mr. Chas. Urban of the Kineto Co. Mr. Urban who is known on both sides of the water as one of the earliest pioneers in the educational field. He has retired from the Urban Trading Co., and is devoting all his energies to Kinemacolor, and educational kinematography both in natural colors and in black and white. I learned from him that the London County Council have had a plan of kinematographic instruction under consideration for some time. They wanted to add a kinematographic course of instruction to the program of the Polytechnic schools and after viewing a large variety of films submitted by the different manufacturers they arrived at the conclusion that the Kinemacolor would probably lend itself best to moving picture instruction. They have just completed an agreement with Mr. Urban, which provides for a trial of educational films extending over a period of six weeks. The conditions and details are as follows: At each one of the six Polytechnics (industrial schools, teaching, Carpentry, Machinery, Telegraphy, etc.) there are to be four exhibitions per day, each lasting from 45 to 50 minutes, each of these exhibitions are to be attended by classes of 1000. This means that there will be an attendance of 4000 children per day, or 20,000 per week or 120,000 for the entire period of the experiment. Children of all grades will be asked to attend these exhibitions, and the teachers intend to ascertain the value of kinematographic instruction by carefully questioning each child. If the results thus obtained are satisfactory, machines are to be installed at once. There is no question that this would then be the entering wedge for a general kinematographic course of instruction in all the schools of England, both public and private.

Mr. Urban tells me that he had a most interesting visitor in the person of a gentleman named Margunrien, who was authorized by the Greek Minister of Education to inquire in London as to the supply of educational films. He brought with him a letter of authorization, which I think will often be quoted by the future historian of kinematographic education. The document sets forth the fact that there are 4000 schools in the Kingdom of Greece, and that the Greek Minister of Education desires to make a thorough test of the moving picture as a means of teaching the young mind. It goes on to state that the Minister does not know how much of a supply there is on hand at the present time and he assures Mr. Urban that he will be able to absorb and utilize almost any supply that may be on hand at this moment. The Greek representative has had numerous interviews both with Mr. Urban and his General Manager, Mr. Hickey, and the probabilities point to a large order of machines and films. Mr. Urban will construct a special model of machine, which will generate its own electricity, and take a standard size of film. It seems probable then, that Greece, the mother of education, will be the first to make practical and general use of the new invention in schools of the modern Kingdom. Mr. Hickey will leave for our side with a large supply of black and white educational films on May 6th.

Mr. Urban was in a reminiscent mood, as he talked and recalled the early days of kinematography, here and in America. He spoke with some feeling of a memorable trip he made to our side of the water in the winter of 1910. He came with hopes running high, banking, as he said, on promises, which were not fulfilled. He spoke in grateful words of the assistance and encouragement which the late founder of the Moving Picture World extended to him. Mr. Urban has now been in London for 18 years and his enthusiasm in the cause of education still remains unabated. He is firm in the belief that eventually the moving picture as an educator will in importance far surpass the moving picture as a form of amusement.

Passing through Cecil Court, otherwise known as "Flicker Alley," I noticed the sign of "Warner Feature Film Co.," I walked in and found Sam Warner in full charge. He has been here for about one month, and has had a busy time of it familiarizing himself with conditions, and with the various denominations of British currency. He thinks this is an ideal market for an enterprising American picture man and he is going at full speed all the time. He is the latest American invader.

ANOTHER BOY LOST.

On April 10th, Charles Allen Reed, a boy 15 years old, about five feet tall, weighing about 75 to 80 lbs., light blue eyes, rather small face, thick lips, dark hair combed straight back over his head, left home. For some time prior to his leaving, he had been endeavoring to write some photoplays, and had completed one called "The Wreckers." He has tried to sell a number of plays. Nothing has been heard from him since he left home. We believe he will try to sell some plays, and secure a position as an actor with some concern. Should he write, in such communication, he might sign some other name, but he is a very poor writer. He might also mention this play, "The Wreckers." Should he call or communicate with any firm, if it will wire collect to 11435 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, all expenses will be paid, together with a reasonable reward for any services which may be rendered.

NEW YORK CITY EXHIBITORS.

Hold Meeting and Appoint Committee on Grievances—Cuvillier Bill Killed.

A special meeting of the New York City Exhibitors' Association, called for the purpose of considering the matter of quality and price of service, was held at the association headquarters, 136 Third Avenue, on Wednesday night, April 30. About two hundred exhibitors were present and a lively interest in the subject under discussion was shown. President Trigger upon calling the meeting to order stated that they were here for the purpose of hearing any complaints of unfair treatment which members of the association might have received at the hands of the exchanges, and a committee was appointed to go to headquarters to straighten out the matter. There were no very serious complaints developed at the meeting, so President Trigger appointed a grievance committee consisting of J. A. Koerpel, chairman; Siegmund Seckel, L. A. Ochs, F. Goldfarb, M. Needle and H. Huber, to which further complaints are to be submitted in writing.

Cuvillier Bill Killed.

President Trigger announced that the Cuvillier bill, which was backed by the Children's Society and provided that the moving picture shows should be taken out of the hands of the Mayor's License Bureau and put in charge of the police department, under the same regulations which govern the dramatic houses, with a license fee of $500 per annum, has been killed in Assembly. Superintendent Walsh, of the Children's Society, was the only person appearing at the hearing in favor of the bill and he gravely announced to the committee that if the bill was passed and the picture theaters placed in charge of the police department, the children of New York would then be fully protected for all time. Attorney Rogers appeared for the exhibitors and informed the committee that the only thing which the bill would do would be to raise a moving picture theater license to $500 a year. The bill was subsequently killed by a large majority. It was reported that other legislation favorable to the exhibitors was in a fair way of being passed.

Attorney Rogers delivered a timely warning to the exhibitors on the subject of the standee law. He said that there was only one thing to do and that was to obey the law to the limit. He warned the exhibitors that he had gone about as far as he could in securing lenient action from the judges of Special Sessions before whom these cases were tried, and that he looked for a prison sentence for somebody very shortly if the violations continue to occur. Several new members were added to the rolls and the meeting adjourned at 2 a. m.

LEON GAUMONT COMING TO NEW YORK.

Mr. Leon Gaumont, head of the Gaumont Company of Paris, is expected to arrive in New York on May 10. Mr. Gaumont comes prepared to give a demonstration of the Gaumont talking pictures and the Chrono-chrome of colored pictures.

"BRONCHO BILLY" BUILDING NEW THEATER.

The "San Francisco Examiner," a daily published on the Pacific Coast, some time ago printed an architect's drawing and particulars concerning the proposed playhouse to be erected by G. M. Anderson (Broncho Billy), of the Essanay Manufacturing Company. From the data published in the Western daily, the house is to cost $150,000 and will be known as the "Winter Garden." It is to be built on the site of the old Alcazar Theater on O'Farrel Street, between Stockton and Powell Streets, San Francisco. It will have a seating capacity of 1,600. Exterior and interior decorations will be of Spanish renaissance, the interior being treated with mural paintings. The indirect lighting system will be used. The stage will be one of the largest in the city, with a proscenium opening 30 by 38 feet.

"In the Long Ago" (Selig)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

IT is a delightful treat to find a photoplay of Indian life so far removed from the beaten track as that of "In the Long Ago," by one of Selig's Western companies. Poetic in conception and artistic in production, this photoplay will, doubtless, be welcomed by all who like to get a glimpse of the primitive, away back in the dim past—a glimpse that reveals the gentler emotions as well as the fiercer instincts of the red man. There is strife in it, but mastery is gained by the pitting of strength against strength, not by the aid of weapons; and there is love in it, of the kind that nature smiled on when men and women found their mates in the wildwood, while the songs of birds and the splash of waterfall added to the sweet harmony of their hearts.

This one reel film was made under the direction of Colin Campbell, and the scenario was written by Lanier Bartlett. The latter has made a novel departure at the close by using the old Indian legend of thousands of years ago to bring to a happy ending the courtship of two lovers of the present day. The antiquary's discovery of the wind instrument made from the thigh bone of an Indian chief—the same that was used by the Indian lover of the story to rouse his sweetheart from the deathlike lethargy into which she had been placed by the medicine man of the tribe—and the successful use of it by the modern lover to bring his capricious sweetheart to his side furnish a happy comedy conceit.

Scene from "In the Long Ago" (Selig).

Wheeler Oakman appears in the roles of the Indian lover and the modern lover. The first affords him opportunity for strong characterization, of which he takes due advantage. Miss Bessie Eyton is seen as the Indian maiden and the modern sweetheart. In the part of Starlight Miss Eyton measures up to the requirements by the display of fine ability. Mr. Santschi is strong as the Indian warrior, the rival for Starlight's hand. Frank Clark does effective work in the roles of Starlight's father and the father of the modern girl, and Harry W. Otto is acceptable as the medicine man.

Dreamer, the hero of the story, seeks the solitude of the forest and the sea shore. He loves music and the beauties of nature. His beloved reed pipe is always with him, and he imitates the notes of the song birds and the moan of the sea. The members of his tribe despise him; for they look upon him as the soft-handed one, who has no love for battle or the chase. But Starlight, the only daughter of the chief of the tribe, loves him. Her father tries to force her to wed a visiting chief, but Starlight refuses.

The stranger chief induces the medicine man to place Starlight in a deep sleep. Soon afterwards he meets Dreamer and is killed in conflict. Dreamer then demands Starlight from her father and rushes off to find her. He comes upon her in the cave of the medicine man, but cannot arouse her. The medicine man also attempts to awaken her and fails. Then she is mourned by her father and the tribe as one who is dead.

Scene from "In the Long Ago" (Selig).

Dreamer then remembers an old Indian legend about a wonderful wind pipe, made from the thigh bone of a great chief. Notes from it, so the legend ran, would bring back the dead to life. After great effort he succeeds in finding the instrument, and restores Starlight to life.

The release date is May 15.

BOOMING IN AUSTRALIA.

Mr. J. E. Smith, Inspector of Theaters and Public Entertainments, Adelaide, South Australia, advises in a recent letter that the moving picture business is booming in his country. The numerous picture theaters are incapable of accommodating the numbers of people desiring to attend them. As a consequence, several large and up-to-date theaters are now in course of erection, and will be opened within the next few months.

A Child of War.

Two-Reel Broncho.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS pathetic and humanizing story is in line with fine work preceding it so far as presenting the destructive forces of war in contrast with the creative ones of peace is concerned, with an added charm in the adventures of a little girl who is plunged into the midst of the death-dealing action. A touching incident projects her between the lines of blue and grey at a time when bullets are screaming and cannons vomiting flame—she rescues her doll.

Scene from "A Child of War" (Broncho).

Mildred is the heart link between a sturdy blacksmith named Judson and his wife, their only child and a fascinating personality. Judson is living in the danger zone when he decides to be one of those responding to Lincoln's second call for troops. He leaves his work and his family, just as loyal men must do in time of stress and storm, and becomes a private in the Union army, but there is an added stimulus—the troops in grey are within striking distance of his home.

The parting scenes between the blacksmith and his wife are unusually affecting, due largely to the exceptional acting of the lady who plays the lead, whose name has not been furnished. She displays striking capability throughout the play, though I do not recall having seen her face before on the screen. The little girl, Mildred, does all that might be expected of a child under the circumstances—she knows nothing of patriotism and glory—and her opportunities come later on. All three leads are consistent performers.

Scene from "A Child of War" (Broncho).

When the tide of battle rises to the village where the blacksmith's family lives the inhabitants flee on foot and in all sorts of vehicles with whatever valuables they can carry. Mildred is seated in the rear of a wagon when she drops her doll, and she climbs out to recover it. She stands gazing at the stream of refugees passing her for a while, then wanders away and is lost in neighboring woods, where she is exposed to the fire of both armies.

She wanders on and on, hugging her doll close to her breast, while the ravages of war are going on all around her. She screams when shells explode near her and runs from them in horror, but she escapes uninjured until nightfall. She is not far away from the Union lines when the soldiers in blue stack their arms and light their camp fires, and her movements are noticed by one of the pickets—her own father. He challenges; receives no answer and fires. He is overwhelmed with grief on finding that he has severely wounded his precious little girl and deserts his post to carry her to his own house.

His wife has returned in search of her little one and lies prostrated with grief over her loss. There is an affecting scene when the three are brought together, but other sentinels have discovered the absence of Judson, have reported him as missing from post, and a squad has been sent to capture him at his home. He is placed under arrest, tried by drum head court martial and sentenced to be shot at sunrise. So much for the liberty of him who sacrifices all that he holds dear for the sake of liberty. He is brought to a realization during his brief imprisonment that patriotism counts for so little in the end that he had better have stuck to his forge and his family.

Now comes little Mildred's opportunity. She and her invalid mother go to the tent of the officer in command to plead for the life of the man who yielded to God-given instincts in saving his child at the risk of leaving his post unguarded. The rules of war are not those of compassion, and the weak creatures are not permitted to enter, but the child takes the law into her own hands and slips by the sentry. Her appeal in behalf of her father is the high point in the drama, and it is successful in every sense of the word. The stern martinet refuses with grim determination until the child's gentle presence recalls a parting scene at his own home, when he gradually relents. The prisoner is set free and restored to his family. In artistic conclusion—in relief from the conventional—the commanding officer is seen in his tent absorbed in his work when he receives a letter and a package from Mildred. The latter contains her doll. The note says, "I am sending you my best doll because you were so kind to daddy. When he is through fighting, please send him home."

TRIPLE SHOW ALL IN ONE.

Lions, Tigers and Monkeys, are Some Actors at the Vitagraph Studios.

No one has ever attended a three-ring circus without going away from the performance feeling decidedly cross-eyed. It is a physical impossibility to watch so many wonderful things being done at the same time, without wishing that you had more time to see each part of the performance separately that you might fully enjoy it. Just at this time, the Vitagraph studios resemble a combination of three distinct shows, all in one; theater, circus and menagerie.

Just imagine, if you can, seventy players and a dozen directors producing dramas and comedies, while in another studio, the lions, tigers, boars and wildcats and monkeys are being put through their several stunts incidental to their parts in the thrilling plays being staged in which they predominate and share honors with the brave players who venture into the arena with them. There is one surprise, however, which is kept in store for some of the thespians who are anxious to show their nerve in these marvellous animal pictures. The supreme test will come when the cobra de capellas, rattlers and the moccasins, crawl forth from their cages, to the surprise of actors and audiences.

The handling of these denizens of the forest is no small question and no inconsiderable item of finesse and finance. Two hundred pounds of prime Beef is consumed daily by these live-stock members of the Vitagraph corps of actors. The vegetarians of the company are barely satisfied with two wagon loads of grain and other edibles suitable to their tastes, in the distribution of which a number of keepers are kept busy attending to their wants. At times, one would think pandemonium had been let loose. The shouting of directors, the roar of the lions, tigers, and bears, combined with the shrieks of the monkeys, make the studio's walls tremble and the settings vibrate so perceptibly that it is necessary to stop turning the cameras until the unreasonable beasts are quieted by the sheer exhaustion of their own efforts.

The meaning of all this trouble and expense will be made perfectly clear in the dramatic masterpieces and the roaring comedies that will be released and shown upon the screens in the near future. The Vitagraph Company will be repaid for their indefatigable labors by the responsive appreciation of the moving picture public, with whom it has established itself as a prime favorite.

"Carmen"

Three-Reel Thanhouser.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Thanhouser version of this much produced story may be better than any of those preceding it, but I am not prepared to make comparisons, not having seen the others. Two features of it were delightful to me, and they will probably meet with general approval—the exquisite photography and the fine acting of Marguerite Snow in the title role. All other members of the cast were good, with one exception, the exteriors are chosen with excellent taste, the costumes are elaborate and costly, and one of the interiors—that associated with the toreador's first appearance—is a gem.

I am informed that this version is taken from the famous book of the same name by Prosper Merimee, and here is where I may be seriously at fault. The author was a brilliant literary critic, a great historian, a famous archaeologist and wrote a veritable masterpiece in "Colomba," but the particular story we are dealing with first attracted public attention to any large extent in the libretto of Meilhac and Halevy, made renowned by Bizet's music. The libretto was admirably suited to purposes of grand opera because it afforded opportunity for Bizet's style of composition and for gorgeous costume display.

Scene from "Carmen" (Thanhouser).

Scene from "Carmen" (Thanhouser).

Without the music there is little left but the chance for costume display—the theme is worn threadbare—and Thanhouser directors have gone to great pains in the matter of beauty. They have even gone to extremes. We can stand for perfectly clean Gypsies in the silks and satins of a masquerade ball, but when Mercedes steps out of a hovel—this is an exterior in broad sunlight—with two Marguerite braids of hemp and her pretty feet encased in silk hosiery and satin slippers with rhinestone buckles, the incongruity becomes overwhelming. The actress who attempted this role—attempt is the best that can be said for her impersonation—possibly had a "Tango" on hand for the evening and did not consider it necessary to dress her tootsies to suit her part.

I should have given her part to a girl who flashed on the scene for a brief instant and filled the screen while she was there although she was only one of a group. I took the trouble to inquire about this member of the company who only came into view for a second and learned that her name was, and still is, "Billings." She will probably remedy that fault before she cuts all of her teeth, for she has what I am compelled to designate, for the lack of a better expression, "Picture Personality," a valuable asset for a photoplayer.

I am accused of a bias for original plays, but please consider how much attention is given to discovering what is obvious and how millions of amusement seekers are being enfranchised from what is old and stale by what is new and inspiring in present improvement and radiant hopes for the future, eager to enjoy themselves at the little theaters according to the development of the period. You cannot quench that demand by repetition of what has done service a quarter of a century ago. Our lives are becoming more and more full of meaning and purpose, and whatever mirrors life as we know it rings true. If I have a bias for original productions, so have you, and so has nearly every intelligent exhibitor in the land. This new art is destined to appeal to the millions now in a state of progression who are not afflicted with minds that are primitive, and no one who respects and loves the art and sincerely desires to see it established in national esteem on sane and safe grounds is without that bias which I am accused of having, a bias intended to increase the popularity and influence of moving pictures all over the world.

A "CHANCE DAY" PICTURE.

Selig Secures Exclusive Privilege to Take Big Chicago Baseball Gala Day.

The Selig Polyscope Company has completed arrangements whereby, weather permitting, they will secure exclusive motion pictures of the much heralded gala celebration in honor of Frank Chance's first Chicago appearance as a member of the American League Ball Club. On May 17th, the "Peerless Leader" will bring his New York Highlanders to Chicago. As Frank Chance is probably the most popular idol in organized baseball today, it is needless to say that the reception which will be accorded him by his Chicago friends will make a riot look like a pink tea. The committee in charge of arrangements have planned many original surprises for the occasion.

Probably the most unique and elaborate automobile parade ever organized in Chicago will escort Chance to the White Sox Park. In this parade will be over 1000 touring cars, a full band of sixty pieces, several hundred mounted police, squads of motorcycle escorts, and other attractions too numerous to mention. Intermingled in the parade will be a number of male quartettes who will sing appropriate songs especially written for the occasion. Each person in the parade will wear "Frank Chance Day" badges, and carry a small American flag.

At the park, before, during, and after the game, the bands will play, quartettes will sing, well known vaudeville players will entertain and the huge ball park will take on the appearance of a mammoth circus.

Weather permitting, Selig camera men will secure interesting scenes of the parade, the game and the celebration at the park.

This film will be released as a special shortly after May 17th.

WINNIFRED GREENWOOD GETS STAGE FRIGHT.

Although Winnifred Greenwood, one of the most popular leading women with the Selig organization, was "born in a dressing room trunk," as the saying goes, and led her own stock organization for many years, and played hundreds of stage heroines during her successful career, she has never forgotten how to blush and is still subject to stage fright. A week ago she happened to be an innocent spectator at the Parkway Theater, in Chicago, where the Selig pictorial war play of "Pauline Cushman" was the feature. Manager Nelson recognized her and led her reluctantly to the stage where she was introduced to the crowded house as the woman who made the shadow of the celebrity so vital and fascinating. There were vociferous calls for "speech, speech." This was something new to Miss Greenwood. All at once the heroine had three varieties of stage chill, including an attack of "tongue-tiedness." She finally managed, however, to stammer her thanks and then dodged a shower of boquets, that admiring women in the audience heroically and impetuously sacrificed to honor the actress who so splendidly portrayed the heroine in the story had earned the singular distinction of being made a Major for gallantry in the great Civil War.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

KENTUCKY CONVENTION.

Interesting Meeting of Blue Grass Exhibitors at Louisville—Officers Elected.

WHILE the second annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kentucky, held in Louisville, April 23, at the Seelbach Hotel, was not largely attended, the session may be considered as highly successful from every other standpoint. Much enthusiasm was manifested, indicating that a healthy growth will continue in the organization; a full set of new officers, as well as delegates to the convention of the national organization, was elected, and the occasion was made still more notable by the presence and encouragement of National President M. A. Neff, of Cincinnati, O., who addressed the convention.

The set program, arranged by an entertainment committee consisting of L. J. Dittmar, Max L. Simons, and H. L. Strube, representing the Louisville exhibitors, was as follows: Meeting at the Red Room of the Seelbach Hotel at noon; routine business and election of officers; luncheon and afternoon session, followed by dinner at the hotel; evening at B. F. Keith's vaudeville theater, with the special object of viewing the "talking pictures" which are a weekly feature at that house; Dutch lunch in the evening at the Seelbach.

This program was followed out from beginning to end, many of the exhibitors adding a further feature by remaining over to see the opening ball game on the following day between the Louisville and Kansas City Clubs of the American Association.

The convention was called to order by President J. H. Stamper, Jr., of Lexington, Ky., who presided over the conduct of the business which followed. One of the motions carried was that indicating the sense of the convention that members of all local associations should be requested to join the state organization, in order that the larger body might be increased in numbers and strengthened in the handling of the work which it will necessarily have to do.

The members present tendered a rising vote of thanks to the retiring officers for the splendid work which they have done during what has practically been the initial year of the organization, and which was correspondingly trying. Those so honored were President Stamper, Vice-President L. J. Dittmar, of Louisville, Second Vice-President Sherman Arns, of Maysville, and Secretary L. H. Ramsey, of Lexington.

The new officers elected were as follows: President, L. J. Dittmar, of Louisville; first Vice-President, George A. Bleich, of Owensboro; second Vice-President, J. J. Ciarlo, of Newport; Secretary, Fred J. Dolle, of Louisville; treasurer, Max L. Simons, of Louisville. These officers ex officio constitute the board of directors, with two more members added by a vote of the convention. For the ensuing year these additional members will be two of the retiring officers, J. H. Stamper, Jr., and L. H. Ramsey.

It was voted to hold the next session of the organization at Owensboro, Ky., on the same date in 1914, subject to change both as to place and date by the board of directors. The next meeting of that body will be held at Estill Springs, Ky., on July 23, at which time action will be taken on this and other matters which may come before it.

Orine Parker, of Covington, National vice-president for Kentucky, was one of those unfortunately unable to be present at the convention, but he was unanimously re-elected as a testimony to his good work in that capacity.

An important measure adopted by the convention was a motion to the effect that the membership fee in the organization be increased from $5 to $15, the increase taking effect after the October directors' meeting. This date was fixed upon in order to give those who have not yet affiliated with the state body an opportunity to do so before the increase takes effect. The growing strength of the League, however, and the generally prosperous condition of the moving picture business, with the desirability of having the treasury in good condition, were felt to be good reasons for the step taken; and the several months which will elapse before the change goes into force were considered ample to give everybody a chance to get in under the lower fee.

The following committees were appointed:

Legislative: J. C. Taylor, of Frankfort; J. J. Ciarlo, Newport; J. H. Stamper, Lexington; Sherman Arns, Maysville; Georga A. Bleich, Owensboro.

Grievance: A. B. Arnett, Midway; Clyde Gaines, Irvine; H. B. Strube, Louisville.

The committee on by-laws was not appointed as a separate body, but, it was decided, is to be composed of the delegates and alternates attending the national convention at New York in July, with a view to enabling them to harmonize the by-laws of the Kentucky League with those of the national body. The delegates elected were L. H. Ramsey, of Lexington; A. B. Arnett, of Midway; Carl Tarvin, of Dayton; L. J. Dittmar, of Louisville; Joseph J. Ciarlo, of Newport; and H. B. Strube, of Louisville; George A. Bleich, Joseph L. Steurle, B. D. Griffith, Fred J. Dolle, J. M. Wentsell, and Clarence Bloomfield being elected as alternates, in case of the inability of any of the delegates to attend. All of the principals elected, however, indicated their intention of attending the national convention, and it is at least certain that there will be six delegates representing the Blue Grass State.

President Neff was called upon for an address at the supper in the evening, which was heard by the members with deep attention and interest. He stated that there are at this time 38 state organizations affiliated with the National League, while last year there were only seventeen or eighteen; and that he expected to see 40 states represented at New York in July. He related several instances indicating the good results brought about by organization in producing harmony and good feeling among exhibitors; and his closing remarks, which were enthusiastically applauded, indicate the tenor of his address and express the feelings of the Kentucky exhibitors:

"You are destined to be one of the greatest powers that ever existed in Kentucky, for the good of the state and of the public at large. You are engaged in the greatest business in the world today; and it is only in its infancy. You have a great organization, and a great opportunity, and I am confident that you will realize it to the fullest."

CANADIAN CENSORSHIP BILL.

Full Text of the Law Passed for British Columbia—Newspaperman Appointed Chief Censor—Square Deal Expected.

The government of the Province of British Columbia has passed a law establishing a Board of Censorship of theaters and motion pictures, which body will assume its duties on May 1, 1913. C. L. Gordon, a newspaperman of considerable experience, has been appointed chief censor, with authority to appoint his assistants. Concerning the matter, W. E. Morphy, of Vancouver, B. C., writes that the British Columbia Exhibitors' Association called a meeting at which Mr. Gordon was invited to be present. There was a mutual exchange of ideas on the subject of censorship and the exhibitors gained the impression that they would get a fair deal from Mr. Gordon's department.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Morphy the Moving Picture World is able to give its readers the full text of the British Columbia bill.

An Act to Regulate Theaters and Kinematographs.

His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of British Columbia, enacts as follows:

1. This Act may be cited as the "Moving Pictures Act."

2. In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, "Censor" shall mean the official Censor appointed under this Act, and shall include any assistant and assistants to such Censor so appointed.

3. Notwithstanding any law to the contrary, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall have power from time to time to make regulations, similar or different in different localities, or with reference to different classes of buildings, or to different conditions, governing the construction, erection, operation, ventilation, lighting and safety of theaters, halls and other buildings erected or used for places of public resort, entertainment or amusement, in which any kinematograph, moving picture machine or other similar apparatus is used or operated, including inspection and supervision.

4. Notwithstanding any law to the contrary, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall have power from time to time to make regulations governing the use and operation of kinematographs, moving picture machines and other similar apparatus, and prescribing the conditions under which such machines shall be operated, and for prohibiting or regulating films and slides to be exhibited, and prescribing the conditions under and the manner in which all such films shall be kept or stored, and providing also the conditions under which such films shall be exhibited for inspection by the Censor, and fixing the fees to be paid upon such inspection.

5. The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may appoint an officer, to be called the "Censor," together with one or more assistants, who shall hold office during pleasure, and each of whom shall have power to permit the exhibition of or absolutely to prohibit or reject all films or slides which it is proposed to use or exhibit in the Province; and such officers and assistants shall be paid such salary as may be determined from time to time by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

6. All films or stationary picture slides intended to be used in connection with any such kinematograph, moving picture machine or other similar apparatus shall, before being exhibited for public entertainment, be inspected by the Censor, who shall examine and pass upon the fitness for public exhibition of all such films and stationary picture slides, with a view to the prevention of the depiction of scenes of an immoral or obscene nature, the representation of crime or pictures reproducing any brutalizing spectacle, or which indicate or suggest lewdness or indecency, or the infidelity or unfaithfulness of husband or wife, or any other such pictures which he may consider injurious to morals or against the public welfare, or which may offer evil suggestions to the minds of children, or which may be likely to offend the public.

7. After the coming into force of this Act it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to rent, lease or exhibit any such film or slide to any moving picture exhibition or in any moving picture show, or other similar show, anywhere in the Province, unless the same has been approved by the Censor and bears a stamp signifying such approval in such manner that the stamp will show upon the canvas, screen, or any substitute therefor, or is accompanied by a certificate of such approval signed by the Censor, which certificate shall be submitted to the inspection of any person on demand.

8. (1) No person or persons in charge of a theater, hall or other building where shows are given by means of a kinematograph or moving picture machine, and, in the case of a company or society, no manager or other person in charge of the establishment shall receive in any way or permit to attend, at any such show, any child less than fourteen years old unless such child is accompanied by an adult.

(2) This section shall not, unless the Lieutenant-Governor in Council by regulation otherwise provides, apply to children received or permitted to attend such show as aforesaid between the hours of three-thirty o'clock and six o'clock in the afternoon on days upon which the public schools are open in the place where such theater, hall, building or establishment is situate, or before six o'clock in the afternoon on any other day.

9. Any person contravening or committing any breach of or committing any offense against any of the provisions of this Act or any of the regulations of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council passed hereunder, or refusing, omitting or neglecting to fulfill, observe, carry out or perform any duty or obligation by this Act or by such regulations created, prescribed and imposed, shall be liable, upon summary conviction, to a fine of not less than five dollars and not more than three hundred dollars, and a further fine of twenty-five dollars for each day during the time after conviction which such offense continues.

10. The Censor and all officers of the Provincial police, city and municipal police are hereby empowered and directed at any time to enter any theater, hall or other building where moving picture shows are given to ascertain if the provisions of this Act are complied with, and to enforce the provisions of this Act and the regulations passed thereunder.

11. All fees paid and all fines recovered under this Act and the regulations passed thereunder shall be paid to the Minister of Finance and Agriculture for the use of the Province.

12. For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this Act according to their true intent and supplying any deficiency therein, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may make such regulations not inconsistent with the spirit of this Act as may be deemed necessary, advisable or convenient, which shall have the same force and effect as if incorporated herein.

13. This Act shall come into force on a day to be named by the Lieutenant-Governor by his proclamation.

CALL FOR MISSISSIPPI CONVENTION.

A convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Mississippi, State Branch No. 26 of the National League, will be held in Jackson, Miss., on the 8th of May, 1913. The meeting will be called in the Dixie Theater promptly at 2 p. m. At this meeting delegates to the National Convention, to be held in New York in July will be appointed.

Every motion picture Exhibitor in the state is invited and urged to attend this meeting. It matters not what service you use or what your neighbor uses, grab him by the hand and come. All roads lead to Jackson. This league will mean much to the exhibitor who is a member, so, if you are a "live wire," come with us.

A regular "feature" program has been arranged to follow the business meeting, including demonstrations of latest electric effects, orchestrians, pianos, machines, etc., for popularizing picture shows. After this we will "take in" Jackson and wind up with an 11 o'clock Dutch lunch, et al.

This promises to be a history-making occasion in the motion picture circles of Mississippi, so make your arrangements to attend. Remember the date, May 8th.

Very truly yours,
H. A. Carleton, President.
R. H. Redus, Secretary.
Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Mississippi.

It is indeed "A Splendid Scapegrace" that Marc MacDermott has made out of Yancey Goree, O. Henry's familiar character in "A Blackjack Bargainer." There seems to be no limitation to the versatility of MacDermott's work. He is always good in comedy, but he is undoubtedly at his best in character delineation such as he does as Yancey Goree.

IN THE GRIP OF THE FLOOD.

The illustration printed herewith is from a view of the Jewel Theater, Hamilton, Ohio, during the recent flood which worked so much havoc in that town. It is owned by J. H. Bramhall, who writes: "Just coming out of the worst flood that ever struck Ohio, Hamilton is in terrible shape—east, west, north and south nothing but ruin, but the people are brave and are working hard to put the city on its feet. They are, as suggested by the Lubin feature picture, 'Heroes One and All.' My theater is on the highest spot in town, but, like the rest, I was battered, but I am coming out. I get a ray of sunshine every Monday—the Moving Picture World."

CONVENTIONS SCHEDULED.

Kansas State Convention—At the National Hotel, Topeka, June 2nd and 3rd.

Missouri State Convention—At Springfield, June 10th and 11th.

Iowa State Convention—At the Auditorium, Des Moines, May 13th and 14th.

Pennsylvania State Convention—At Philadelphia, May 27th and 28th.

Maryland State Convention—At Baltimore, June 3rd and 4th.

Mississippi State Convention—At Jackson, May 8th.

Delaware State Convention—At DuPont Hotel, Wilmington, May 26th.

Nebraska State Convention—At Paxton Hotel, Omaha, May 8th and 9th.

Tennessee State Convention—May 17; place not given.

Texas State Convention—At Dallas, May 28 and 29.

PRESIDENT NEFF APPOINTS RELIEF FUND COMMITTEE.

A committee to distribute the funds for the relief of the picture men suffering loss from the floods in Ohio and Indiana has been appointed by President Neff. It will consist of himself, Secretary Christenson, J. J. Reider of Jackson, Mich., F. J. Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Ind., and representatives of each of the trade papers.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

IT has been discovered that a bill has been recently introduced in the lower house at Springfield, this state, for the creation of a State board of censors, for moving pictures in Illinois. About 1000 bills have already been introduced during the present session, and the bill in question will be read and discussed in its turn—when, at the present writing, is not known.

It is understood that A. M. Gollas, owner of the Jefferson Theater, on the South side, and a member of Illinois State Branch No 2, of the M. P. E. L. of America, has been in Springfield recently in the interests of the bill; but, whether as a representative of the League or not it has not been divulged. Indeed, he is credited with being the father of the bill.

On such an important question, in which every department of the moving picture industry is vitally interested, it is surely due manufacturers, exchanges and exhibitors generally, throughout the state, that wide publicity should be given the nature of the measure now awaiting reading and discussion. It might also relieve Mr. Gollas of any suspicion that might hereafter attach to him of being at present an aspirant for membership on the state censorship board which it is sought to create.

These state boards of censorship of moving pictures must be kept strictly outside the pale of politics. Once in that whirlpool of mingled interests, censorship will become a mockery, and the progress of the moving picture will be seriously menaced. There is too much at stake to permit small men and small measures to retard that progress.

I can write nothing more pertinent to the point at issue than the editorial paragraph which appeared on page 463, in the issue of the Moving Picture World, dated May 3, and which is herewith given:

"The Moving Picture World is inclined to the conclusion that where the exhibitor has become, or appears to be, sponsor for official censorship, he is acting upon a mistaken conception of the attitude of the public toward motion pictures or has been deceived as to the true state of affairs and has thus been induced to invoke the assistance of political power that is certain to prove more troublesome and burdensome in the end than local censorship, which is, in the main, an imaginary menace. In the instances where censorship laws have been forced upon the trade the fine hand of the politician is plainly discernible seeking to provide a lucrative position for some henchman. Reference to the provisions of such acts as have been printed in these columns prove this contention. With that evidence at hand The Moving Picture World feels justified in branding every attempt at official censorship as a distinct effort to levy political toll upon the motion picture business. In no sense are such efforts calculated or intended to protect the morals of the community; they are, in fact, but the reaching out of the grafting politician for more spoils, and should be fought to the last ditch."

What about the recently proposed bill for a state censor board in Wisconsin?

Let every member of the Wisconsin state branch of the M. P. E. L. of America see to it that the promoters are absolutely unbiased, and that no one of them is seeking position at the expense of the industry.

Valuable Educational Pictures from Central Africa.

Cherry Kearton, the world famous camera man, left London recently on an exploring trip through Central Africa. He accompanied the English naturalist, James Barnes, with whom he will take moving pictures of rare animals, including the bonga, gorilla and okapi. No white man has ever seen the latter animal alive, so a great feat will have been accomplished if Mr. Kearton should get a snap shot of it. The habits of the gorilla in his native haunts will be carefully studied and pictured, and search will be made in the Congo region for a new species between the size of a chimpanzee and the gorilla. An attempt will also be made to secure pictures of the pigmy amphibious elephant, which was recently reported as having been seen in that region.

Of one thing we may rest assured; Mr. Kearton will bring back with him moving pictures of great educational value that will be welcomed throughout the world.

Gary, Ind., Stirred by "A Man in the Making."

It is reported that the superintendent of the great steel mills down in Gary, Ind., is much perturbed by the unwelcome publicity which the film, entitled "A Man in the Making," chances to give one of the members of his family. The film, it is said, tells the story of "the superintendent of the Gary mills," and shows that he has a beautiful daughter of marriageable age and the winning of her hand by a man who has risen from the ranks of factory life.

Now it happens that the superintendent of the Gary mills has a young and beautiful daughter, and it also happens that the film shows real scenes of the great mills. What perplexes the superintendent is how to prevent the workmen and their families from believing that the other scenes are also real. His daughter and her mother are at present visiting in California, oblivious of the rumors prevailing in their home town.

There was no need to speak of the "Gary mills" in this film. It would have done just as well, and would have been more happy, if another name had been chosen. The invasion of the privacy of one's home is not a creditable exploit for the writer of a scenario.

Chicago Council Bars Smut Songs.

The smut song, thank heaven! has been doomed in Chicago. At the council meeting, held Monday night, April 28, an ordinance introduced by Alderman Kerner included a paragraph forbidding the singing of any song the words of which are suggestive of indecency or immorality. This bars the singing of such songs in restaurants, theaters and elsewhere. Some of the smaller picture theaters in the city had also fallen into the habit; now the moving picture has been saved from the filthy association.

Films from Picturesque Cumberland Mountains.

George L. Cox, producer of the Advance Motion Picture Co., this city, will take a company of players to the Cumberland Mountains of Tennessee, in the near future, and will produce five or six one-reel photoplays in the mountains, near Monteagle. The scenario of one of these photoplays has been written by Robert Foran, and is entitled "The Girl of Wonder Cave." This film will be produced in Wonder Cave nearly four miles under ground, and will require special electrical equipment to take the pictures.

Alvin B. Giles, advertising director of the company, advises me that it is the intention to make good pictures from every view point. The company will make split reels, full reels, two reels, three reels and four reels, and in no case will a one reel story be padded into a two reel production.

"The Advance Company is building for the future along commercial, educational and industrial lines and for the production of legitimate photoplays," says Mr. Giles. "We are not worrying about our market, as we feel that good pictures will always find one. With our capital, energy and ability, we believe we can make our own place in the moving picture world.

"We are making at present a 3,000-foot educational picture for the Chicago Railways Company. This picture will be used throughout the United States, and will be shown by the allied street railways' interests. They have been produced for the purpose of training employees in their duties, and also to show the public how they should board and leave surface cars, and how to avoid danger. We have just finished an excellent picture for the safety department of the Rock Island Railroad, and have just begun work in Louisville, Ky., for the Dow Wire & Iron Works. We have also contracted with Clarence and Leslie Dietz, of Cameron Dam, Wis., to produce for them, in three reels, a history of the Dietz family. This will make a very interesting picture, as few citizens of this country have ever been given more publicity than John Dietz in his famous defence of Cameron Dam.

"'The Battle of Flowers' has just been taken in San Antonio. It will show the old historic missions there, scenes of the automobile races and the coronation of the queen of the event. We are the only company making full reels of the events transpiring in San Antonio at this time, including San Jacinto day, and are working under the direction of the Chamber of Commerce and The Sons of Alamo. The latter is an organization of the descendants of the defenders of the Alamo."

Chicago Film Brevities.

John F. Pribyl, personal representative of William N. Selig, left for a pleasure tour of Europe, Saturday, April 26th. He will be gone several weeks.

An executive meeting of the executive committee of the Independent Exchange Co., will be held in the Hotel Knickerbocker, New York City, Friday, May 2nd.

Frank H. Zimmerman, well known in film circles throughout the country and owner of the Zimmerman buffet in the Unity Building, this city, was killed by a Milwaukee electric car, in Winnetka, Sunday, April 27. Mr. Zimmerman died a few minutes after being struck. He failed to hear the motorman's gong, it is said. His numerous friends regret exceedingly his untimely end. He was 47 years old and leaves a wife and two children to mourn his loss. The funeral took place from his home, at 1240 Hood avenue, this city, Wednesday, April 29.

L. E. Goetz, proprietor of the Crystal Theater, Monroe, Wis., called at the World office last week. He stated that he installed, recently, a special Wurlitzer Piano-orchestra, at the cost of $1,600, and that he finds it a very good drawing card. The Crystal uses licensed service and charges 5 and 10 cents admission.

J. G. Conner, manager of the International Feature Film Exchange, St. Louis, Mo., writes that the St. Louis feature film renters held a meeting, April 23, for the purpose of forming a credit association for the state. Those in attendance were: C. Werner, American Feature Film Co., St Louis; M. J. Goldbaum, Warner's Feature Films, St. Louis, and J. G. Conner. The next regular meeting was held April 30, to which all the exchange men of the state were invited.

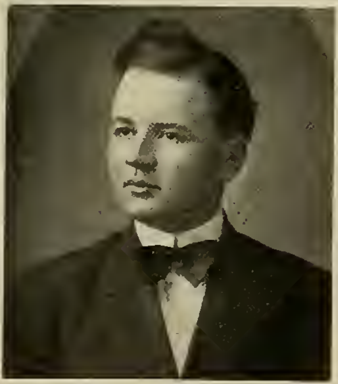
Twenty-seven automobiles, lining both sides of N. Clark street, near the Parkway Theater, this city, were counted one day last week. This showing is almost a nightly occurrence at this fashionable picture theater. In addition to finely projected licensed pictures, F. O. Nielsen, proprietor, provides fine vocal and instrumental numbers. Great praise is due Miss Olive Bergeron, pianist, and Mrs. Clyde Slusser, organist, for their talented accompaniment of the pictures.

WHO HAS SEEN THIS BOY?

If anyone in the picture business has seen the young man whose likeness is printed herewith they will confer a great favor upon his relatives by communicating with them, or urging him to do so without delay. His name is George S. Boulard and he has made his home with his aunt, Mrs. F. W. Davis at 142 West 12th Street, New York. Young Boulard is 21 years of age and of excellent character. Several months ago he worked in some pictures at Fort Lee, N. J., and becoming infatuated with the work, is believed to have joined some picture company.



George S. Boulard.

Boulard's father and mother are dead, but he has a sister who is deeply interested in his welfare, and his continued absence and silence as to his whereabouts has seriously affected her health. His aunt fears that if word is not received from him soon she will not be long for this world. Mrs. Davis is greatly concerned in the matter and is anxious to receive some news of her nephew. Any information addressed to her as above noted will be appreciated.

The Kehrleins Building.

Will Have a Fine Picture House in Fresno—Others to Come Later.

When Emil Kehrlein, Jr., was in New York last winter he announced that presently he, with his father and brother, would have a circuit of motion picture theaters along the California coast. He had resigned from the Turner and Dahnken circuit, with the success of which the Kehrleins have been closely identified, but the months passed with no announcements and the matter was supposed to have dropped. Now comes the announcement that ground is being broken for the first of these houses which will be located in Fresno.

All three of the Kehrleins are more than ordinarily adroit managers and the announcement of their plans is of more than ordinary import:

The building is to cost $150,000 and is to occupy a space 75 x 150 feet and is to be constructed of steel, cement and brick. It will be entirely fireproof. In height it will be equal to a two-story building, and in architecture it will be of a classic design.

The theater will be devoted exclusively to moving pictures, and it will have a seating capacity of 2,000 people.

This is to be but one of a large circuit of moving picture houses, and Fresno is to have the honor of being the city where the first house of the circuit will be opened. When Mr. Kehrlein left this city some months ago he went to New York, where he laid the foundation for this circuit of houses, which will be known as the Kehrlein Kinema Circuit of California. Already negotiations are under way for twenty or more especially constructed theater buildings, Richmond, Stockton, Berkeley, Hayward, Oakland and Fresno to be among the cities where new houses will go up. Plans for all of these photo theaters are now in the hands of the architects.

The structure will be equipped with all of the latest devices known to the metropolitan photo playhouses, and with every convenience for the patrons. Every one of the 2,000 seats will be provided with the mushroom system of combined heating and cooling, a system which has been little used in the West up to the present time, but which has proved to be very successful in the East. Regarding the music Mr. Kehrlein says:

"We have found that the piano and the organ are rapidly becoming obsolete for the interpretation of photoplays, so we shall install a Kinema organ-orchestra, costing $15,000, which has proved to be perfectly adapted for the orchestration of Kinema plays."

RELIANCE STUDIO NOTES.

General Stage Director, Oscar C. Apfel, and his talented wife, Marion Brooks, have returned from a two weeks trip to Panama. Oscar enjoyed his much needed rest and had a visit with Irving Willett and Anna Lehr in Havana where pictures of the Atlantic Squadron have just been completed.

Edgar Lewis returned from Oklahoma with four big Western pictures which he directed on Miller's 101 Ranch for early Reliance release. The first one, "The Sheriff," will be presented on May 10th to be followed by "After the Massacre" on May 14th.

Among the new members of the Reliance Stock Company is Ethel Phillips, the well-known Australian actress, who will make her first American appearance in Reliance films. Thomas R. Mills and Alan Hale have also been added to the Reliance ranks as has the beautiful child actress, Runa Hodges.

Irving Cummings has been elected Captain of the Reliance Baseball Team which is practicing daily and expects to schedule a number of interesting games. Challenges from Lubin, Edison and a number of other teams have been received.

Mgr. J. V. Ritchey was made a railroad president on Tuesday of last week but only held the job down for a few hours. The responsibility was gladly shifted to other shoulders after a picture was taken of a railroad incident which compelled Mr. Ritchey to assume all responsibility for the road in case of accident during the making of the film.

"THE MASTER CRACKSMAN" TO BE PRODUCED.

Following his policy of presenting dramas by recognized writers, J. V. Ritchey of the Reliance has completed arrangements with Stephen Allen Reynolds, the well-known author, to make a moving picture production of his recent story, "The Master Cracksman," which appeared in a late issue of "Adventure." The picture will be staged by Director Oscar C. Apfel, in two reels and seventy-five scenes.

Biograph to Issue Instructions to Exhibitors—Many Changes in Producing Staffs on the Coast.

CAREFULLY framed suggestions to exhibitors and operators about how to project Biograph pictures in order to get the effect planned by the producer are now being prepared by the Biograph Company. The plan is to send a copy to every licensed theater in the United States and to exhibitors abroad who use Biograph releases.

The Biograph management has been much annoyed lately by complaints of rapid and jerky action in the films. Investigation in many cases has disclosed the fact that the method of projection rather than the process of manufacture is the cause of the trouble. The pictures are carefully gauged to give exactly the proper slowness or rapidity of movement of the characters on the screen when run at a uniform speed of eighteen minutes to the thousand-foot reel. In the making of the original negative, however, the film is not run at a uniform speed. In some scenes exposures are made at the rate of ten a second and in others they are increased to double that number. When the scene which was made photographed at the rate of ten pictures a second is run through a projecting machine at the rate of 15 or 16 a second, the figures on the screen will seem to move three-fifths faster than the actors actually moved when the picture was being taken, and, on the other hand, the rapidly photographed picture will give the appearance of slow motion on the screen.

The directors of the Biograph pictures are carefully timing their scenes, regulating slowness or rapidity of action to the spirit of the scene. When a too energetic operator therefore grinds a full reel through in twelve or fourteen minutes it is no wonder that some of the scenes race like mad, or that the slow scenes step along at a lively pace.

All this ground, and a great deal more, is to be fully covered in the circular now in preparation.

The entire Biograph organization will return to New York within another month. May 28 is the date which has been tentatively selected for the departure. There will he upwards of 60 persons in the party which will make the trip across the continent. Most of the men in the organization are members of The Photoplayers and the club is planning a farewell party to be held during the last week.

Changes in Universal Staff.

Resignations and dismissals have separated more than thirty persons from the payroll of the Universal Company this week. Several of the directors have left to join other companies and a number of well-known actors and actresses are among the missing. J. F. McDonald and C. H. Matthews, who have been in charge of the Power's companies, resigned to take positions with Thomas Evans, who has come here to open a studio. He has taken the Monopol studio in Hollywood and will make regular releases. Gossip here is that he will work under an arrangement with Pat Powers.

Wilfred Lucas left this week to return to New York, but has made no announcement of his future plans. Another director who resigned is Frank E. Montgomery, one of the oldest directors in the Universal camp. He is going into the producing business on his own account.

While these directors were leaving, others were coming on. Allan Dwan, until a week ago producer for the American Company at Santa Barbara, was brought down to succeed Montgomery, in charge of one of the three Bison companies. He brought with him three of the principal members of the American organization—Wallie Reid, son of Hal Reid, as leading man, Pauline Bush as leading woman, and Jessalyn Von Trump, ingenue.

C. H. Grandon, who has been directing the second Lubin company at Glendale, was also induced to join the Universal forces. He carried away with him three of his best people in the Lubin company—Clara Williams, his leading woman, A. W. Hall, heavy, and Marshal Neilan, formerly juvenile lead with the Santa Monica Kalem company. These desertions from the Lubin ranks are supposed to be the principal reason for the Lubin company being ordered back to Philadelphia this week. Grandon is not altogether a stranger in the Independent group, for he was formerly in charge of the Imp studio in this city, several years ago, before the Universal was formed.

These directorial changes have resulted in a new lineup among the companies. The Universal companies now at work here, together with their directors, are as follows:

Rex—Otis Turner, Mr. and Mrs. Phillips Smalley, Bob Leonard.
Powers—Harry Pollard and Jack O'Brien.
Bison—Francis Ford, Harry McRae, Allan Dwan.
Nestor—Al E. Christie, M. H. Fahrney, C. H. Grandon.
Imp—Frank E. Woods.

A. M. Kennedy, general manager of the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal Company, announces a change of policy with reference to the big Bison productions. Indian, Western and Civil War subjects have been discontinued and for the next six months or a year the subjects will all relate to the occupation of the Philippines and Cuba by the American Army. Francis Ford will occupy himself with Philippine pictures and Harry McRae will direct the Cuban pictures. Ford is now at work on his first picture, a three-reel subject called "The Stars and Stripes Forever." Aguinaldo is one of the characters in the story. McRae's first three-reel Cuban story will be "Life, Love and Liberty." Following these Ford will do "The Battle of San Juan Hill" and McRae will put on "The Grand Old Flag."

For use in these pictures Kennedy has just bought $2,700 worth of Spanish uniforms to add to the monster wardrobe already owned by the company. Another costly purchase was four machine guns of modern type which are now on their way here from New York. For the Filipino pictures a quantity of bolos was needed. After many telegraphic inquiries, including one to Manila, it was found that a dealer in St. Louis had 150 of them. How they happened to be in St. Louis is a mystery, but they are now in Los Angeles.

Another change of policy relates to Otis Turner's Rex company. For the next year Turner will devote his talents to the production of pirate pictures. Kennedy has leased from the Southern Pacific railroad, for a period of one year, a fleet of 42 lateen rigged Greek fishing vessels which are the exact types which were used by pirates on the Spanish main. Turner's first three-reel pirate picture is under way. It is to be called "The Buccaneers." It has been in preparation for nearly three months.

Richard Willis, who has been scenario editor for the Universal Western branch ever since it was formed, severed his connection with the company this week. He is open for a new connection.

Harold Lockwood, formerly with the Selig Company, is the new leading man with Director McRae's company. McRae until lately was a Selig director.

Evelyn Quick, formerly of the Keystone, succeeded Louise Glaum as leading woman with Christie's Nestor company this week.

Selig Will Feature the Ostriches.

The next wild animal novelty of the Selig company is to feature ostriches, if they can be regarded as animals. For several months a trainer has been working with an ostrich at the Selig Wild Animal Farm and this week Director Colin Campbell took the trained bird and several members of the company to San Jacinto, where there is a big ostrich breeding farm, with several thousand young and adult birds roaming at large.

Vitagraph Activities.

Director Bowman, formerly with the K-B company, has joined forces with Rollin S. Sturgeon's company of Western Vitagraph players at Santa Monica, Cal. Director Bowman's first production as a Vitagraph producer will be "The Yellow Streak," a strong domestic drama, by W. Hanson Durham, of the scenario department.

The new studio at Santa Monica is rapidly nearing completion and will soon be ready for occupancy.

W. Hanson Durham, scenario editor of the Western Vitagraph company, who recently fractured his knee at the opening reception of the Photoplayers club, March 8th, is now able to be up and about his rooms with the aid of a cane. Editor Durham is still on the job, notwithstanding his accident.

Miss Daisy Smith, formerly with the Kalem Company in the scenario department, and Mrs. David Miles, formerly with the Kinemacolor Company, are now with the scenario department at Santa Monica, Cal.

Miss Anne Schaefer and Mr. George C. Stanley, the two well-known and versatile stars, have been selected to attend and represent the Western Vitagraph Company of America at the exhibitors' league at San Francisco, by the league, and they will go there about the first or second of May.

Another new camera man has been added in Frank Williams, who was formerly with the Pathe, Gaumont and Essanay companies. He was with Pathe at Paris, Versailles and Nice and Gaumont at Paris. He made most of the Pathe notable scenic and trick as well as other large productions for the past few years until 1911. He has also been with Essanay Chicago company, and was behind the camera in most of their big industrial, scenic and general work.

Notes.

Frank Shaw, who directed pictures for a short time with Wilbert Melville's Lubin company, has left that organization.

The ordinance enlarging the local municipal motion picture censor board from 5 to 7 members having become effective, the Mayor has filled the two new positions by appointing Mrs. Florence Moore and Mrs. P. G. Hubert.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Houses Here and There.

IDEAL THEATER, LOUISVILLE, KY.

WHILE the business district of every city of importance can boast of handsome moving picture theaters, comparatively few high class houses are to be found in the residential districts of cities throughout the country. It is generally believed by moving picture magnates that the medium-sized theaters are still good enough for sections of a city where the residents must be depended on for patronage. An exception to this rule is the Ideal Theater, located at Twenty-third and Market streets, Louisville. The cost of the Ideal was no less than $65,000. When the plans were announced, moving picture men were amazed, to say the least. They seriously questioned the judgment of Fred Dolle, and Joseph and Louis Steurle, of the Broadway Amusement Company, which put up the Ideal. The acumen of these men has been demonstrated by the popularity of the Ideal and the tremendous success it has attained since the day it was thrown open to the public, a few months ago.

The Ideal, in which no expense was spared, compares favorably with any animated picture house in the business district of Louisville, or any other Southern city. In general style and appearance, it is rivalled by but one animated picture house in the Kentucky metropolis. The Ideal, however, has the advantage of being even more modern, and the few improvements of note which have appeared since the erection of its peer have been incorporated in the Ideal.

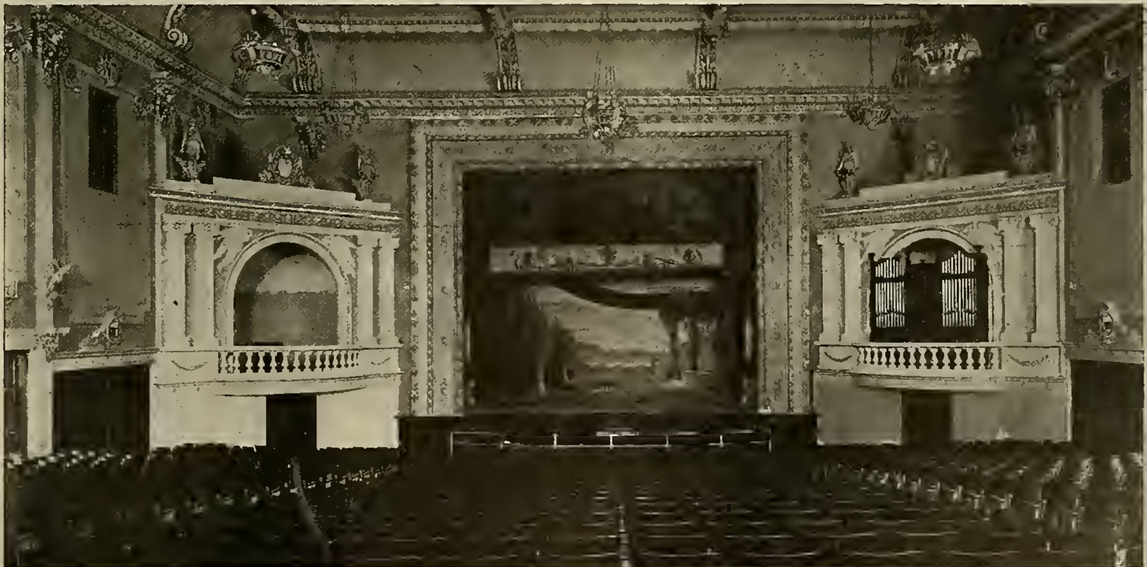
With municipal authorities throughout the country turning their attention to motion picture houses and urging more caution in safeguarding patrons, the Ideal stands out prominently as absolutely immune from danger. Particular attention was devoted to the fire prevention side of the structure when the plans were drawn, while every modern device was installed to minimize the possibility of loss of life in case of a conflagration. The Ideal has provided no less than 34 exits for its clientele, all of which are available at all time. An automatic device insures the proper operation of the doors at any time, and the big theater, capable of seating 1,300 people, could be emptied in a very few minutes. These precautions might be regarded as superfluous, in view of the assurances of the architects and contractors who planned the building. Brick, steel and concrete were used in the work, and it is difficult to see how a fire could gain any headway. However, Manager Fred Dolle contemplates the added safety appliances with satisfaction, while the public has put the stamp of approval on the arrangements by patronizing the house liberally.

The Ideal is 75 feet wide and 150 feet long. A feature is the unusual height of the ceiling, measuring 40 feet. The Ideal is exceptional in that a balcony has been installed. The addition seats 200 people, besides the 1,100 on the main floor. Should it prove necessary, a gallery might also be added without alterations, the height of the ceiling making a third floor possible.

The color scheme of the Ideal has been one of its most attractive features, giving the house an atmosphere of luxury found in few of the moving picture theaters. Old rose and ivory are the colors utilized, the two blending in the most harmonious style and making the theater a delight to that part of the public which pays especial attention to details. The plaster relief work which is to be found on both interior and exterior is in the same style, adding a satisfying finishing touch to the decorations. The inverted indirect system of lighting is used and has given satisfaction, diffusing the theater with the soft light which has proven so restful in comparison with the glare from the old fixtures. Current is secured from the wires of the Louisville Lighting Co., a leading central station of that section.

The Ideal, though featuring moving pictures, has catered to those who like a little vaudeville mixed with their amusement. While it is probable that the films will always prove the leading attraction at the West End house, practically any attraction would find itself at home in the theater. Back of the stage are a half-dozen dressing rooms, where every facility demanded by stars of the stage may be found. The stage itself is large enough to accommodate the majority of legitimate shows, being 75 feet wide and 30 deep. The proscenium arch is 30 feet wide. The rigging loft is 60 feet in height, giving stage hands plenty of working space. However, pictures will probably prove the main drawing-card at the Ideal, and one or two vaudeville acts only will be used each week.

The exterior lighting arrangements of the Ideal are noteworthy, being novel in the extreme. Not a single electric light has been placed on the exterior of the theater, notwithstanding which the house is admitted to be one of the most brilliantly lighted in Louisville or the South. Illumination has been provided by the General Electric Company by four powerful arc lamps, attached to posts. The lamps have found favor in the East, being used in Baltimore, New Haven and other cities for street lighting. They resemble the ordinary street lamp to a great extent, differing only in that the mechanism is inverted for ornamental purposes.



Interior View of the Ideal Theater, Louisville, Ky.

While the lighting at the Ideal has proved unusually effective, it also is tasteful and has been a feature which has appealed strongly to many.

The comfort offered by the Ideal has perhaps been one of the salient factors in its popularity. Every device which could add to the well-being of spectators is to be found in the Market Street theater. The drop of seven feet in the floor is sharp enough to permit patrons in the rear of the house to gain a clear view of the stage, regardless of the size of the person occupying the seat immediately ahead. The chairs are of the standard opera type, broad and roomy enough to allow the tired business man to watch the performance with ease after his day's work. The chairs are heavily upholstered, and in restfulness rival the Morris chairs to be found in the homes of the affluent.

The air of the Ideal is changed hundreds of times daily, two big monitors in the ceiling performing that important function. Steam heat is used in the winter and the house is kept at an agreeable temperature at all times. In the summer the structure resembles an airdome. The ventilators in the ceiling are opened, while the thirty-four exits also allow natural air to enter. In addition, there are thirty-four windows over the doors, which further give the Ideal the appearance of an out-of-door theater in the summer. Modern oscillating electric fans add to the comfort of patrons during the hot weather.

The lobby of the Ideal is one of the widest in Louisville, measuring 65 feet in width. The outside of the house is as attractive as the inside, and persons who are in doubt need take but one look to be convinced of the excellence of the shows. The operating booth is carefully isolated from the remainder of the house by steel compartments. The throw is an even 100 feet, offering no difficulty to experienced operators in charge of the Power's 6-A machines.

A three-piece orchestra plays to the pictures nicely and the music at the Ideal is of the same high calibre as other features. Matinees are given on Sunday only. The admission price is five and ten cents, the former applying to children. Two shows are the usual number, four being given on Sundays.

The popularity of the Ideal has been a surprise to many keen exhibitors. However, Manager Fred Dolle evinced no astonishment at the money-making proclivities of the house.

"We draw from the entire western section of Louisville," said Mr. Dolle, "and our shows are good enough to cause transients to leave the beaten path to take a look. In fact, a good deal of our business comes from transients who have heard of the theater and are anxious to inspect it. The bulk of the business, however, is from the residential districts, and is what we must depend on. The success of the house merely indicates that courteous treatment and giving full value are as vital in the moving picture business as in any other."

The Ideal employs fifteen men. This staff has been able to take care of the work nicely, all being veterans of the amusement field. Two operators, two men at the doors, three ushers, three musicians, two on the stage, and several other attaches form the staff. As stated, Fred Dolle is manager of the house, which is operated by the Broadway Amusement Company. The Broadway handles four other motion picture houses in Louisville, but is especially proud of its latest.

BUYS PARTNER'S INTEREST.

I. Summerfield is now the sole owner of the Improved Feature Film Company of America, with main offices at 42 East 14th Street, New York City, having bought the interest of his partner, Samuel S. Marcussen. Mr. Summerfield has changed the firm name to the Improved Feature Film Co.

JUDGE'S THEATER, TEMPLE, TEXAS.

J. J. Judge, when manager of the "Judge" theater, inaugurated a series of merchants' matinees, which proved both a financial and advertising success. The matinees were given on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons. This popular playhouse has been remodeled and completely rewired according to National Board of Underwriters Rules. The Judge's theater is now the very coziest in the city and one of the best equipped from a mechanical standpoint in the State. Three reels of first run licensed pictures with orchestral music constitutes the daily program to capacity business.

J. J. Heggman, manager of the Crescent theater, has recently purchased the Judge and Majestic theaters from J. J. Judge. Mr. Judge has moved to Pasadena, Cal. This house remains closed except on Saturdays when high class two and three reel Licensed features are shown.

The accompanying photograph shows a crowd of merchants trying to get into Judge's theater on the afternoon of January 18 last. The house was crowded with over one thousand people waiting on the outside. The picture was taken about three o'clock that afternoon.

CIRCLE THEATER, PORTLAND, OREGON.

We publish herewith an exterior view of Circle Theater, Portland, Oregon. Seats 900 and is of the most up-to-date fireproof construction. Filtered air is used for ventilation which passes through a water tank every two minutes. All lights are concealed in the ceiling. The theater is beautifully decorated with a tone that is pleasing to the eye. The paintings on the side of the walls are fastened in such manner that same can be removed at any time and others put in place. A white enameled rest room is the center attraction for the ladies, and afternoon parties are frequently in vogue for this particular theater that caters to a high class patronage. The operator's booth is set in a steel encasement covered with concrete. A hidden organ costing $5,000 is one of the features of the place. The theater is operated by the Circle Amusement Company of which Mr. C. J. Kerr is manager, formerly of Chicago, Illinois. Licensed films are shown exclusively and a seven piece orchestra adds to the musical specialties.

THE GRAND THEATER, SHERIDAN, WYO.

The Grand Theater, Sheridan, Wyo., is one of the nicest and best equipped motion picture and vaudeville houses of its kind to be found anywhere. There are a little over three hundred nicely upholstered chairs, and the width between each row is such that a person may come in or go out without disturbing those seated. All the electrical wiring is in conduits. The operating room is built of fireproof material with two machines, an Edison and a Motiograph, in constant use. X-Ray reflectors are used for lighting the auditorium. Although there is a big stage with three dressing rooms, no vaudeville has been used for over a year. James Klindt, the proprietor and manger, has been in the motion picture business for over four years, and knows how to hold his patrons by always giving them a good entertainment.

LUNA THEATER, DANVILLE, PA.

There are very few small towns the size of Danville, Pa., that can boast of having a handsome moving picture theater, for most men contemplating the erection of picture houses are afraid to build an expensive house in a town with a small population. But this is not the case with Joseph Hein, who is the manager and owner of the Luna Theater at Danville, a photo-engraving of which is herewith published. The Luna has a seating capacity of 460. There are three four-foot aisles and one cross aisle. Six six-foot exits have been provided for. The auditorium is lighted by X-Ray reflectors. The curtain is in front instead of at the back as is usually the case. There are two Power's No. 6 machines in constant use.

ISIS THEATER, PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS.

One of the most beautiful moving picture theaters in the South is the Isis Theater, Port Arthur, Texas, a photograph of which is herewith published. Its dimensions are 140 feet long by 32 feet wide. The seating capacity is six hundred, four hundred being on the parquette floor and the remaining two hundred on the balcony. The house was built and furnished two years ago at a cost of $28,000.

It has been under the present management for the past eight or nine months. In the photograph of the front, the man standing to the right of the box is R. S. Lazenby, the proprietor and general manager; the other person being L. W. Irick, assistant manager and chief operator. The house is steam heated; it is ventilated by two thirty-six inch and one eighteen-inch exhaust fans. There is a large stage for vaudeville, but for some time past nothing but three reels of Licensed pictures have been shown. The admission charges are five and ten cents. The managers say that they have one of the best five-piece orchestras within a radius of three hundred miles.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE latest topic of local discussion, namely: discrimination in favor of churches and schools with regard to the enforcement of regulations and laws bearing upon motion picture exhibitions, presents many phases of importance, all of which justify the complaints of the exhibitors who have brought about the discussion. The point is well taken when the exhibitor claims that a church giving exhibitions for revenue becomes a competitor of the regular houses and is, therefore, subject to the same regulations imposed upon the regular exhibitors, even to the payment of the license fee, notwithstanding the claim of some churches that they are exempt from taxation and the license fee is a tax. No stretch of imagination can make a motion picture show to which admission is charged part of a form of religious worship. Some clergymen have made the plea that they inaugurated the exhibitions to "get the young people away from the environments of unwholesome picture houses." This gives color to their claim that the exhibitions they give are in line with church work, a department of reform, but the color is rubbed off when the pecuniary phase enters into the question.

Where exhibitions are without charge, exemption from the license fee seems reasonable, but the churches are subject to all other regulations, as well as schools. It has been correctly stated that in cases of carelessness or incompetency and a resultant panic the blame for it is placed solely upon the motion pictures and for a time at least exhibitors feel the effects in their box office receipts, particularly those located in the vicinity of the occurrence. From this standpoint of view the regular exhibitors are justified in demanding that the electrical, health, fire and all other municipal departments that enforce the regulations against the regular places of exhibition shall enforce the same regulations against churches and schools, whether or not admission fees are charged, for it becomes solely a matter of safeguarding the public against accident.

It is but fair to concede that the inclination to evade the conditions that are imposed upon regular exhibitors is not general. To the contrary, it is exceptional. The writer has known of instances where clergymen were desirous of getting away from the regulations, but not because they felt that exemption should be accorded as a matter of custom, or right. Nor were they disposed to take advantage of influence and induce connivance of evasions. With them it was a question of expense. In some cases the project was abandoned when it was explained that the saving of expense might result in some very serious accident. There have been cases where the projects were carried on with the provision that as fast as sufficient funds could be realized they would be devoted from time to time to the work of complying with the regulations. This inconsistent action is deserving of as much condemnation as that of the person who ignores the regulations. It is taking a chance, and it is a chance that the authorities will not concede to regular exhibitors.

It may also be stated, in justification to the authorities, that the records will show that the filing of applications for permission to give exhibitions is being enforced and inspectors are sent to places to see that the requirements are carried, even in cases of only one night shows. The erection of booths, full safety equipment of projecting machines and the qualifications of the operator are looked after. It is true that some exhibitions have been "put over" without the knowledge of the authorities, but that rarely happens now. One well-known inspector said, when questioned as to the frequency of such occurrences, "No, they don't do that so often. Many inspectors found themselves before the department on charges of neglect or connivance because they could not show a record of having made an inspection. Their plea that no application had been filed, and therefore they could not be expected to know that an exhibition was to be given was frequently looked upon with suspicion and they had to satisfy the department that no intimation had been given that application and inspection was not necessary. Now the inspectors are so fortified by regulations that few people try to beat them. Licensed operators who wish to retain their license will run no show until an inspection has been made. If a trick has been turned by a non-licensed man he may give up all hope of getting a license and the party giving the show hears something that deters him from a repetition of the act. We don't go into the courts with such cases. We have a method of our own that is very effective." "Are churches and schools considered amenable to the same regulations that apply to regular picture houses?"

"They certainly are. Most of the one-night exhibitions are in churches and schools, and when such shows are supervised there is absolutely no reason why daily or nightly shows in similar places should be exempted. There may be some modifications. For instance, regular picture houses are required to have exits of a certain number and character. In this connection I do not think a rigid enforcement is insisted upon by any department as applying to churches, but they should have ample and proper means of exits. This matter was taken up in connection with a public school recently. The only available place for the exhibition was the top floor of the building. The show was not given. The authorities decided that, while the means for exit were adequate for regular attendants at the school, they were not within the requirements for a public attendance at a moving picture show. An argument that other entertainments are frequently given in the same place with public attendance was of no avail, it being contended in reply that none of the officials would take the responsibility of evading the exit regulations enacted to govern the kind of exhibitions they were asked to sanction."

A well-known exhibitor said he had given the question of requiring churches to comply with the moving picture theater regulations some thought, more particularly since it has become a matter of public discussion. "So far as I am personally concerned," he said, "all the churches in my neighborhood may give picture shows. I would not look upon them as competitors. Other exhibitors probably would. It all depends on local conditions. As a rule, the churches that go into the business get a very cheap grade of service and most of them lean to the educational style of entertainment. This is the condition in any neighborhood and I know that none of the churches would undertake to compete with me on quality. They feel that it is unnecessary for them to pay big prices for service because their people will patronize them on account of interest in the church. In localities where there are small exhibitors who cannot afford the better grade of service the situation takes on another aspect. There such church becomes a competitor. But, while I look upon the question, so far as it applies to my locality, with indifference, I want to go on record as being opposed to the opening of picture shows in churches until the regulations to which regular picture places are subjected are complied with. I am in hearty accord with the objection to the seats not being fastened to the floor. One of the greatest dangers in case of a panic is the chance of seats and benches being knocked over. I would also insist that booths and approved outfits be installed and that the operators of the shows be licensed men, and I see no reason why the seating capacity rule should not be enforced also. Pay the license fee, too? Why, most undoubtedly, if they charge admission. They have no rent or taxes to pay, which are handicaps on the regular exhibitors with whom they compete, and almost invariably the ticket sellers, ticket takers, ushers and pianists are volunteers."

FRANK WOODS MAKING COMEDIES.

Frank Woods, who is making comedies for the Universal Company at the Coast studios, already has finished six films, according to word from Los Angeles. These include "Buck and Sadie's First Quarrel," a simple comedy of country town types; "The Home Doctor Book," a domestic farce; "The Black Smallpox Scare," a country town farce; "Buck, Sadie and Gossips," a sequel to the first; "The Hungry Soldiers," a broad burlesque farce, and "The Tourist and the Flower Girl," a love comedy. Mr. Wood, it is understood, aims more at maintaining a consistent average in mirth-provoking qualities in his pictures than at turning out occasional "screaming" stuff. If he succeeds he will be doing what few, if any, other directors have so far accomplished.

SMALL TOWN HOUSE THRIVING.

Ralph W. Brill has been operating a small show at Chadwicks, N. Y., with excellent success since he closed the Rudolph Theater in the Catskills last fall. The picture house at Chadwicks is the only show in that town and the pictures have become very popular with the factory and mill people. A Standard No. 4 machine is used.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Pie and Pictures.

JOSIAH PEARCE and Sons, who control a dozen theaters in various parts of the South and are preparing to add a thirteenth, just to show that they are not superstitious, send in a weekly bulletin that serves their various theaters in New Orleans. Typographically the issue might be bettered. It lacks a clean-cut appearance, in part due to the fact that the type employed is rather too large for the column and page. It is eight point in the standard thirteen em width, but the column is little less than eight inches long and, in that measure the length of column, a six point would have looked more in proportion. The objection is that it would greatly increase the cost of composition, but on the other hand the issue serves four theaters and carries plenty of outside advertising. Each house gets less than a column for the weekly program. It would be better to give each house a full page (it is sixteen pages and cover) and give a really good display to the list of coming attractions. There is no use in getting out a twenty-page paper and using less than two pages for the house programs, when the programs form the ostensible reason for the publication.

There should be a page to each and it should be one of the right hand pages to show up well. The right hand pages are used, but only the inside column. One two and a quarter inch line is all any film gets except three specials that are given a half-column each. Each of these carries a cut and not one in a late issue has the cut that belonged to the story. About half the remaining space is given to miscellaneous stuff, the rest being given the foreign advertising. We think it would pay the company to give some local man $25 or $50 to get out one issue and get it out right as a sample for others. But they have one unique feature. It relates to pie and pictures.

An Object Lesson.

The feature is an argument for the ten cent house against the five cent theater and may be useful to others who want to raise the price. It runs:

> There is just as much difference in motion-picture shows at the Pearce Theaters as there is in pies. If you approach a lunch counter and call for pie at five cents per slice, your portion will look about like this:

There follows a cut of a skimpy section of pie on a plate with a sign, "Five cents per slice.

> If you patronize the same counter every day and order pie, at the end of a week you will have taken into your system a collection of pies resembling this:

There is inserted a picture of seven slices of pie on as many plates.

> On the other hand, if you patronize a first-class restaurant and order pie, a slice will cost ten cents—sometimes more—and your portion will be more like this:

This time the slice is more than twice the size of the former piece.

> Most of us do not care for pie every day, but would prefer to divide the week's consumption into three liberal "quality" slices, like this:

And now come three slices of pie that look larger than the seven cheaper cuts, instead of seven smaller and less palatable slices, as pictured above.

> We all know that the reason we pay more for one piece of pie than another is that one's superior—has more good things in it, and is served to us under more inviting conditions and in more pleasant surroundings.
> The reason you pay more for viewing motion pictures at the Trianon Theater (where an admission of ten cents for three reels is charged, as against five cents in theaters showing two reels) is just this: You get a show that is 33⅓% longer and 50% better.
> Therefore:
> When you pay more at the Pearce Theaters, you do so for the same reason that you pay ten cents for pie—because you get superior quality and greater quantity, in more pleasant surroundings.
> Now, we will tell you exactly what steps are necessary to give a show such as is run in the Pearce Theaters, and prove that superior ingredients enter into the making of their programs exactly as superior ingredients enter into the making of ten-cent pies.

The rest of the argument is to the effect that Licensed service, properly displayed, is what makes the ten cent article.

The use of the cuts is much more effective than a straightaway argument would be. We think that perhaps the Pearce Company would be willing to have electros made from their originals for the benefit of the manager who may wish to reproduce the advertisement. They can be addressed at the Trianon Theater, New Orleans.

We would like to see another issue of the bulletin when they make further progress. It is in its eighth issue. There is lots of time for improvement.

A General Appeal.

Emery N. Downs, of the Knickerbocker Playhouse, Cleveland, O., has to get in the silk stocking crowd. He has hit upon a useful style of advertisement that will perhaps appeal to others similarly situated. He writes:

> I thought you would be interested in my method of getting my advertising read by the public.
> Realizing that a moving picture theater has some difficulty in attracting the interest of "non-picture fans" especially in the Press, I am giving the style of my copy a great deal of thought, especially at the prevailing rates, $3.50 per inch.
> The above theater is located in a strictly residential neighborhood, ten blocks away from the nearest business center, where there are two large picture houses, one seating 1,200, the other 800. We seat 963, orchestra and balcony, 10 and 20 cents.
> We have to make our appeal to the exclusive residence dwellers, hence the "preserved" amusement and "fresh" orchestra ad.
> We play pictures only, 6 to 10 days run, and an orchestra of exceptional ability, directed by Cleveland's pet violinist, the orchestra (7 pieces) is a great item of expense. Each man is the best obtainable and is paid accordingly.
>
> The public have formed the conclusion that the Knickerbocker has never made a dollar profit, owing to the expensive program offered and you can be assured I never enlighten them. We have been open a year and one month. In keeping a personal vigilance over the house I have gained in that time a reputation which has placed the Knickerbocker in a class by itself.

Reaching the Residents.

Mr. Downs appreciates the fact that the statement that he has a special Biograph or Lubin, or that Miss Florence Turner will appear in a subject that evening will not appeal to possible patrons who never heard of Miss Turner and know only in a general way that the Biograph is a motion picture company. He makes his appeal on more general lines of the excellence of the entertainment, using two inches across two columns enclosed in a box with rounded corners made of six point border. Each carries the catchline "Get going—you'll like it," and in two of the three samples sent, a single six point line tells what he has in the way of a special. The third advertisement is half argument and half announcement, perhaps a better plan since this appeals to the fans as well. We give these three as suggestions.

> DELIGHTING THOUSANDS.
> The selected program of Licensed photoplays and the famous concert orchestra, whose musical interpretation of the photoplays is remarkable.
> At the Knickerbocker, Euclid and E. 83d Street.
> Get going—you'll like it.

> DESPITE THE RAIN.
> In raincoats and wraps, in autos and afoot, hundreds of Cleveland's Best People braved the rain and snow to go to the Knickerbocker Theater, because they knew it was WORTH WHILE.
> Get going—you'll like it.

> CANNED AMUSEMENT.
> Preserved amusement of the very highest quality is to be had at a very low cost, together with a wonderful (fresh) orchestra, every night at the Knickerbocker Theater, on Euclid Avenue at E. 83rd Street.
> TWO CHOICE OFFERINGS NEXT WEEK.
> The attractions follow.

These advertisements are not particularly brilliant, but they give an argument to the man who doesn't care much about the photoplay theaters. They mildly pique his curiosity and some time he'll drop around and then "get going."

If you want to reach the non-fan resident, this is a good way to go about it.

Want's to Know.

W. W. Dilley, of the South Side Theater, Erie, Pa., sends in a dodger and wants to know what we think of it. He explains that he recently bought the house and is rather green at the business.

From one angle we do not think much of the production. It is done on very cheap news paper with no display. There is a lot of text without relief and the display is merely the name and address at the bottom. The top looks bare and there is nothing to catch the eye. Some line in at least an eighteen point should have been run at the top to get the attention. Even the timeworn "Announcement" would have been better than nothing, but a catchy attractor would have been better yet, something like "Just a minute!" "Lend me your ear," or anything that would rouse curiosity. Then about half the matter should have been thrown out that the other half might be read.

One of the best lines—the really good line, is lost down at the bottom. It runs: "We are looking for YOU to-night." It is in the same type as the rest, with the exception of the capitalized "you."

The dodger is the announcement that the theater will be re-opened with improvements. The first two paragraphs contain the essential facts: the changes to be made and the service. The third is given to the Power's projector and might have been kept in, but the reference to "the best little piano player in town" should have been kept for later as should a somewhat wandering statement that runs to the effect that the photoplay has suffered evil repute but is now coming into its own. The argument is sound, but it is not driven home and it does not belong to the rest of the text.

It is better to write a hundred words that are read than two hundred words that are thrown away, and this greeting is too lengthy for a dodger. It conveys the suggestion that it is the only piece of advertising that Mr. Dilley ever expects to do, so he puts it all in.

Be Punchy.

Mr. Dilley should seek to acquire the punch. Using more modern slang, he should put the pep into his advertising matter.

Something like this might have given the same result and it is certain that it would be more generally read:

> Closed?
> Certainly NOT.
> WIDE OPEN.
> If you don't believe it come to the
> SOUTH SIDE THEATER
> Monday evening, March 24th.
> You'll see a better show than you ever saw there before.
> You'll see a cleaner and more comfortable house.
> You'll be treated RIGHT.
> SOUTH SIDE THEATER,
> Peach Street at Twenty-Fifth.
> Only a nickel, but worth a quarter at least.

That's the sort of thing to put on a dodger or throwaway. If you want to tell it all to them print on fine paper, be finical in the choice of type. Make it a product that will be read because it looks important, but when you want to give out cheap advertising print it in short lines and big type that will be taken in before the recipient gets a chance to throw it away. Mr. Dilley has twenty-five lines of argument additional to the name of the house and the address. If you do it at all do it right. Matter like this has no place on a dodger: it belongs in a better class of work:

> Since the invention of the Motion Picture it has been a hard fight and people are just beginning to realize the educational value of them. Lecturers, Schools and some Churches are using them and it won't be long before they are universally used in educational institutions of all descriptions.

We think that Mr. Dilley will make progress as he grows up in the business. He might have done much worse for a first attempt.

With the Exchanges.

Between the Isis News, the Cameraphone Bulletins and Mr. Smithers' Idle Hour Educator, we are getting to feel very much like an exchange editor, for these publications are regular and welcome.

Mr. Smithers starts off a late issue with a sane discussion of the state censorship, and winds up with a write-up of G. D. Storm, of the Laemmle Exchange, Minneapolis, who has been in the lantern and projection business for 56 years, a sufficiently picturesque personality to interest those in Aberdeen, particularly as he supplies the house with its reels.

The Isis News continues to grow better. A late issue announced a series of union revival services, surely in marked contrast to the time when the churches were denouncing the pictures and their promoters.

A new wrinkle is Identification Day, explained by this clipping:

> Some of the players like John Bunny are well known to all of you. Some of you are acquainted with Mary Fuller. Others are well acquainted with Maurice Costello.
> But who knows the greatest number of the actors and actresses who play at this theater. In order to find out for ourselves, and to have the satisfaction of having you introduced to the different actors we are going to give six prizes to the women who can name the greatest number of the players next Thursday. Each prize will be well worth having and if bought by you would cost you at least $6 or $7.
> The way we are going to work it is this. Each lady who enters the ISIS will be given a blank sheet of paper on which to write the names of the players she recognizes, or thinks she recognizes. After you have filled in with all the names you can the sheets are to be handed to the lady at the box office with your name written below the list of players.
> These sheets will be submitted to the editor of the Motion Picture World, who will give as near a correct list of the players in the three reels as he can. The six who come the nearest to naming correctly the greatest number of players will be awarded the prizes.

Likes Us.

We appreciate this letter from Ole M. Nelson, of the Orpheum, Greeley, Colorado. He writes:

> You sure are a friend and no two ways about it. I AM just like so many of the fellows that you have spoken about—I have been admiring you and your department at a distance, but never ventured near enough to make my appreciation known. But here goes to say a word or more.
> The first thing I will mention is our latest innovation which I think is original, at least it is as far as we know. Out here in Colorado, the sun shines about as bright as any thing you fellows ever saw and no matter how light the house is for our matinees, it is very hard to see in the subdued light of the theater after just coming in from the sunshine. Our ushers each have a small flash light, and as a patron enters the house he is ushered to a seat by means of the little light in the ushers hand. It is working fine. There is no more cases of the usher "beating it down the aisle and leaving the patron groping along with a timid feeling that he is going to bump into something. The light is simply held at the ushers side and the light cast on the floor.
> Like several others we had a little paper of our own for a while, but had to give it up for various reasons. People liked the paper, but the editor was not a picture man as he claimed, and did not make good after a couple of issues and Mr. Wilson and I are too busy to look after it, as we want it done. Hope to resume it soon and if it is done as we want it we will forward some copies.
> The enclosed letter in regard to the Steeplechase was the biggest business getter we ever tried. The picture was booked to us on short notice and we had but two or three days in which to advertise it and packed the house every show for two days. It gave "Columbus" a hard run for honors on receipts. Speaking of "Columbus." Our town is 8,838 strong and we showed to 3,011 people. Isn't that a good per cent.?
> The "Irish Day" and Xmas folder is not original with us, but it is new in Greeley and we did an excellent business from their use.
> We have had excellent results from inviting the Sororities of the Teachers College to attend in a body, too. The first invitation called for a free admission and since then they have been attending in a bunch about once a week, and it has so happened that they have always come on nights that would have been pretty slim, had it not been for them. We are already booked for Decoration Day (Pathe's "Days of War"), and I am preparing to invite the G. A. R. and W. R. C. to attend the matinee as our guests.
> You are probably familiar with Selig's Press "dope" for Pauline Cushman. I am using every one of those articles in the papers besides a little of my own.
> There may be some things in this that will be worth printing and maybe not, but the main thing that I am hitting at is the fact that we are great believers in printers' ink. Our printing bills amount to nearly $100 a month. The result has been that we took a "frost" and built it up to a paying basis—put three fellows out of commission, started a new and better house and are doing the business. The Orpheum seats 500, has a Power's six and a faultless picture on A. C. current. The Sterling was built for a road show house and is a pippin. Seats 1,100, has a Motiograph 1913, projecting a flickerless picture, but has some faults which I am going to write to Richardson about and also get a Handbook to help me out of difficulties which arise hereafter.
> The sheet entitled Film Index has been a great help to me in my selection of films and where a fellow has an exchange like the Denver to deal with they are worth while. Mr. Drumm and his assistants are sure fine to deal with and we get some bookings a month in advance almost solid. I should modify that by saying features and specials like our Irish days and Xmas programs. By use of the index I have not had a picture slip by without knowing whether or not there was some sensation or exceptionally good point in it without advertising same. It also saves time hunting through four or five back numbers for data on my programs.
> After writing all of this I hope there is something that will help some poor fellow suffer along the way and out of the ruts that come to us all.

Lamps Not New.

We think that the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, was the first to use electric flash lamps to guide late comers to their seats. This was some years before the photoplay theater came to the front. Quite a number of New York picture houses have used the lamps for some time.

We are sorry that Mr. Nelson did not elaborate on his film index, a sample of which he sends. We cannot quite "get" some of the abbreviations, but it is a loose leaf sheet with printing headings giving the name and brand of the film and apparently references to the advertisement, story, Comment on the Films, class, number of reels, the booking date and the name of the star and other remarks. There is nothing to show how any particular subject is quickly located unless it be through the exchange number, but any system of this sort helps the manager to keep advised as to the coming attractions and permits the rapid preparation of good copy. It has always been a matter of surprise to us that Frank Montgomery does not use some such scheme, yet we caught him last winter with a special story of Florida that he did not know anything about until we told him that it was an old Florida legend. The Orpheum has that much "on" one of the shrewdest managers in the country.

That Paper.

Looking at it from this distance it would seem that the paper was the production of a reporter who had recently lost his position through the merger of two daily papers. There was too much grouch and too little about the pictures that were coming, and what there was was not convincing. These little papers are an immense help if they are properly done, but unless there is the proper balance between house stuff and general matter it represents only an expense. We think the Isis bulletin has come closest to the proportions to date. Perhaps Mr. Nash will be good enough to send Mr. Nelson one. He's a newspaper and a film man—the right combination. We think Mr. Nelson could get out a good one himself if he had the time.

The two booklets spoken of are borrowed material, but the steeplechase letter is something new. It had reference to a racing topical. The most unique feature is found in a postscript that reads:

> On Friday night two hundred seats will be set aside for horsemen, bringing the equestrian admirers together.

There is something good in that scheme if you can set aside a sufficiently large section without robbing the regulars. It does not apply to horsemen only, get the doctors, the lawyers or any one class of professionals and faddists together. It will make talk and business.

Now that Mr. Nelson has found his way in, we hope that he keeps on coming.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by Epes Winthrop Sargent

The Inquest Club.

At the Post Mortem of the Inquest Club, held April 21st, it was decided to stick to the Savoy Theater, Thirty-fourth Street, West of Broadway, and meetings will be held there until further notice each Monday, the Jury meeting in the lobby at half-past nine and repairing to the Morgue in Keen's Chop House, where the use of one of the private rooms has been granted the Club.

At the last Post Mortem, Edward Ray Coffin, of Dexter, N. M., was made an honorary member because of the appropriateness of his name.

If you want to join the Inquest Club, meet the Jury in the lobby of the Savoy at half-past nine, May 4th.

Dinner.

The time is getting short and we hope by next week to give full particulars of the Photoplay dinner under the auspices of the Inquest Club. Meantime mark it in your memory that you have a date for Saturday, May 31st.

Going to Buy.

In the general adjustment of the Mutual's affairs, one of the Carleton brands will be moved to the Thanhouser plant at New Rochelle, and outside scripts will be purchased. Lloyd Lonergan, who has written most of the Thanhouser scripts, will read for the other brand.

No Half Reels.

Recent rejections by the Vitagraph company carried the announcement that the company would make no more half reel comedies.

Along the same lines Hopp Hadley, of the Reliance writes: "We are not trying to put on half reel comedies or, in fact, half reel pictures of any sort. We will confine all our efforts from now on to strong drama with an occasional full reel comedy."

They are closing down on the half reels, apparently, partly because they are hard to get and partly because there are few directors who can get a story in five hundred feet and keep it a story.

Bull Con for Bull Moose.

The Progressive Party in Ohio is going to use motion pictures for propaganda purposes and William Lord Wright is going to write the stories. In view of the dental decorations of their Presidential candidate, we presume that the man in the fuzzy hat got the job on the strength of the dentistry industrial he recently turned out.

Good Advice, BUT—

The nearly-editor of a would-be trade paper is moved to froth at the mouth at the effrontery of the photoplay editors in stealing copyrighted stories and thinks that they should be urged to study the Copyright Laws and find out the awful penalties to be inflicted if the Bogey Man catches them at their nefarious practices. Then he goes on to say:

> My advice to every scenario writer is, before sending a plot or scenario to any company (no matter which one), to copyright the story first; it would cost only a dollar.

That's good advice, but will the whiskered person please stand up and explain how you can copyright your story if the law—which he urges others to study—prevents the Copyright Office from accepting scripts for registration before publication? Until a photoplay has been produced in film it cannot be copyrighted for a dollar or a hundred dollars or a million. The law says that until the story is filmed it has precisely the same rights in Copyright Law that the unpublished book has. In other words, it is not entitled to any copyright protection. If you send it in with the copyright line on you are liable to prosecution.

A little knowledge is a dangerous thing. We have carefully explained the copyright law before in this department. We also explained that Register Thorvald Solberg did his utmost to obtain copyright protection for the unpublished script and was denied by the Congressional Committee. This being the case the statement that a copyright can be had does not in the least alter the fact that it cannot. Don't be misled.

Our almost contemporary should read this department and keep posted.

Knowing the Story.

It may be a wise child that knows its own father, but it's a mighty wise author that knows his own brainchild. We were looking at a script the other day in which a rambling and utterly inconsistent idea did not run quite far enough and to piece out, the author developed as a pad as nice a little comedy idea as any producer could ask for. He only ran about four scenes of this for it was just a filler to him, but all the same it was a real story, something new and really novel.

It is by no means an isolated instance. An author sits down to write out an idea. It is not a very good idea, but it is the one he started to write and he sticks to it through thick and thin, though he may hit upon a scene that would lead to a new climax, a novel complication. He doesn't see it, because he is not looking for it. He is looking merely at the story he started to write and may even regard the incident as an intrusion, but that would be a story, and the one he has written is not a good story, because it is so old.

Watch every development for some hint that may lead you from the beaten track. Be ever on the watch for the lead that will present novelty and do not be afraid to throw over a story if that story has led you to a better idea.

Most beginners are in too much of a hurry to get their ideas out. They want to put them on paper and get the paper in the mail box in the shortest possible time, so that they will the sooner get the checks. It will pay to hang on to a story and rewrite until it cannot be improved. That is what is most likely to bring a check quickly; not the hurried production.

We Pass.

We respectfully refuse to take up the club handed us by a Western photoplay writer who bewails the fact that there are kisses in 99 per cent. of the films" which lead small boys in the audience to echo the kiss.

With crimes and sordid themes barred we fail to see where we would get ideas if kisses, too, are barred. The author is honest and admits it would make no difference to him since he writes only children stories, but he thinks the time is ripe and even over-ripe to cut out this demoralizer of children's morals. We think if our correspondent will go out and fall in love with some nice girl he will not call upon the rest of us to omit kisses—"nasty, lustful kissing scenes," he calls them—from all scripts in the interests of a few children with overheated imaginations.

We pass.

No Zulus.

Pretty soon there will be a number of Zulu pictures released. Lubin has made four and several of the other Jacksonville companies have done the same. Don't get the idea that there is a brisk market for Zulu stories. There is not and there is not going to be. In the first place the companies are coming up north and in the second no director who made Zulu pictures will make any more and no director who has heard a Zulu director relieve himself of his feelings on the subject is going to tackle them. Arthur D. Hotaling, the Lubin director, declares himself cured, and we think it will be at least a couple of years before he tries again. The others feel the same way about it, so don't write about Zulus if you want to sell your stuff.

Editors.

Here is a sane paragraph from a somewhat silly letter in which the correspondent declares that in defending the lack of probability as a reason for rejecting a farce we defend the one editor who is guilty of rejecting improbable farces. We did not know that there was but one editor who did this. In fact we know lots of editors who will refuse to accept the inane just because it is labeled farce.

But the good paragraph is this:

> In my judgment an editor is one, in most cases, who has achieved success through his writings, he naturally has good faith in his own judgment and if he turns down a script, it does not necessarily mean that it is not good, but I have learned from experience that writing for one or two companies and catering to their style, will pay best in the long run.

An editor, these days, is mostly a person who knows a good picture when he sees it on a piece of paper. He generally is a writer because he is most apt to have gained his experience in that way, but there is not an editor in the game who does not turn down lots of good scripts. Sometimes it is because the idea does not appeal to him, sometimes because the idea does not appeal to his employer. There are as many reasons for rejections as there are script writers, and the refusal of a single editor to accept a script is not a sign of the lack of value. For that matter the editor may have liked the script immensely. We have put back into their envelopes stories that we fairly hated to let go of, but there were office reasons why we had to.

We had three Arabic comedies sent back to us the other day, not because they were bad, just because in the final argument it was decided that they would conflict with two dramas made in the same unique settings. No question of their worth or worthlessness entered into the matter. It was merely that they did not want to spoil two dramas with unusual settings by using the same settings for comedies.

Unless the editor tells you that the story had been done before, or unless you can see for yourself that the story is worthless, do not accept any one decision. Keep it going until all have had a chance to pass on the merits of the script. And even if they all say it's bad it still may be good.

Directors and Editors.

The comment last week on the coming change in the studios whereby the editors will edit and the directors will direct and not presume to exercise the editorial functions as well, has made a lot of talk. Many have declared that the article is widely at variance with the truth, but it will presently appear that we are a little advance of the general news, but not so far ahead as some would like to think.

As George F. Hennessy put it the other day, the photoplay situation resembles a pot of molten metal. The dross has risen to the top and it is about to be skimmed off that the pure metal beneath may be reached. It is an apt simile. There is far too much dross and it is high time that the skimmer was brought into use.

In the last ten or twelve years the making of motion pictures has been so profitable, the demand has so well kept pace with the supply, that there never has been a proper housecleaning. Assured of their standing orders, the manufacturers as a whole gave little thought to the quality of their product. If it was a picture and ran a thousand feet it was released. Now a new condition rises. Here and there exchanges are refusing to accept poor product even on standing orders, the advance of the Independent product is causing the Licensed makers more concern than it did two years ago, and while the real open market may yet be far off, there is a growing tendency on the part of the exhibitor to demand better work and this demand can be met only through improved production conditions. These conditions, in turn, cannot be greatly improved until the director is assigned his proper position in the scheme of affairs. Some of those earliest in the business have kept pace with the march of progress. Others are doing no better work today than they did five or six years ago when any stock stage director who would graciously condescend to mingle with the despised motion pictures was regarded as several degrees more important than his employer.

The producer must have a certain license to make minor changes that will facilitate production, but it is the remnant of an antiquated system to permit him to completely change a script to suit his own ideas and convenience. The man who evolved the plot might be supposed to be better able to turn out a homogenous story than the director. It is to be presumed that the editor is better able to edit than the producer.

It means a better chance for the photoplay writer when the change comes, but it means that he must first learn his business before he can hope to sell.

"Similar Theme Used Before."

About twice a week someone wants to know what to do when a script comes back marked as above. Some even want to know why it is not possible to sell it to some editor who has not seen the story. Others declare that it cannot be that the story has been done before; because it is wholly original.

If a story is marked "done before," whether on the film or in fiction, it's a good plan to drop it. You might sell it to some other editor, but the chances are poor. If you do land it, the probabilities that the editor will be told by someone better informed. Then you'll be in bad with one editor and by keeping at it long enough you'll be tabbed by every studio.

Lately we saw a story founded on a newspaper squib that we read some thirty years ago. The writer grew quite peevish when we told him so and opined that he had as good a right as anyone to the idea since it was not copyrighted. That was not the argument. He was trying to sell second hand material as new with a pure food label. It was not legally wrong, but just plain foolish.

Another correspondent wrote that he had a good idea, but it had been done before he could put it on paper. "It happened to one of my friends," he wrote, "so I thought I was safe in taking my time about it." We were able to point to a story nearly four years old that had the same theme.

Just because it's new to you it does not follow that it is new to the editor. Be willing to take his word for it.

That Director's Sheet.

A Denver correspondent writes that he thinks that what a recent correspondent means by a "director's sheet" is the first page, giving the cast of characters and scene plot as well as the synopsis. He says:

> As far as I can learn it is a sheet that has been recommended by some journals as a great help to the director.

It is a help to the director only when the script requires so little changing that the scenes are played about as they are written. The cast should always be given, but the scene plot is only for the advanced writers. It was first shown in print a couple of years ago when Technique of the Photoplay was run in this paper in serial form, though it has been used by us for nearly four years. If that is what a director's sheet is, it is no novelty—nor is it a director's sheet any more than the rest of the script.

We are obliged to our correspondent.

You Never Can Tell.

No author can judge his own work, no matter how cleverly he may appraise the work of another, and so, when that pet script of yours gets turned down in a dozen studios don't declare that there is no intelligence among the studio editors. Be willing to admit that fifty per cent. of the fault lies with the script.

The script of "Collecting the Bill" didn't look very promising to us, but on the screen it is getting lots of laughs while its companion picture, "His Widow," is given second place, though we liked this much the better of the two when we wrote it.

When you get $20 for that corking good story that you wanted to make into two reels and are paid $35 for another not half so good, wait until you see the picture on the screen before you throw rocks at the Editor.

You stand too close to your own work to get a proper perspective. Be willing to trust to the man who stands far off and can get the true values. Because you got $25 for a story that should have brought you $50 do not price everything you send out. We never have priced either a fiction story or photoplay and we never will. In the long run the profit is on our side.

Old Jokes.

The other day a newcomer argued with us that he had a perfect right to use old jokes as the foundation for comedy stories. He pointed out that it was regarded as being within the moral law to use press clippings and he saw no reason why he could not use press jokes.

There are two good reasons. The first of these is that someone is bound to recognize the old joke and mark the writer down as a thief and an unsafe person to deal with. The second reason is that the author who sells a play is required to state over his signature or even under oath that what he is selling is his own creation. The newspaper clipping developed into a story ceases to be a news item and becomes a story. The joke worked into a play remains the joke still. Nothing has been added. Morally the objection is that you are affirming, or swearing to, a falsehood; a crime legally designated as perjury. If the ethical side does not interest; and it generally doesn't interest the man who cannot think for himself, there is the straight business objection that discovery is inevitable and the result will be a blacklisting of the work of the unoriginal thief. In either case it does not pay to work up Joe Miller, nor yet Puck or Judge.

Inquiries.

NOTE—Replies cannot be sent by mail. State name of character. Do not ask for "leads" or "that man." Addresses cannot be given here, but a list of studio addresses will be sent for a stamped and self-addressed envelope. Only questions of general interest will be answered. Replies cannot be repeated.

W. E. B.—The Universal has asked that carbons be sent them of all scripts that were on hand at the time of the fire. Send in your carbons to them.

N. P.—Sorry, but the Universal gives out few of its casts, and it is not easy to obtain the desired information.

M. S.—Watch the synopses for the story of the film you mention. We do not know its title.

J. F. M.—Charles Murray was the convict in "Edwin Masquerades." You may remember him as being of Murray and Mack.

R. P. K.—Read the notice at the top of this column and learn that the list will be sent for a stamped and addressed envelope.

RUBEENA—It wasn't because Flossie C. P. wrote so many letters that she became famous. Remember that. If you land that photoplay let us hear about it, but it is one thing to write them, and a very different one to sell them. We do not identify half-tones. Eugene Savoyard had the lead in "A Leap Year Elopement." You seem to refer to Edison's "The Kid from Klondyke." Miss Reeva Greenwood was the stenographer. We did not care for the poem.

C. F. C.—We do not know why Miss Buckley is with Selig instead of Lubin. If you want to know you'll have to ask her yourself. Jack Pickford is Miss Mary Pickford's brother. He was until recently known as Jack Smith. In April we find Yale Boss cast only for "The Inventor's Sketch," which was released April 4th. The May list is not yet out.

W. R. B.—The "truce" didn't come to hand. Were you "kidding" the Answers Man?

LOIS—It is useless to ask "Is he married?" for we won't tell.

M. T.—Mr. Solter is a director, not an actor, and we do not recall that he ever played a part. Your second question refers to a film too old to be identified now.

X. X. J.—We do not locate the player you mention.

ORIENT—Gus Pixley was the real King and Charles Murray the tramp in "All Hail to the King." How did it happen that you got the full title? All the others call it "Hail to the King." Thanks. Mrs. George Nicholls was the jealous sister in Women of the Desert. She is not a regular member of the company. Miss Florence Hackett was Iris in "The Power of the Cross."

MRS. T.—Please ask questions when you write.

C. H. E.—We cannot answer Pathe questions. Miss Mardin Sais was the stenographer in "The California Oil Crooks."

C. N.—You can obtain information as to the laws from the License Bureau. The other material you can get out of recent issues of the paper. We'd like to help, but writing speeches for school debates is no part of the job of a Union Answers Man.

EXHIBITOR—The film is not licensed. We do not believe that the Edison Talking Pictures can be shown in Independent houses. Mr. Stanton is still with K-B.

B. S.—Sign your name.

B. D.—Please mention names instead of asking for "leading players." Jack Standing and Miss Isobelle Lamon were the leads in "For the Child's Sake."

Joe King had the title part in "Smiling Dan."

R. A. D.—You brought joy to the heart of the K-B Identifier by leaving plenty of margin around your questions for the replies. Ford Sterling had the title part in "The Land Salesman," and ran down the street after Miss Normand (who wouldn't), in "Sleuths at the Floral Parade." The decadent stories to which you (and others) object, are made in the supposition that such "strong" stories are appreciated. Many of the Punch people were transferred to Excelsior when the Punch was dropped. The company you name has no releasing affiliation. It sells where and when it can find a purchaser. You are always welcome to come in with questions. See the news columns for Fred Mace.

E. J. G.—Guy Coombs was Gordon, Henry Hallam, Alden, and Hal Clements, Nelson, in "The Exposure of the Land Swindlers." Give the correct title of that Vitagraph. If you devise your own titles, you cannot expect to be answered out of our card catalogue. We do not name Cines players. George Gebhardt is no longer with Pathe, having gone over to Universal to direct.

MRS. R.—W. J. Shea was George, and Miss Jane Fearnley Cora, in "A Woman's Power."

J. C.—Now we know what the "director's sheet" is. You are giving too much for the money. The proper script consists of a synopsis in less than 250 words, a cast of characters, and the plot of action by scenes, into which are written the necessary leaders and inserts. The so-called Director's Sheet is worse than useless, and the director generally prefers to make out his own property plot. The scene plot can be added, but it is not required, and unless you are pretty certain that your script will be followed exactly, it is useless. The principal use of the scene plot, unless you are writing for some director whose method you know, and who is apt to follow your script, is to give a general idea of the layout. Send a number ten stamped and addressed envelope to the Answers Man.

C. E. G.—Miss Barker died in Los Angeles some weeks ago. Read the paper more closely.

E. R.—See reply to E. J. G. We have not the second cast you ask about.

S. E. P.—Miss Gertrude Bambrick was Marie in "Near to Earth."

Operators' Union Directory, I. A. T. S. E.

NOTICE: Each union is entitled to have its roster of officers, meeting nights, etc., listed here once per year, free of cost. Preserve this list, as it will not be republished. The mail address of the secretary should be included on each list, and the address of regular meeting place, if any.

Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local Union No. 228, I. A. T. S. E., Toledo, O.

President, R. O. Sheats; Vice-President, Carl Koch; Recording Secretary, A. W. Hooper; Financial Secretary, Raymond Fouke; Treasurer, Joe Seligman,; Business Agent, Tom McCormick. Meet at Room 3, Central Labor Union Hall, 314 Cherry Street, first and third Tuesday, 11 P. M. sharp. Address all communications to A. W. Hooper, Willard Apts., 809½ Madison Ave., Toledo, Ohio.

Projection by Reflection.

The Editor of this department has received hundreds of inquiries with regard to a new projection machine which is being exploited in Chicago. The claim is made that this machine has no intermittent movement and no shutter, therefore utilizes the entire light and has a total absence of flicker. We have invited the manufacturers, or rather the inventors (it is not manufactured yet) to submit their machine to this department for examination. They have not done so. We have invited them to give us the number of their patent. They have not done so. Now, I do not purpose to either endorse or condemn this or any other proposition until I have seen it and examined it. When I have done that, I will make my decision and stand by it, taking the blame, if I am wrong. I have, however, in view of the large number of inquiries received, done some investigating. According to a printed description of this machine, the film is beneath the arc lamp and runs horizontally and continuously without any intermittent movement. The projection is accomplished by means of two rocking mirrors, or revolving mirrors which reflect the image of the picture into the objective lens.

Now, before commenting on this kind of a device, let me say that essentially the same thing was patented October 14, 1902, and bears the patent number 711,440, the only difference being that in this case the light was reflected by revolving or rocking mirrors into a prism, which threw the rays into the objective lens at right angles. Aside from this minor detail the method seems to be practically the same as in the machine in question, yet it was discarded as impractical. The best description I have seen of this machine, or at least what seems to be the best, is contained in popular electricity. I reproduce it. Whether the description is accurately correct or not, I could not say, but I presume it is:

> The film, the ordinary kind, travels horizontally. The arc lamp lens is above the film and the ray of light is projected down vertically through the film. Below the film is a mirror so set as to project the beam of light out horizontally to the screen.
> Imagine, now, a single picture moving through the beam of light. The picture is caught by the mirror and thrown on the screen.
> "But," you say, "in that case the image would travel down across the screen as a blur."
>
> True enough, it would, if the mirror remained stationary. But is does not. It rocks. This rocking motion is regulated so accurately that it just corrects for the forward motion of the film and the image of the particular picture we are considering remains stationary for an instant on the screen. If someone were carrying a candle by in front of you and you were attempting, with a mirror, to throw the image of the flame at one point on a large mirror or screen in front of you, you would have to move the mirror in your hand a very little as the candle passed by. In this new projector the principle is the same.
> Another question now immediately arises. "This is but a single picture on the film. How about the next one following right behind it? Does the mirror jump back to pick up this new image? In that case there would be the same period of darkness as with a shutter."
>
> The answer is that there is more than one mirror. They are mounted on a revolving shaft—at a slight angle that gives the rocking motion. As one picture passes through the beam of light it is taken up by one of the mirrors and thrown onto the screen. Passing through, it begins to fade, but immediately behind it comes the next picture, which is taken up by the following mirror and begins to come on the screen as the preceding one begins to grow dim.
> To carry our analogy further, suppose four persons with hand mirrors stand in a circle facing outward. Now suppose a line of several hundred people carrying candles, all held at the same height, to be passing by at uniform speed on one side of the circle. In the background is a large mirror or screen. Now let the circle of mirror holders begin to revolve. The first member of the circle catches the image of the first candle and projects it at one point on the screen just as long as he can by rocking his mirror. But he finally passes out of range. But long before this the second member of the circle has caught the image of the second candle and projected it on top of the first image—and so on around. If the members of the circle could move just fast enough and manipulate their mirrors with mechanical exactness a continuous image of a candle flame could be kept on the screen.
> In other words it is a dissolving effect, only this dissolving is done so rapidly—say about eight times per second, that the blending of one picture into another is scarcely perceptible. When the machine is perfected it is expected that the change from one picture to another will be imperceptible to the eye and that the resulting picture will be flickerless.

You will observe that I have placed a certain clause in italics, and that seems to me to be the splinter in the finger in this particular proposition, so far as I can see it at present. To illustrate what I mean: There is no doubt but what the manipulation of mirrors would accomplish the purpose substantially as set forth. That has been proven long ago, but the fly in the ointment lies in the fact that in order to secure sharpness of definition, the movement of these mirrors must, at all times, be absolutely mechanically correct, and I will have to be shown that this can be done. Supposing you have a 100 foot throw, you take a mirror and reflect a beam of light from your operating room to the screen. Now, move that mirror, that is to say, alter the angle just the least little bit—so little in fact that you can hardly perceive the motion in the mirror, and watch what that light out on the screen does. If these two mirrors could be made to maintain absolute mechanical accuracy in their movement, I really believe the thing could be done, but, as I before said, you will have to show me that any such scheme as this is really practical. Frankly, I do not believe it is, and will not believe it until it has been thoroughly demonstrated to me, and until this demonstration takes place I have no advice to offer concerning the Chicago machine, except be very sure of where you are going to land before you invest money. If the thing is all right—if it is a really practical proposition, let its sponsors present it to this department for examination. If it is found to be what they claim for it, that fact will be set forth fully and completely in this department, since such a projector would be a godsend to the business.

Admitting Managers.

Fairmount, W. Va., writes:

> Enclosed find money order for $2.50 for copy of the Handbook. I am a member of L. U. No. 239, I. A. T. S. E. Members of the American Federation Musicians' Local 507 claim that our union will not amount to much because we do not admit managers to membership. What is your opinion as to this? By close attention to the projection department we have attained excellence in projection. All the boys in Local 239 join in sending their best wishes.

As regards admitting managers to membership, I have had this matter up with International President Shay. His ruling is that when a local union is in process of being formed, managers, who are also operators and can qualify as such in the examination, should be taken in. I do not think I quite agree with brother Shay in this particular, but I fully realize that there are things to be said on both sides; therefore, I simply give you the ruling as given by International President Shay to me.

An Announcement Slide Scheme.

Baltimore, Md., contributes the following idea:

> Here is another new announcement slide scheme. Get half a yard of draftsman's tracing cloth, and a twenty-five cent bottle of Higgins' black drawing ink. Cut the cloth up into small pieces, the size of the slide, and, using the ink, write anything you wish on it with an ordinary pen. The cloth costs about thirty cents. It will make something like forty slides.

All of which is passed along to our readers, with the remark, however, that the cloth would have to be bound up between cover glasses in the usual way.

He Is All Smiles Now.

Mr. R. Stanco, Waterbury, Conn., writes:

> I see Brother Blaine Day, of Sherman, Texas, believes that "everything comes to him who waits." He is right, and I, myself, am all smiles since the Colonial Theater opened, three weeks ago. I have two Power's Six A machines and take current through Hallberg's 35 ampere d. c. economizer. My operating room is 9¼ x 8, 7 feet high. Have vent pipe 14 inches, with an exhaust fan attached. Throw is 81 feet, with a 12½ foot picture projected on a white plaster screen, bordered with black. I think plaster is far better than cloth, as the light does not penetrate and you therefore get the full benefit. Six weeks ago I ordered a Handbook, which I have read over and over again. I would not take ten dollars for my copy if I thought I could not procure another. Its author's photograph is in a frame in my new operating room.

Very glad indeed that you have such a nice plant, friend Stanco. The only criticism I have is that I much prefer a larger vent flue without any fan attached. The trouble with the fan proposition is that, just when a fire occurs, it might be broken down, or, at any rate not running. Its blades would then only serve to obstruct the already too small vent flue.

Burns Midnight Oil.

Mr. Jess Bowman, Orpheum Theater, Racine, Wisconsin, writes, dating his letter at 1 A. M. He says:

> You will doubtless wonder what I am doing writing letters at this time of night when I should be in bed. Well, I am corresponding with some of the boys. I just wrote to Mr. Potter, Springfield, Oregon, about light trouble. I am projecting a 14 foot picture at 84 feet, using 110 volt, d. c. I use two ⅝ cored carbons and about 25 amperes of current. Enclosed find money for another handbook. I sent the first one to a friend in California. I feel that I cannot do without this book, however, so here is the money for another. In this connection I want to say to brother operators that, in the interest of better projection, they should push the handbook along. I have found it to be invaluable.

There are a few who have mildly criticised me saying so much about the handbook, or, rather, publishing so many favorable comments. Well, Brothers, I plead guilty. I shall be guilty some more too. I want to see a copy of that book in every theater in this country, for the very simple reason that there is not a theater where one is not needed. I am trying to bring about better projection, and I firmly believe that the distribution of the handbook will go a long ways towards accomplishing that end, therefore I feel that space used in the department for the purpose of convincing you that the book is a good investment, is space well expended. I can also assure you that I do not publish one tenth of the favorable things said about the book. In fact, brother Bowman himself said a great deal more in his letter than I gave space to. I think, friend Bowman, you would get better results with a ⅝ cored carbon above and a half inch solid below, or if you are not using more than 25 amperes, a half inch solid above and a 7-16 inch, or even a half inch solid below.

A New Idea.

Mr. George Schlesinger, Orpheum Theater, Susanville, California, writes:

> While I myself have not contributed anything in the past, I will endeavor to do so in the future. I have noticed several suggestions offered to prevent condenser breakage. I have not had a broken condenser in three of four years though I have handled several types of condenser cells. The only reason I can offer is that I clean my condenser often and thoroughly, two or three hours before using. I have noticed when cleaning an ordinary lamp chimney that through constant rubbing the glass seems to gather electricity and heat, and after having given the chimney a vigorous rubdown and then when set in the lamp on numerous occasions it would break just as soon as it came in contact with the cold metal. I think that the same result can be expected with a condenser under the same conditions, taking in consideration the sudden changes; first the rubbing; then the cold metal and finally the heat of the arc, should a condenser be put in use right after the cleaning. My observation proved to my own satisfaction in every day experience that a dirty condenser will break more quickly than a clean one. It seems that heat will gather and remain between the dirt and the glass. Whether there is real merit in my observations, I will leave for other operators to decide, anyway I am not going broke buying condensers. I do my own operating, projecting a 19 foot picture at 95 feet, using 35 amperes through a Mercury Arc Rectifier with satisfactory results. Enclosed find check for $2.50 for which please send me your latest edition of the handbook.

Your ideas concerning condenser breakage are certainly new and unique. It is quite true that when a glass is vigorously rubbed there is static electricity generated, though I have never understood that this had anything to do with breakage. I do not think I would care to comment on this proposition at all, but merely pass the idea along to our readers for consideration. I have never myself observed that a dirty lens broke any quicker than a clean one. What has been the observation of our readers in this respect?

Edison Machine-Trouble Remedy.

El Paso, Texas, contributes the following:

> On page 1217, March 22nd issue, I notice Mr. Bryan has trouble similar to that I myself experienced, and remedied as follows: Remove casting which supports the shutter shaft and middle gear. A small slot will be found which fits over one of the braces of the carrier. File out about 1-32 of an inch from the top of the opening. Now put the casting back in place and draw it down as far as possible, while tightening up the small nuts which hold it in place. The effect will be to separate the upper gear somewhat from the middle, so that the vibration in the shutter shaft will not be noticeable. I have one of the new handbooks and would not sell it for five dollars if I could not get another. I have derived much benefit from the different problems submitted in the department. Would like to know a formula for figuring lenses by the back focus instead of the equivalent focus.

Neighbor Bryan will please take notice of the remedy suggested for his trouble. As to a formula for figuring back focus, I do not know of any. The equivalent focus is, however, the back focus plus half the difference between the two factors of the lens. To get the back focus measure the distance between a flat wall and the rear lens, when the image is sharp on the wall.

An Interesting Experiment.

Mr. Albert Caulkins, Carthage, Missouri, submits the following:

> Glad to have your comment on our flicker trouble, noted on page 1334, of March 29th issue. With the three wing shutter making sixteen revolutions a second we have 2880 interruptions of light a minute. 25 cycle current gives us 3000 pulsations on the d. c. side of our rectifier per minute. You can readily see that these two rates of interruptions synchronize very frequently. A three wing shutter is an impossibility as the whole house, side walls, ceiling and floor will seem to dance with light in a most ghostly effect. A two wing shutter to a great extent corrects this as the two rates of interruptions do not synchronize, but the two wing shutter causes a very serious eye strain. We are at the present time arranging to float a storage battery on the line on the d. c. side of the rectifier, and in theory figure that the battery will compensate on the high and low points of the pulsations. We will write you further when we have given this a fair test and in the meantime would be very glad to have you put it up in your department for general discussion. The fact that 25 cycle current as a power proposition is coming into such general use and can be obtained so much cheaper than 60 from the power companies makes its use advisable, if satisfactorily solved.

The experiment you suggest will be very interesting, Neighbor Caulkins, but I am not exactly certain what the effect of connecting in storage battery will be to the battery itself. I shall expect to hear from you as to the result you get, and thank you for having submitted the idea to the department.

A Lockout.

Mr. H. Beisel, Pres., Local Union 157, I. A. T. S. E., Allentown, Pa., writes:

> Every man should be aware of the fact that the Orpheum stage employees, Allentown, Pa., have been locked out for two weeks. The trouble occurred as follows: The Nowin troupe of acrobats came to the Orpheum with a complete set of scenery, but did not carry an I. A. T. S. E. man as required by the international union laws. The Nowin troupe was fair enough to be willing to work with the house scenery, but the Orpheum theater manager insisted we put on the troupe scenery, which would be in violation of our international laws, and subject us to the possibility of a heavy fine or the revocation of our charter. At 11:50 in the morning the Orpheum manager came to the stage and gave us ten minutes to either put on the entire Nowin scenery set or quit. Of course there was nothing to do but refuse, and we were promptly locked out. We therefore, ask the moral support of all union men in this matter. The Lyceum and Lyric theaters employ union stage men, while the Orpheum stage is worked by non-union employees.

I want to compliment Brother Beisel on his very conservative, gentlemanly manner of setting forth this difficulty. The Orpheum manager most certainly took the wrong course in attempting to force the members of 157 to do something which they could not do without working irrepairable injury to themselves. Managers must not demand impossibilities, and to have the Orpheum men to put on that set of scenery would, to all intents and purposes, come under the head of "practical impossibilities." It is one of the duties of the house manager to know that the acts coming to his house are equipped to put their act on without violating either the rules of the house or the laws of the International Union to which the stage men belong.

Went Him One Better.

Covington, Kentucky, contributes the following:

> Noticed, in March 22nd edition, Mr. George J. Eberwine, Marblehead, Ohio, stopped condenser breakage by sawing into his ring mount. I believe I went him one better by sawing my mount in half and using a hinge. This, I think, allows all the expansion necessary. On the thread end, using a pair of tinner's snips, I cut, every inch, a space about ¼ inch wide, and bent these narrow pieces inward. This held the lenses in place. What do you think about a 7 inch condenser lens? If you have the time, take the matter of such a lens up with the manufacturers. I believe it would help projection.

The condenser mount scheme is passed along for consideration, though I believe Marblehead's scheme answers every purpose, and I am not sure but what it answers it better than your own, Covington. As to the seven inch condenser lens, it might be a good scheme, but you will find that a great many 6½ inch lenses are 6¾ by actual measurement, whereas many 7½ lenses will be found to actually measure only 7¼.

A Collection.

Mr. Claude McAdams, Charles Hathaway and Wm. Blackmore, write:

> The undersigned have conceived the following idea, which we sincerely trust will meet with your approval: We believe the majority of operators, as well as theatrical people, in general, would be quite willing to contribute to the flood suffers. Would you be willing to devote a little space, asking all who are willing to send whatever amount they can to you, and let you forward it to the suffers in Ohio and other states? Let us know through the department and we will start it going. Projection is excellent in Muskogee. We organized about a year ago, and are getting along very nicely.

While the idea does you credit, brother, I hardly think it would work out, in that by the time such a collection could be raised, the need for it would very largely have passed. Operators who desire to contribute can do so through the local collections which are being made up all over the country. By the time such a thing could be handled through the Moving Picture World, at least two or three weeks would have elasped, and the relief that is needed is needed immediatly—not in two or three weeks from now.

Mr. H. E. Burns, Martinsburg, West Virginia, writes:

> I have a room 14 x 70, with a 10 foot ceiling. What size picture can I make and what lens will be required? I can put my operating room in the center at the front, and put it as high or as low as I want it, as there will be no ticket office beneath.

The room is not suitable for a moving picture theater, friend Burns. The bottom of your light ray should at least be six feet from the floor, and that would only leave you room for a very small picture. Locate your lens as high as you can get it, and even then it will be impossible to have anything like a good size picture without the heads of the audiences interfering in the light as they come in and go out, particularly down near the front. You could not have more than a 6 x 8 pcture at most. To find the required lens to project that picture, see pages 356 and 357 of the handbook. If you have not that book, then send $2.50 to the Moving Picture World and get it. You will find it worth many times its price, since it answers all such questions as this and hundreds more besides. The elevating of your floor will make no difference concerning the problem which confronts you. You will find, on pages 413 and 414 of the Handbook the slope of the floor dealt with.

Projecting on an Angle.

Cresent Amusement Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., sets forth its problem as follows:

> We are erecting a new theater, 53 x 70 in size. The throw will be 60 feet. Will it be possible to project a picture from the extreme side of the building without too much distortion? Propose to have a two-machine operating room, which will make quite an angle from the further machine to the screen. Owing to construction of building it is necessary to have the operating room on one side of the building.

You will have lots of distortion and a great deal of trouble in getting away from an out-of-focus effect, if you undertake to project 60 feet with a side throw of almost 25. As for me, I would not consider such a proposition. By manipulation of the aperture plates of your machines you may be able to do away with the side keystone effect, but there will still remain the distortion of the picture itself and the out-of-focus effect to deal with. The former cannot be remedied at all, though possibly the latter may be. A heavy side throw is a very bad business indeed.

The First Moving Picture Machine.

Mr. A. S. Clopton, Parsons, Kansas, writes:

> I am writing for information regarding the first motion picture machine, as to when, where and how built. I am a high school student, in my junior year, but in the summer am an operator of motion picture machines, and have chosen for my term essay "The Educational Effect of Moving Pictures," therefore would like to know as much as I can find out about the first machine.

You have sprung a very large proposition, my dear boy. However, by sending $1.25 to the Moving Picture World for a copy of the Motion Picture Annual you can get what is known of this subject under the heading of "History of the Motion Picture," pages 12, 13 and 14, the closing remark of which is: The Edison machine was the first which commercially and practically demonstrated the possibilities of the new invention."

It Is To Laugh.

Mr. Herbert Griffin, of the American Moving Picture Machine Co., New York, writes:

> Something occurred at our office this morning which struck us as being so amusing that possibly you might wish to pass it along to the boys. One of our exhibitor customers came in complaining about the poor service an operator gave him last summer. Said he always had poor light, etc. Somehow the remark was passed that it was possible the man kept his carbons froze too tight. You can imagine the roar that went up when our customer came back with this: "How could his carbons be frozen in such warm weather?" Another time the same man sent his head down to be fixed (Good Heavens, man! what do you mean, Ed.?), because it "cut off the people's feet in some of the pictures." Can you beat that?

Well, Brother Griffin, I thoroughly agree with you that any manager who would make such !.;?* fool breaks, ought to have his head fixed, and I am very glad indeed that you attended to the job.

From Tampa.

Tampa, Fla., writes:

> In my last letter, referring to the metal strips attached to lamp and extending outside of the lamphouse, they are heavily insulated, though I failed to mention it in the letter. We receive excellent film service from the General Film Co., Atlanta, Ga. The reels are always in perfect condition, being "first run," and we try to have them leave our hands the same. We clean our lamps two times a week and our machines every day, which I believe is a plan all operators should follow. Our operating room is 6 x 12 feet with a six foot ceiling. There is a window and a sixteen inch fan. All port holes, windows and doors automatically close by pulling a cord attached to the door. The equipment consists of two Power's Six machines. Seating capacity is 250. The orchestra consists of piano, flute, violin and drum. Operators may tell whether their carbons are set straight or not, as follows: Strike an arc, let it burn a few seconds, pull the switch and open the lamphouse door, glancing at the rear condenser, in which you will see the reflection of the carbon position.

But why do all this when a pin-hole in the back wall of the lamphouse will show you the position constantly, and show it to you much better? As to your reference to a former letter: I wish I could get you boys to give the date of publication when you refer to anything like that. I cannot possibly keep all these things in my head, and to go back and look through perhaps a dozen numbers of the department, takes time. It would accommodate me very much if, when referring to previous letters, you would give the date of their publication.

Picture Bobs.

Lake Crystal, Minn., after informing us that he is new at the business, and not yet far enough advanced to call himself an operator, says:

> I have trouble occasionally with a picture bobbing up and down on the screen. There is no flicker, but once in a while the picture gives quick little jumps on the canvas. Also on the right side of the curtain, the sprocket holes can be seen. I know that the film is not central over the aperture, but do not know how to remedy the trouble.

According to your description of the jumps, they are caused by bad patches going through. There is no remedy for this, except to cut out the stiff patches. As to the other, I cannot advise you, since you have not told me what kind of machine you are using.

Questions Some Statements.

Mr. John Dignam, Pittsburgh, Pa., writes:

> In your reply to McClelland in one of the March numbers, you speak of "cartridge" cakes of oxzone. Are these practical for a model B gas making outfit? McClelland speaks of using two cans of oxzone a night. I do not believe it can be done, since two cans would not dissolve in eighty minutes—or at least that is my experience with the stuff. I would like also to ask if he is correct when he says he can get a 12 foot picture at 40 feet. I cannot do it with a model B. 30 feet is as far as I dare go back, and the picture is about 6 x 8.

As to the oxzone matter, I will have to refer your query to those who use oxzone. I am not familiar with the cartridge oxzone myself. As to the matter of throw, I am going to take issue with you, Brother Dignam. Suppose you are projecting an eight foot picture at 30 feet; move your machine back 10 feet further, or 20 feet further for that matter, take another lens and project the same size picture, and I will wager you cannot tell the difference. If you use the same lens and set back 10 feet further, that would be something else again, since the picture would then be much larger, hence require much more light to make it equal in brilliancy.

Cannot See It.

Mr. Claude Warner, Lowell, Mich., suggests that Washburne can eliminate his rainbow effect by using an Electra carbon above and Bio below. Says that he does and gets fine results. He then continues:

> The two and three wing shutter is as you have described it, if you use the manufacturer's shutters. I have a Motiograph, equipped with an outside shutter. It was very unsatisfactory until I constructed a three wing mica shutter, which gave me a very good picture. But wishing to improve this, I made a two wing shutter, and it is doing grand work. To make a mica shutter, cut the size wings desired and coat the same with a thin coating of blueing. Have the coating barely thick enough so that there will be no travel ghost in the picture. I have been having trouble with my star binding on every other picture. Can you help me?

I cannot see any advantage whatever in the mica shutter, brother Warner. All those things have been tried out and discarded long ago; also I cannot see any reason why using two brands of carbons would remedy the rainbow. As to the star matter, the only thing I can suggest is that you set your geneva up close, as per instruction No. 36, page 257, of the Handbook. Be sure, however, that the star or cam pin is not badly worn. That might account for your trouble. If it were a type of machine having an unprotected geneva movement I would say the star points were bent; but I don't see how that could happen with a Motiograph since all the parts are completely enclosed.

Airdome Screen.

Ohio, inquires concerning projection screens thusly:

> I want some information concerning a screen for an airdome. Will it be necessary to box around the screen, and, if so, how far out should the boxing extend on the sides and top? Am running an Exhibition Model machine, useing 110 volt, 60 cycle current through a Fort Wayne Compensarc, with good results, but my lamp leads heat up considerably. I do not know what amperage I am using, as I have never had the current tested with an ammeter. I have No. 6 wires, with sterling terminals, all connections clean and tight. The compensarc is on the 40 ampere notch. Does the new handbook treat of the airdome operating room? Have a copy of the first issue, but have not got the second one as yet. There are two theaters here both running licensed service, and both projection and attendance is good.

You will find airdomes and airdome screens treated on pages 414 and 415 of the handbook, but there are no special instructions about airdome operating rooms. In fact, I think none are needed, since the airdome operating room is a very simple affair. It can perhaps best be constructed of corrugated iron, about 6 x 8 feet in size, if only one machine is to be used, and, inasmuch as there can be windows opening directly out, there is no special need for a vent flue, though, of course, it may be added. The floor can be covered with cork matting or linoleum for insulation. There is no danger from fire in an airdome, since an audience would hardly become panic stricken in the open air, even if there should be a blaze. The screen should have a flaring hood at the sides and the top, painted dead black inside right up to the edges of the picture, and I advise that this hood be made about ten feet wide. It may be made of lumber, or canvas which can be rolled back, thus reducing the wind pressure when the screen is not in use.

From North Carolina.

Mr. D. A. Morris, Durham, N. C., complains that North Carolina is not more frequently represented in the department. He encloses $2.50 for the handbook and writes as follows:

> Why don't the N. C. operators wake up? I very seldom see anything in the department from our state and am at a loss for the reason, unless it is because the managers out here are robbing the cradles to obtain operators. You very often find operating rooms in this section in charge of fifteen and sixteen year old kids, and the managers do not seem to realize that this is killing their business. I presume this will not be stopped until we have a few more fires and get a few more stringent laws passed. I see Highpoint, N. C., March 22nd issue, page 1217, is having trouble with his shutter gears on an Edison Model B. I am running two Edisons and was bothered with the same thing for something like two weeks. I found the difficulty was caused by one of three things, viz: (a) the pin that holds the mitre gear, (b) the screw that holds the first shutter gear on the shaft, (c) or the screw holding the shutter on the shaft being loose. Either one of these three things will cause the trouble. I hope we shall hear more from North Carolina in the future.

Well Durham, perhaps the rest of the N. C. operators were in the same boat with yourself. You must remember, old man, that you yourself just "woke up." At least I do not remember having heard from you before. As to the fifteen and sixteen year old "operators," I have already expressed my opinion on that kind of a proposition so often that it seems hardly worth while doing it again. North Carolina managers will probably continue to use child labor and endanger the lives of their audiences by hiring incompetent youths to operate their machines until the law makers get busy and pass laws which will put things on the other extreme, and then the managers will set up a terrific howl, forgetting that they themselves, through their penurious short sightedness, have brought the trouble about. As to the shutter trouble, many thanks for your solution, which is passed on to the Highpoint brother.

Rectifier Trouble.

Recently a correspondent wrote that he had trouble starting his mercury arc rectifier. The tube would tip all right, but would stick. I referred the matter to the General Electric Company, requesting them to take the matter up with the brother, and to inform me as to what was the probable reason of the difficulty. I have their reply. It is as follows:

> In regard to Mr. S. Glenn Bossard's trouble with rectifier, at Avon, New York, there are two possible causes: (a) that some dirt has gotten into the shaking magnet, and the plunger sticks. (b) Possibly the tube holder has become bent in such a way that the mercury in the cathode does not join the mercury in the anode when the shaking coil tips the tube to the left, facing the panel. The remedy for either difficulty is obvious.

He Does Not Agree.

Mr. S. A. Kerr, Texarkana, Tex., writes:

> I do not quite agree with the Booneville Article, March 29th issue, as regards lowering the top carbon holder to remedy his double spot with a Standard machine, though I will admit that his theory is partly correct, but it will not put the double spot entirely out of existence. I am myself operating a Standard, 1913 model, machine and have done everything I could with condensers, but the double spot fails to leave altogether. However, I am still holding my record in the two shows where I am employed as chief operator, viz.: showing the best pictures in the South Central States. I have a good manager who gives me the supplies I ask for, but he knows I never ask for things I do not need. With regard to my letter on lamphouse ventilation, published some weeks ago, which did not pass examination, I will have another one soon that is better, and which I trust will meet with your approval.

I am inclined to agree with you, brother, but I think some of this double spot business is due to not giving the lamp enough angle. As to this, I may be in error, but I do not believe it. Some of you fellows who are troubled with a double spot should set your carbons very carefully, as directed on page 209 of the Handbook, so that the condition shown at C, fig. 98, page 209, will be had, and then give your lamp just a little more angle. I am inclined to think that the double spot will thus be eliminated. At any rate, it is worth trying and I would very much like to know what the result is.

From Salt Lake City.

Brother Bob Worthen, Liberty Theater, Salt Lake City, Utah, sends in the following excellent letter:

> In reply to the criticism by Mr. O. J. Chandler, page 1334, of March 29th issue, the article in question did not concern the Liberty Theater, but the new American now being built by the Liberty Theater Company. I agree with Mr. Chandler that a theater of that kind, costing that amount of money, would need an operating room, not a "booth," "coop" or "box." That theater will have an operating room second to none in this part of the country, if not in the entire United States. It will be 12 x 18 x 8, built of steel and reinforced concrete with walls four inches thick. It will be located in the front of the balcony, and the center of the screen will be on a direct line with the lenses. It will have two rooms, one of which will contain nothing but the machines and dissolver. The machines, by the way, will be motor driven Power's No. Six A. This room will contain the switchboard for the machines only. There will be an automatic house light control at the side of each machine. Double throw switches for straight d. c. and motor generator, which will be a 70 volt, 5 k.w set, made by the G. E. Co. The rewind will also be motor driven, with tension device. Generator, washstand, toilet, carbon racks, work bench and tool rack, will be in the smaller room. We are leaving a space three feet high, extending the width of the front wall, and four feet from the floor, open, until the machines are set. A sheet of steel will then be fitted into this opening, the port holes marked and cut, the automatic shutters placed and presto, we are ready for business. And last, but by no means least, there will be two vent flues, one intake located near the floor, and one outlet near the ceiling, the outlet will contain an exhaust fan and each will have 144 square inches of air space. I enclose an invitation we used in a recent get-together meeting with the managers. As you will see, we did not use the name union at all. We did not want the manager to get the idea that the meeting concerned the union in any way. The outcome of it was that every manager in town was present, and the union then showed itself. The managers were well pleased at the way we were starting, and to say that the meeting did more to establish friendly feeling between the operators and managers, and that all present had a rip roaring good time, would be putting it mildly indeed. One of the managers has already commenced making arrangements to return the compliment. It was a grand success in every way. There were talks by Mr. Marcus ot the General Film Co., Mr. Goldstean of the Swason Film Co., and Mr. Madsen of the Mutual Co. Each and every manager expressed himself as being well pleased with the results so far and hoped we would continue the good work. We explained to them our school proposition, and that we intend to make a first class workman out of every man in the local, and that those that we could not make good men of would be dropped. We now have their hearty co-operation and approval. They are now with us, instead of against us. This affair was handled by Brothers Porter, Holliday and (ahem) Yours Truly.

That operating room of yours has many points of excellence. In fact, it might well serve as a model in several respects, but I want to caution you as to one thing: arrange your port shutters as per page 78 of the Handbook and add shutters, arranged the same way, over that intake port, since otherwise, should a fire occur, there would be a very heavy draught through the room and a liability of smoke to show around the cracks of the shutter, thus alarming the audience—the very thing we must guard against. I do not like that fan in the vent flue, and the flue itself is too small. Like as not, should an accident occur, the fans will not be running, hence, would only serve to obstruct the passage of the smoke and fumes. Other than this, I have no other criticism to offer. I want to particularly commend the enterprises of Salt Lake Local Union No. 250. That school idea of yours I have already heartily approved through the department, and this last stunt is also excellent. You got the managers together and showed them that the walls of the union hall were not lined with dynamite cartridges, bowie knives or blunderbusses. The effect will be good—it cannot help but be good, though you must also, in a courteous way, let the managers understand that, while you propose to be fair, and run your organization in the right kind of a way, still, at the same time, you purpose, along reasonable lines, to protect the interests of the Salt Lake operator. Let the Salt Lake managers thoroughly understand that the union purposes itself, to do what is right, and that, also, it expects the Salt Lake managers to do what is right. My compliments to Local Union No. 250, and if everything goes right that organization may expect a visit from the editor of this department some time in July. I will not swear to that, but I think it is likely to come about.

Flickerless Projector.

Mr. Rufus R. Bliss, Park Falls, Wis., very kindly informs us of two different descriptions of the Chicago "flickerless" projector, one in "Popular Mechanics" and one in "Popular Electricity." Many thanks, Brother Bliss, but we have already seen these descriptions. You will find our views concerning this machine set forth elsewhere in the department.

Flicker Trouble.

Lawton, Okla., has difficulty with his machine, which is described thusly:

> I have a bad, bad flicker and am seemingly up against it. Have bought a large list of repairs for my machine, which is only four months old, but their installation does not seem to make any difference. I am using a three-wing shutter on 110 volt, 60 cycle, a. c. I have tried the two winger, but it does not help matters at all. In fact the flicker seems to be worse with the two wing shutter. My pictures were absolutely flickerless up to about two months ago. We run pictures exclusively and have the reputation of running the best in town. My employer said we must keep it up and that it is up to me to get the flicker out some way. He is willing to purchase any repairs I may need, but expects me to deliver the goods.

The repairs you have gotten, Lawton, would not have any bearing on flicker trouble. On pages 219 to 223 of the Handbook you will find an explanation of the reason for flicker. If your machine gave no flicker two months ago, and you have made no change in it, it will not give any now, unless you have: (a) increased the intensity of your light. (b) installed a different screen. Personally, I am inclined to think the latter is what has happened. I believe you have put in a new screen of a semi-reflecting type. If you have not then I do not know what is the matter, provided you are not confusing the term flicker with something else—travel ghost, for instance. One thing, however, I will say, and that is, it is with a two wing shutter you will get a flicker, but with the three wing shutter and 60 cycle, a. c., you are likely to get a flashing of the light when you run the machine a little over normal speed. However, if this was not present two months ago, it ought not to be present now.

Comments on the Films

"THERE'S MUSIC IN THE HAIR" (Vitagraph), April 23.—John Bunny, great musician and social lion, is the rival of Robert McWade, also a musician and a lion. Iolanthe McSwat (Flora Finch) loves famous musicians, but prefers McWade until Bunny proves to her that his rival wears a wig. It is the queer characters that mostly make the offering amusing, but there is a commendable atmosphere of banter in it. R. L. McCardell is author of the script and Larry Trimble the producer.

"THE SECRET MARRIAGE" (Kalem), April 23.—Pictured in interesting backgrounds, this story holds one's attention fairly well, especially after the hero's villain brother, who has secretly wed the heroine, begins to tire of her. The good brother is truly in love with her. The villain is thrown from his horse and killed and the good brother wins the girl. The acting is intelligent and the photography so so. Irene Boyle is the heroine; J. Vincent the good brother and H. Millard the evil brother.

"THE OUTLAW" (Patheplay), April 23.—A substantial, well-made and exciting melodrama. There is a good fire with an explosion in it and scenes showing these have been made as effective as was possible. It is built on a standard plot, is well acted and clearly photographed. A good offering.

"THE MISER'S MILLIONS" (Cines), April 23.—A three-part special, which we have reviewed at length. See page 258, issue of April 19, 1913.

"HIS UNDESIRABLE RELATIVES" (Edison), April 25.—There is amusement rather than loud laughs in this picture as it runs. The relatives, uncles, cousins and aunts of the newly married couple are caricatures in that they each represent characters entertainingly and comically and not truthfully; yet they are characteristic and individual and so very interesting. To the little family they are a nuisance. To get rid of them, the cook suggests that they be told she has smallpox. Every person in the cast deserves mention for some special point. The young couple are played by W. Wadsworth and Bessie Learn. Alice Washburn is the cook; Herbert Prior, the first cousin to call, is followed by Florence Coventry and Margaret Weston and then Uncle Jabez's family comes (Frank Lyon, Lizzie Conway and Edna Flugrath). It is clearly photographed and makes a very fair offering. It was written by Mark Swan and produced by C. T. Williams.

"THE RIVAL SALESMEN" (Essanay), April 23.—A picture that holds the interest. A practical joke sends the two salesmen to a small country town after a supposititious order. One stops to help two women in distress and has the pleasure of seeing his rival, who was ahead of him, discomfited. It has been worked up clearly and convinces fairly well. A big load of hay is upset on the rig of the selfish salesman. John Steppling and Frank Dayton are the rivals. E. H. Calvert is the joker. Beverly Bayne and Clara Smith are the two women in the runaway, and Joseph Allen is the proprietor of the country store. The photography is clear.

"DOLLAR DOWN, DOLLAR A WEEK" (Selig), April 23.—A lighthearted, irresponsible farce that seemed to amuse the audience. It was written and produced by Colin Campbell. Thomas Santschi and Wheeler Oakman play two impecunious lads who borrow their neighbor's furniture and entertain Uncle and Auntie (Eugenie Besserer); but the neighbor (Frank Clark) returns and there is trouble. Photography is clear.

"LOVE, THE WINNER" (Selig), April 23.—On the same reel is this love story in which a rich girl plays waitress in her brother's house and wins the real love of a "fortune hunting" earl. It is a pretty picture, well acted and finely set; but very simple. Highbrows will make fun of it. Winnifred Greenwood is charming as the girl, Harry Lonsdale is good as the earl and Emma Meffert is Winnifred's sister-in-law. Helen Combes is authoress and Lorimer Johnston producer.

"THE END OF THE QUEST" (Lubin), April 25.—A very good two-part feature offering. The story is substantial and, though it has been done before, it is here produced with care, and convinces. The acting, especially that of Edwin August, who has the leading role (that of a young Italian, jilted by a girl on the other side—he follows her to America in order to be near and save her when she wakes up and finds the other man a villain), is most commendable. The photography is clear. A safe feature offering.

"A HEART OF STEEL" (Cines), April 22.—A story about people of wealth in Italy, and of a father who has steeled his heart against an only son who married against his will. The old man loves his little granddaughter and gives his life to save her from a burning building, but even as he dies he refuses to forgive his son. There are some finely made sets in it and the story is clear. The photography is excellent and the fire is effectively handled and made to seem most realistic. It makes a very fair offering.

"A FOUR-FOOTED DETECTIVE" (Eclipse), April 23.—The detective referred to is a well-trained dog who makes a good deal of laughter by his "acting" in the most approved sleuth manner. It is a well-made offering in every way and the audience plainly liked it. The photography is clear.

"A RAG-TIME ROMANCE" (Biograph), April 24.—A laughable farce, taken in Ragtime Land that we've heard about in a song. Whenever it becomes really in ragtime, it is funny; in parts it is very funny. As a whole, it seemed to please the audience. The right music will help a lot.

"THE CURE" (Biograph), April 24.—Some of the funny situations in this picture made even the reviewer laugh. It is a clever bit, fresh, well worked out and amusing. Grace Lewis plays an artist whose father (W. J. Butler) wants her to marry Gus Pixley. She is not peevish at all; but chances to see the gardener (C. H. Mailes) of their neighbor and he is to be "the hero of her masterpiece," a painting. Her romantic idealism is entirely cured by the outcome which the audience seemed to enjoy.

"CITY OF MEXICO" (Essanay), April 24.—We found this picture a very instructive and interesting one. What it shows is wisely chosen and clearly photographed. A valuable offering.

"THE THWARTED PLOT" (Patheplay), April 24.—A story of an attempted crime from the criminal's side of things. All the suspense comes from the question: Will it succeed? The ending has a touch of comedy which makes a laugh. George Gebhardt plays the lead.

"THE DEACON'S DILEMMA" (Essanay), April 25.—Another of the Hickville stories in comedy vein in which the deacon's (Augustus Carney) two small boys make trouble for their parent and for the new minister. The scrape they get into brings about the marriage of the widower deacon to Miss Simpkins, whom he doesn't want. The picture, as far as acting and general conduct goes, is commendable; but it needed a livelier scenario. There was little laughter; but it was watched closely. Joseph Allen is the parson; Mrs. Smith and Ruth Hennessy, his wife and daughter; Eleanor Blanchard is Miss Simpkins.

"OUR FEATHERED FRIENDS" (Patheplay), April 25.—The camera sees better than the eye and teaches more than the average visitor to the country could by himself ever learn. This fine offering gives us clear, close views of mostly nesting birds; the sparrow hawk, reed warbler, rook, robin, blackwing, swan, hen and dipper, a bird shown seeking its provender from a swift stream.

"A TRIP ON THE SEINE, FRANCE" (Patheplay), April 25.—Starting from Rouen, we are carried down the Seine to the sea. Among other things of great interest, we are shown the ruins of the castle of Robert, the Devil, of the Monastery of Wandrill, and of the immense Chateau of Tancarville. It is hand-colored and a very beautiful picture.

"DIAMOND CUT DIAMOND" (Lubin), April 25.—A melodrama; it has a charming heroine, Isabelle Lamon. Some may think it a comedy. James Curwood is the author and it was produced by L. B. Carlton.

"ARABIA TAKES THE HEALTH CURE" (Selig), April 25.—Spectators will remember Arabia as the white trick horse which has been featured in one or two other pictures of late. His tricks are very entertaining in this offering, more so than in the last, and we feel sure that the public will enjoy them. A good-sized audience laughed heartily and was well entertained. The photography is clear. Cris Lane thought up the stunts for the horse to do and the picture was produced by Oscar Eagle.

"THE STRONGER SEX" (Vitagraph), April 25.—A picture that gives entertainment by its dignified conduct, including acting, staging and photography, rather than by its story, which is not without its value, though not strong. It exploits an old situation, in which a young adventuress falls in love with the son of the old man she has married, and it is worked out according to convention till the last scene or two in which the woman (a desperate adventuress with a good character) sacrifices herself to straighten the trouble she has caused. It reflects credit on its authoress, Leah Baird, as a human being; while her acting in the leading role reflects credit on her as an artist. Charles Kent and Courtenay Foote ably support her.

"THE HIGH TIDE OF MISFORTUNE" (Edison), April 25.—This is the tenth of the series, telling the story of "What Happened to Mary." It seemed to hold much more strongly than any of the last few of the series; is, indeed, if one has seen the others, an interesting offering. The backgrounds are fine and include scenes from New York Harbor and from Martha's Vineyard, off Massachusetts. The characters are human enough and are naturally acted. Mary Fuller is, as usual, in the lead, playing Mary. Charles Ogle and Barry O'Moore are the two Craigs; W. Wadsworth, Peart; Mrs. C. J. Williams, Mary's friend, and Augustus Phillips, a schooner captain. The photography is good.

"HOW CHIEF TE BONGA WON HIS BRIDE" (Melies), April 24.—Another of this company's folk-lore stories played by Maori people in New Zealand. It is a simple love story, giving an insight into the lives of these primitive folk and so is instructive and valuable. The great value of such offerings will be most apparent to those who know most. The average spectator looks upon them as something new and different; we have never had anything like them before and they seem to be taking very well. The photography is clear in most of the scenes; in some it is poor.

"A TRIP TO THE WAITOMA CAVES" (Melies), April 24.—A short picture, giving some views of New Zealand back-country and a glimpse or two of a cave. The photography is clear.

"THE SCHOOL PRINCIPAL" (Lubin), April 24.—A pleasant, wholesome story, not at all pretentious, makes this picture one to be commended with pleasure. It uses, rather than deals, with life around a big public school and has a true American flavor that is sure to take well with all kinds of people. It mixes romance and comedy, makes laughter and appeals to the heart; it is beautifully photographed; its scenes are neat and pretty, and it is acted in a convincing and intelligent way. The script was written by Lawrence McCloskey and produced by Arthur Johnson, and both deserve credit The romantic roles are taken by Mr. Johnson (the principal) and Lottie Briscoe, a pretty girl who will be a teacher and some use in the world, but whom the principal has to discharge. The ending (always important in these stories) is freshly thought-up and will please. Clara Lambert, Florence Hackett and Messrs. Daly, H. M. Mitchell, Charles Brandt and Albert Hackett also have good roles.

"THE POWER THAT RULES" (Vitagraph), April 24.—A study of the social bee and of the kind of honey that it makes. There is depth to it and its characters, conceived at first hand, are clearly drawn and stand out sharply. There is a weak man, a woman with a most unpleasant character and a good woman, and, in setting them in their lives, the author has done very little side-stepping from truth and actuality, little mixing of romantic slush. It seems to have much of the same tang as "The House of Mirth." One might find small faults; but it is a big picture, a very desirable offering. Both W. E. Wing, author, and R. S. Sturgeon, producer, have done well. Laura Oakley and Anne Schaefer show up mighty well in the picture's big scene, which is astonishingly strong for a dialogue. George Stanley gives good support. Charles Bennett, Mrs. Hathaway and R. T. Thornby have good roles and are natural. The photography is of high quality.

"LOVE IN THE GHETTO" (Selig), April 24.—A very commendable comedy of Jewish lovers and their parents. Frank Weed's Abe Marks, clothing dealer and father of the girl, made a decided hit with a large audience and deserves praise; he is very amusing. Lillian Logan and Thomas Carrigan, as the lovers, are all that could be asked, and G. L. Cox, as the pawnbroker and father of the boy, is also good. It is ably produced by Oscar Eagle from the clever script of J. E. Hungerford. The photography is clear.

"A SPLENDID SCAPEGRACE" (Edison), April 26.— We count ourselves fortunate in seeing this picture on account of its entertaining story so finely acted. It is one of O. Henry's and Director C. J. Brabin has done well with it. Marc MacDermott is perfect as the splendid scapegrace, Yancey Goree, a ruined aristocrat, a character who has a fine contrast in Charles Ogle's newly-rich mountaineer, who having the man's ancestral home and wanting to become an aristocrat, buys for two hundred dollars his feud with the Coltranes, another old family in the neighborhood. A little weak in its costuming, the picture is kept very convincing by the sincere acting of all concerned. Bigelow Cooper's Judge Coltrane is dignified and full of character. Mrs. Bechtel gives some fine things in the role of the mountaineer's wife; but has made the character a bit too close to the falsely genteel for such a woman. The glory of the picture is the author's: the producer and his cast have worked to make that plain.

"BRONCHO BILLY AND THE RUSTLER'S CHILD" (Essanay), April 26.—This offering will rank high as entertainment solely because of the child's acting, which is wonderfully natural and pleasing. The situation is the same as that used in the "Littlest Rebel" when the child saves her father from the Union officer who is looking for him, the spy. Broncho Billy is the Sheriff. The other qualities of the picture are fine glimpses of horses and the Western scenes usually found in offerings by this company. The photography is clear.

"THE LADY AND THE MOUSE" (Biograph), April 26.—A story of sentiment in which a too easy-going country grocer takes in a tramp found sick at his door. The tramp turns out to be a millionaire and plays the good angel. The picture is clear and commendably made; it stands up well as an offering; but lacks distinction. The "mouse" is utilized to show that Dorothy Gish, the grocer's daughter, is tender hearted. Lionel Barrymore plays the grocer; Kate Toncray, his efficient, Puritanical sister; the two Gish girls, his daughters.

"THE FIGHTING PARSON" (Kalem), April 26.—A war-time picture with some very commendable battle scenes. The Kalem people seem to make these battle pictures more effective with every one they produce; but, in the stories, there is something of sameness. They seem to be all love stories as one would expect, yet they are still romantic and interesting. Guy Coombs and Marguerite Courtot play the romantic roles with Stewart Holmes as the foil. The photography is good.

"A FIGHTING CHANCE" (Vitagraph), April 26.—A picture that stands by its prettiness, in acting, scenes and photography. The story, by J. O. Curwood, is not convincing, as produced. It deals with the somewhat trite proposition of the unmarried woman, a pretty and extragavantly dressed typist, to the neglected and, by comparison, shabby wife of the man who is spending money on her, to dress up and so have "a fighting chance" against herself the stenographer. Miss Anna Stewart plays the typist, Rosemary Theby, the wife in gingham, and Ned Finley, the man. It was directed by Ralph Ince.

"THE BIRTH MARK" (Lubin), April 26.—A story of the West. It is not fresh nor is it acted very convincingly.

"THE COUNT'S WILL" (Patheplay), April 26.—Why do they make so many heroes counts, and why are so many stories set in high society life? The majority seem to prefer homely stories. We are convinced that there was a better offering in this story than the present picture, for it is awkward in its high setting and not convincing. The photography is clear, the acting fair, the conduct, as a whole, very poor. Octavia Handworth and Wilbur Crane have the leads.

"IN THE HAREM OF HASCHEM" (Lubin), April 28.—A dramatic story with a good deal of substantial merit. It deals with Oriental people, as its name implies, and has a first-class setting in the Moorish architecture of a great hostelry in Florida. and in the semi-tropical garden scenes about it. John Ince's swarthy Arab Maisara stands out from the other characters, although nearly all of them are finely acted and natural; he is perfect. Edwin Carew plays Haschem, the caliph whose justice incenses the wild arab Maisara who, to be avenged, gives to him his daughter, Ormi Hawley, so that she can murder him. There are many fine scenes; but weak places are noticeable and at one or two critical moments lacked the right kind of acting. The photography is fair. George Nicholls produced it from the script of E. W. Sargent.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY," April 28.—A number of good items, including a good clear view of the King of Spain and a fair one of the Kaiser. Woodrow Wilson throws the ball to the pitcher at the first game in Washington.

"BLAME THE WIFE" (Biograph), April 28.—A farce that made some laughter. It is played by Dell Henderson as the husband; Kate Toncray, the wife; and many others.

"THE DAYLIGHT BURGLAR" (Biograph), April 28.—This farce is not wholly new, but there is more to it than to the other on this reel and it took better with the audience. Dell Henderson gets home in the morning drunk and finds the burglar at work bright and early. The burglar compels Dell to give up his dress suit and, when the cop comes, turns him over to "the hand of the law." A friend recognizes Dell and then there is an exciting chase after the burglar, who has jumped on a motor cycle.

"WHEN THE RIGHT MAN COMES ALONG" (Edison), April 28.—A picture by Mary Fuller, in which she has the leading role, a young woman broker who apes mannish ways until the "right man comes along" and then, because he will not pay attention to one so much like his man friends, she buys a cascade of lace and a new hat. Pretty soon he proposes. There is something entirely fresh and new about it, and it is this that chiefly holds the interest. Mary Fuller plays a curious character and gets a good deal out of it; it is most creditable to her. As a dramatic production, it is cleverly conceived, but only fairly worked out. Arthur Housman, R. Ridgely and Bliss Milford are her support. The photography is good.

"O'HARA AND THE YOUTHFUL PRODIGAL" (Vitagraph), April 28.—Authors are apt, when they find an especially good vein, to overwork it. There is some evidence of this in the present case, a picture that shows knowledge of the technique of photoplay writing, but lacks spontaneity. The characters are fair, but do not make laughter. Produced by Van Dyke Brooke from the script of W. L. Tremayne, it is played by the same company as appeared in former O'Hara pictures. Jesse Kelly, the youthful prodigal, is the exception.

"THE HAUNTED HOUSE" (Kalem), April 28.—A not very interesting offering, because it is not at all convincing. The audience laughed at what was not intended to be comedy. The photography is excellent.

"ROSES OF YESTERDAY" (Selig), April 28.—A simple story of sentiment, not new but pleasing, makes this picture an acceptable offering. The acting is natural and even; it does a good deal to help the story. The photography is fair in most of the scenes. Jack Nelson plays a young man who has found a fan and returns it to the owner (Caroline Cooke), aunt of a pretty niece (Edna Buryea), with whom he falls in love. The aunt had hoped for a romance of her own; but, in the end, is consoled by Jack's widowered father (L. S. McKee), who meets her by mistake. Produced by H. Kirkland from Maibelle Justice's script.

"HEARTS OF THE FIRST EMPIRE" (Vitagraph), April 28.—A two-part love story in the gorgeous costume of the Court of Napoleon I. The leading romantic roles are taken by Leah Baird, a peasant whom the empress has noticed and taken to the court, and Earle Williams, a hostage from Austria, who falls in love with her. These two escape together after a most pleasingly romantic climax. A large cast of the Vitagraph Company's best players support the story. It doesn't give any "great" moments and, except in the unexpected and startling outcome, is never brilliant; yet it interests and is a very good offering. The lighting and photography are only so so. There is some not wholly unforced comedy in the first reel, but when the story gets under way, it is substantial.

"COUSIN JANE" (Essanay), April 29.—Very pretty scenes will be found in this picture rather than a good story. It would have been hard indeed to have made the picture convincing enough to truly interest us. What its producer has done is to make its scenes distinguished and to fill them with an atmosphere that suggests a good time in a luxurious home of society folks. The dresses, the posing, the background and the out-door pictures are all that could be desired. Beverly Bayne and John Steppling play the leads, well supported by Joseph Allen, Eleanor Blanchard, Frances Mason and Clara Smith, with others. We feel that Miss Bayne, once in a while, in attempting to be very vivacious, misses the impression intended. At times she is her own charming self.

"GRANNY" (Lubin), April 29.—As charming a little picture as one could want to look at. It is a simple story of theatrical life. Such pictures are apt to touch something real in the personal backgrounds of all who have to do with producing them and give the spectator a sense of reality. Surely this offering convinces and we found it very delightful and affecting. Mrs. George B. Walters is wholly charming in the leading role as a one-time star who had for some reason dropped behind, but who comes back to win new success for an old friend and laurels and love for herself. Mrs. Walters is probably one of the best loved old ladies in photoplaydom and in such a part she is thoroughly herself. She is well supported by R. Morris and B. McCullum. The photography is perfect: these Philadelphia pictures are causing comment on this score and deserve all the praise they get. The author is W. G. Clifton, and Barry O'Neil has produced the script, making some lovely scenes and keeping the whole human and clear.

"THE CORMORANT" (Patheplay), April 29.—A clearly photographed, hand-colored film of the "sea raven." Some of the scenes show a cliff where the cormorant builds his nest and others show the tamed bird fishing in the water and bringing the catch to his master.

"HIDDEN LIFE IN SEA WEED" (Patheplay), April 29.—On the same reel is this, showing us some of the small animals that are found around sea weed along the seashore. Some of these creatures are worth seeing.

"THE ORPHAN" (Edison), April 29.—A picture whose chief asset is the prettiness of many of its scenes and especially those in which the orphan herself is the center of interest, for she is a charming little girl, not at all conscious of the camera. The story is full of incompatibilities that take away all belief and make it wholly artificial.

"TWO'S COMPANY, THREE'S A CROWD" (Vitagraph), April 29.—A comedy that made some laughter, especially at its clever ending, but that is hardly believable enough to be amusing as a whole. It is well acted by E. K. Lincoln, James Lackaye and Anna Stewart, in the leading roles. Hughie Mack made some laughter by his acting at one point. Ralph Ince produced it from the script of Marguerite Bertsch.

"STREET SCENES, YOKOHAMA, JAPAN" (Vitagraph), April 29.—This short offering is like a post card sent home by the travelers. It is fairly clear.

"HIRAM BUYS AN AUTO" (Selig), April 29.—A burlesque farce in which a farmer buys and runs an automobile. It is a very well made picture of its kind and brought out a good deal of hearty laughter. Owen Campbell is producer and author. Thomas Santschi and Lillian Heyward are the farmer and his wife. Bessie Eyton is their girl. The photography is of good clear quality.

"CHINESE SCENES" (Selig), April 29.—A very interesting picture of substantial length clearly photographed. It was taken in Macao, a sea port, founded by the Portuguese.

Independent

"ROSIE'S REVENGE" (Thanhouser), April 27.—A very commendable effort at comedy, in which Riley Chamberlain plays the part of an old maid stenographer and cook. Her employer discharges her from the first place (she was "fired" the subtitle very slangily stated), and ten years later is cook in his sweetheart's home. The manner in which Rosie obtains her revenge by doctoring the broker's food is very funny and will bring several laughs from the average audience.

"THE WOMAN HATER'S DEFEAT" (Reliance), April 26.—In this, E. P. Sullivan appears as the woman hater. His nephew and the latter's fiancee bring the hard-hearted uncle to time. The story is not a very entertaining one, however, as the plot is very slight.

"PAST REDEMPTION" (Kay-Bee), May 9.—The first reel of this two-reel offering shows Jim and his daughter Nell running a gambling house and saloon. The new minister arrives and an interesting fight on the liquor question results. Later Jim plies his trade in a cave. He is traced here, but the girl saves him. The attempt to hang the girl seemed somewhat overdrawn, though well enough acted. The last reel shows the minister befriending the girl and the usual village gossip results. She finally goes out on the desert and dies before help reaches her. Good photography and good acting, but not an entirely new story.

"THE BLACK SMALLPOX SCARE" (Powers), May 7.—A country folk farce that is likely to make a number of laughs, especially from the gallery, but it is very light. Dad and the rival lover, both of whom have been "hitting the bottle," have their faces painted and then are quarantined. The hero and the girl manage to get married out of it. It is played in a lively, amusing way.

"BOZO ARRIVES" (Powers), May 9.—A cowboy tramp has a comedy dream which gives him a sentimental experience and then comes the joke at the end when the love story is cut short by his awakening. Played by George Gebhart, it has much of the dashing, free atmosphere of the plains and hills. A very fair offering.

"THE COUNTRY COUSIN" (Nestor), May 5.—A light comedy idea fairly well presented. Eddie's stock falls greatly when the girls learn that he is not to inherit the fortune after all. But the country girl remains true and eventually gets Eddie and his fortune also. Some good outdoor scenes in this, which has some of the elements of smart comedy.

"THE AWAKENING OF PAPITA" (Nestor), May 7.—Papita plans the abduction of her rival, but later repents and saves the girl at the cost of her own life. The scenes in this are handled poorly, the shot from which Papita was supposed to die being fired directly at the floor. The photography is better than the story in this offering.

"YOUTH AND JEALOUSY" (American), May 10.—In this picture the jealous rival sends messages to the successful lover, telling him the girl is untrue. The truth comes out in the end and all is well. The story is not very strong, though the photography is good.

"ALGY ON THE FORCE" (Keystone), May 5.—Fred Mace as Algy, on the police force, gets tangled up and arrests the new mayor. There is some amusement in this

"HIS UPS AND DOWNS" (Keystone), May 5.—Schnitzler goes up in an airship, and the resulting scenes are novel enough to be very entertaining.

"LIFE IN SUDAN" (Champion), April 28.—A scenic half reel, giving entertaining glimpses of native life in Sudan, a land of palm trees and odd train service.

"THE CLOWN HERO" (Champion), April 28.—A children's phantasy, which will please the little folks very much. The children dream that one of the kittens has become a lion and that the clown doll has become a live hero. On same reel with above. A nice fairy tale.

"THE RETURN OF CRIME" (Eclair), April 30.—This two-reel offering contains some exceptionally good photography, but its story is somewhat involved and the scenes lack clearness. The three lapses of time, one of them covering 20 years, are largely responsible for this. The acting is commendable and centers about the life of a prominent surgeon, who sees an entire generation grow up around him. He is falsely accused of a murder and his son takes his place in the death cell while he goes to perform an operation on a woman he discovers to be his wife. Making a drug fiend of the leading character did not add to its appeal. While faulty in construction the film story has strong situations at times.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY No. 59" (Universal), April 23.—Scenes of the J. Pierpont Morgan funeral lead this number, which includes pictures of a marathon race in the mud at Washington, a trolley accident at Baltimore, a stock show in Oklahoma, a queer railroad in Ireland, etc.

"THE WORD OF JOSE" (Frontier), May 1.—Good photography and an entertaining story of the picturesque Southwest, combine to make this an attractive offering. The horsethief throws suspicion on Jose, but the girl heroine saves him as they struggle in hand to hand conflict on a cliff. The scenic effects are very good. Better than the average offering of its type.

"PEARL AS A DETECTIVE" (Crystal), May 4.—Pearl is more amusing than honest in the role of detective, as she deliberately steals the fascinating Chester away from her lady client and then charges her $155 for her work. Good comedy.

"O. WHISKERS!" (Crystal), May 4.—Baldwin has some sad experiences after shaving his abundant whiskers and losing his wig. His lady friends do not recognize him. Fairly amusing. On same reel with above.

"THE KEY" (Eclair), May 14.—A two-reel production telling a simple but well-acted story, which is consistent throughout and generally better than some more ambitious undertakings. A little girl becomes locked in an old-fashioned safety vault and the obstacle presented is to get her out, the key being gone. Everything is tried by the excited father, played by Alec Francis. An expert safe cracker is brought from the penitentiary, but succeeds only in drilling a hole through the door. At last the key turns up, the bookkeeper having taken it away from the son, who had stolen it in order to obtain money for his mother, living separately from her husband. This makes quite a story, though it is built around a stock situation.

"THE RISE OF OFFICER 174" (Imp.), May 1.—Here is a two-reel story, by W. MacNamara, which not only shows a brisk, modern episode in the management of city affairs, but also gives an insight into the manner in which gambling dens are actually raided by the police. We would have shortened the scenes leading up to the first incident somewhat, as it really makes the film tell two complete stories, but the interest does not drag anywhere after the real business begins. The conference of the crooks in the Tenderloin and their plans to get the new chief, played by King Baggot, out of the way was convincing The raid of the garmbling rooms was true to life and later, where the girl makes use of the dictagraph, the attention is still held strongly. This is one of the best films of the kind that has been exhibited.

"THE ROSARY" (Rex), May 4.—If you know of anyone sceptical about the artistic possibilities of the moving pictures, tell him to see this film. It reprints the familiar song, "The Rosary," verse by verse, and tells a story that will delight observers everywhere. The close is tender and effective, and tears spring to the eyes as the returning soldier finds his sweetheart has become a nun. The scenes are pictured within a rosaryl and the film tints of blue and orange are very pleasing. Phillips Smalley enacts the leading role. A very desirable offering.

"BEWITCHED MATCHES" (Eclair), May 4.—A fantastic story, in which an old witch causes Schmoker's matches to form all sorts of curious and entertaining things, including a windmill, skeleton, etc.

"THE SALAMANDER" (Eclair), May 4.—This, on same reel with above, pictures the manners and customs of the salamander, a lizard-like reptile somewhat resembling the frog. Not a very beautiful creature at close range.

"THE VENGEANCE OF THE SKYSTONE" (Bison), May 3.—A two-reel story of the Hopi Indians, which adheres rather close to Indian customs and superstitions and furnishes a relief from the familiar warfare between the soldiers and rebellious tribes. Juan, an educated Indian, is accused of having stolen the "skystone" and exiled temporarily from his people. His rival, fearing the bad influence of the stone which he really stole himself, attempts to hide it. In doing so he is struck by a rattler, this being pictured rather sensationally. Juan saves a white girl in a lively runaway and there are other features which make the offering a pleasing variation of the Western type.

"A FAIR EXCHANGE" (Victor), May 16.—This two-reel offering is one that lingers pleasantly in the memory, because of its strong character work, original plot and the marked individuality of the players. The son of the rich man, played by James Kirkwood, falls in love with the fickle sister, whom his father dislikes. Later he learns to love the other sister, who mends his coat and leaves money in his room after his father has cast him out. All ends happily, except for the fickle sister, who married a thieving clerk. They sail for Europe, but not with the stolen money, as they supposed, having taken along the wrong suit case. A good live story, with good photography throughout.

"MISS NOBODY" (Nestor), May 9.—Miss Nobody, daughter of the ranchman, gets a new dress and blossoms out wonderfully. The wealthy landowner and the doctor's nephew aspire to her hand. She feigns illness and on the day of her wedding with the wealthy landowner exhibits her countenance, marred by scars. The landowner offers the young hero a thousand dollars to marry her, which is gladly accepted, for the disfigurement of course is not genuine. Not a new idea, but well worked out and fairly amusing.

"AN EASTERN CYCLONE AT BLUFF RANCH" (Frontier), May 3.—This film comedy has not much to recommend it. It attempts to get humor out of drunkenness, which is almost impossible, especially when the imbiber is a woman, as in this instance. We think this is off the key simply as the result of accident, as the Frontier people have turned out some very passable comedies.

"THE WHIM OF DESTINY" (Majestic), April 29.—This is quite a yarn, pictured in the Southern mountains, where moonshiners abound, The hero is a detective, who has to arrest the father of the girl he loves. But the moonshiners take them both for revenue officers and they join forces in a lively gun fight. Not a powerful offering, but a clear-cut story which holds the attention well.

"THE BROTHERS" (American) May 5.—The photography in this film is again better than the story. One of the brothers is good and the other bad. They fall in love with two pretty Mexican girls. The plot lacks action and does not hold the interest strongly enough.

"THE CHILDREN OF ST. ANNE" (Majestic), May 6.—A two-reel story by Forrest Halsey. The first reel, picturing the barefooted boy and girl in the woods, is very pretty and gets hold of the observer nicely. The second reel, however, where the boy has gone to the city to study art, does not quite come up to expectations. The changes in Jacques' station are too abrupt, giving a "set" effect to the scenes and shattering the element of suspense. The photography is clear and smooth and the acting very capable, but the story does not develop with the strength we anticipated.

"THE GOOD WITHIN" (Reliance), May 3.—A film story showing the lengths to which a jealous woman will sometimes go when she sees her rival outdistancing her. Paula allows everyone to think Will stole the famous Nelson diamond from the coronet until he seems likely to be imprisoned for theft, when she relents and tells where the gem is hidden. There is some interesting double exposure work in the latter part of this reel. The story is well acted and fairly strong.

"BROTHERS ALL" (Excelsior), May 5.— This is a story of a young preacher who goes into the Big Tree parish and has to fight his way to the good will of the people. He whips a bully and in the latter part of the reel knocks out three men in a prize fight. The character work is not very strong and for this reason the story does not get hold as it might. The plot also lacks freshness.

"A CHILD OF WAR" (Kaybee), May 30.—A two-reel war story, featuring a pretty little girl, who becomes lost in the woods near which fighting is going on. The plot and the battle scenes merge together nicely, which is desirable in this sort of production. The child's own father shoots her by mistake, while on sentry duty, and deserts his post to take her home. This is a forced situation, as is the following where he is to die for leaving his post. But, putting aside the improbability of the situation. it is worked out appealingly and makes a good story. The grateful little girl sends the general her doll because he condoned her father's offense. A good offering.

"HUMAN KINDNESS" (American), May 8.—A pretty story, with a slight plot, in which an old gardener is discharged as being "useless." The girl on an adjoining estate, to whom he had given some flowers, befriends him by giving him employment, so that he and his aged wife may have an income. The scenes in this are attractive and the photography good, but the story is not of exceptional interest. Pauline Bush makes a welcome reappearance in this picture, after her recent illness.

"THE GIRL DETECTIVE'S RUSE" (Thanhouser), April 29.—The best detective story recently shown, with a girl in the leading part. The girl impersonates a woman counterfeiter, about to be released from prison. A member of the gang meets her with an automobile and she is taken to their apartments. All goes well till the woman's husband escapes from prison and appears on the scene. The girl's escape contains a genuine thrill. A good release.

"THEIR FIRST EXECUTION" (Keystone), May 15.—Once more this intrepid company of burlesquers has chosen a rather dubious subject for humor, an electrocution. The subject is treated in such a light, ridiculous fashion that we forget its serious side and, while this is not uproariously funny, there are some really amusing situations in the film. It will please a certain class of picture goers.

"THE WIDOW'S STRATEGM" (Thanhouser), May 2.—Good photography helps along this light, summer story. The rich young widow attracts the heroine's lover, but when she sees that this will break the girl's heart, she proceeds to discourage the young man's attentions. To do this she dresses as a frump and succeeds in disillusionizing him. A clever little plot, well acted and artistically pictured. A pleasing offering.

"EXPRESS, C. O. D." (Thanhouser), May 4.—The widow quarrels with the express agent. who is in love with her. She refuses to accept the box of rabbits sent her C. O. D. for her child. The rabbits multiply in the express company's office and finally, when the widow and the agent bury the hatchet, they get married and start a rabbit farm. The idea in this is amusing and parallels that in a well known short story, entitled "Pigs Is Pigs," by Ellis Parker Butler.

"AN EYE FOR AN EYE" (Nestor), May 16.—Another desert story, this time with a tragic ending. The man shot by his partner writes a message in blood on his white horse. Help comes and he lives to denounce his assassin. The photography is good and the picture very good of its kind.

"THE VIOLET BRIDE" (Powers), May 14.—Here is a story which develops into one of power, chiefly by reason of the strong acting of Edwin August. Particularly may this be said of the scene wherein he denounces his mother for having drawn him into an unhappy marriage resulting in a tragedy on the wedding day. Edith Bostwick is good as the bride and so is Jeanie MacPherson as the sweetheart.

"THE TARANTULA" (Powers), May 16.—Jeanie MacPherson has the role of a mining camp follower. She is known as the Tarantula; it is through a tarantula that she meets her death. The story is not strong, although there is a moment of suspense when she discovers the spider on her breast.

"IN THE SECRET SERVICE" (Bison), May 17.—Mr. McRae gives us here a good picture in two reels. There is some fighting and plenty of action, with a dramatic ending.

"THE TURN OF THE TIDE" (Rex), May 1.—Robert Leonard takes the role of a burly smashing bully of a fisherman, who is reformed through the influence of a woman (Margarita Fisher). The story will interest. The best bit is where he is assailed after the regeneration and curbs his old instinct to fight at the drop of a hat. The photography is excellent, although it may be a bit overtinted at times. Also there are fine seashore backgrounds.

"THE WHOLE TRUTH" (Imp), May 8.—There is a rich vein of comedy running through this picture which in a "wise" house will be heartily enjoyed. Miss Jane Gail has the role of a charmer who lures to a restaurant and separates from his salary a clerk who has been instructed by his wife to bring home immediately all his money. Probably the majority of the men in any audience will be more inclined to sympathize with and to pity rather than to condemn the clerk—he was human. Miss Gail's work will interest the women as well as the men; it is splendid. So also is that of George L. Tucker, who plays the husband. Howard Crampton as the policeman and the woman who plays the wife add to the charm of the play.

"THE INDIAN'S SECRET" (Bison), May 6.— Another of the series of Lincoln Carter pictures. It is pronounced melodrama. There are good exteriors—fine backgrounds—and well photographed. There is an Indian fight which will please those who like this sort of thing, but the story does not vary from the ordinary Western.

"A HOUSE DIVIDED" (Solax), April 30—Farce comedy portraying the troubles of a married couple. A lawyer draws up articles of separation, which are shown on the screen duly signed. Then the husband and wife sign their names. There is a stenographer in this picture who will cause more rage than laughter; she chews gum and operates in a style peculiarly her own. The picture will make some fun in some houses.

"THE SILVER CROSS" (Solax), May 2.—There is in this film a "picture license." It is where the mother of the man, home after an absence of ten years, is drawn to his side to save him from impending danger through the spirit of a silver cross she had given him when he went away. It is an impossibility, of course, but it serves to create one of the situations in a play that is not strong.

"HER FIRST LOVE AFFAIR" (Great Northern), May 10.—A rather unsatisfactory picture; there is a mild flirtation and an elopement.

"CROSSED SWORDS" (Great Northern), April 26.—This is a two-reel special. There is a thrilling rescue of a woman who has fallen from the top of a castle and in some unaccountable way has secured a grip on a window many feet below. She is lowered to the moat by an officer let down on a rope. The story seems to have been written around an army post. While the settings are excellent and the photography likewise there is an absence of heart interest.

KINEMACOLOR CURRENT ECONOMY.

As the result of many months of most laborious and expensive research work, conducted in both Mr. Urban's London laboratories and those of the American company at Whitestone, L. I., a discovery has been made which, beyond all doubt, marks the greatest single step ever made in the advancement of Kinemacolor.

In the Kinemacolor process, owing to the necessity of projecting the light through the colored filters, the absorption of the light rays by the filters has increased many fold the difficulties with which the early producers of black and whites had to contend.

The problem has been, in effect, to find a transparent color ingredient, and it is the discovery of this remarkable ingredient (or, rather, combination of ingredients) its application to the Kinemacolor filter and the remarkable results which have been attained in exhaustive demonstrations that makes the step of such great importance.

This ingredient, while acting as a non-absorbent of light rays, gives full effect to all color values. As a consequence of this new invention, the Kinemacolor pictures are now projected with practically the same amperage required for good black and whites. Formerly Kinemacolor required fully 100 amperes, but the new light filter cuts this figure almost in half.

The Kinemacolor factories at Whitestone are working overtime, turning out the new filters as fast as possible, and within a week or ten days they will be installed on every Kinemacolor machine in the East—to the great saving of exhibitors using the Kinemacolor. It is estimated that the saving on the ten "Balkan War and Panama Canal" shows alone will amount to a considerable sum—probably enough to pay the salaries of the lecturers.

NEW TRADE LITERATURE ON VENTILATION.

The Mechanical Appliance Co., Milwaukee, has just published Booklet No. 151 for distribution. This booklet describes Watson Motor-driven Ventilating Fans made in sizes from 18 inch to 42 inch, for direct current and alternating current, single and polyphase circuits. Methods of installation are illustrated and a chart is included for determining fan capacity required for rooms of various sizes and used for various purposes, as moving picture theaters, garages, billiard parlors, restaurants, schools, etc.

"The Scarlet Letter" (Kinemacolor).

By George Blaisdell.

THIS old but ever young story of Nathaniel Hawthorne has been put on the screen by Kinemacolor, and in a manner befitting the dignity of this great American novel. David Miles is the producer. He has gone to great pains to create the early colonial atmosphere; he has succeeded, especially in his backgrounds, his settings and his costumes. Certain changes are made from the book, as necessarily must be made. For instance, the opening instead of in Boston, with Hester condemned to wear the blazing scarlet A, is back in England. It shows Hester in the garden of her home, with her father; and then the introduction of the old medico Roger Chillingworth, who asks for and receives from the father the hand of Hester. One of the great charms of the book is the delineation of the character of little Pearl. Here the elflike little one is shown, but is not featured.

Scene from "The Scarlet Letter" (Kinemacolor).

There are two scenes that particularly will stir the emotions. These are where the pastor, attracted to the young wife on sight, reproaches her for avoiding him, "when thou knowest thy husband was lost at sea"; and Hester, hesitating, responds to the desire of her heart and flies to his arms. Again, years later, when Hester sees the minister dying slowly under the torturing of his conscience and the evil influence of old Chillingworth, she entreats him to go with her and begin life over again—away from the scarlet letter, away from Chillingworth, away from the shame and suffering of the past seven years; as Dimmesdale takes Hester in his arms after all the penance they have undergone one feels that this couple have been more sinned against than sinning, that they have earned the right to have peace, to be by themselves.

Scene from "The Scarlet Letter" (Kinemacolor).

There is realism when the Indians rescue the shipwrecked Chillingsworth. He is washed ashore lashed to a mast, the waves driving over him. Again where Hester tells Dimmesdale "Fear not—I'll not betray thee"; where the old man confronts Hester, with babe in arms, and in the secrecy of a cell warns her to tell no one she had ever called him husband; where the minister appeals to Hester, "Give us the man's name and thou shalt go free"; where the minister, conscience-stricken, stands in the pillory and bares his seared breast, not knowing that old Roger is looking on; and where the minister, after Hester had made all plans for their escape —plans which the old man had upset—falls by the pillory and dies in Hester's arms. There are some beautiful scenes in these three short reels. One that stands out is of Hester, her troubles behind her, standing by the rail of a ship outward bound. Little Pearl is by her side. The photography throughout is excellent.

Linda Griffith gives us a splendid portrayal of Hester Prynne. She is the embodiment of Hawthorne's creation—the high type of woman who under a calm exterior conceals her suffering as she conceals her love. Her work in this drama will rank with the best we have. Charles Perly carries the role of the Rev. Arthur Dimmesdale. He looks the clergyman, the clergyman of bounding red blood, full of the joy of living; his delineation of the workings of a Puritan conscience is carried through in craftsmanlike manner, convincingly. M. J. MacQuarrie is a strong Roger Chillingworth. His work completes that of his two associates. There is a competent cast and a large one. A word of praise is due for the excellent stagecraft, especially in the pillory scene. "The Scarlet Letter" will make wide appeal to thoughtful persons. Also it will visualize in artistic manner some of the best-known characters in American fiction.

"The Perils of the Past" (Gaumont).

THE perils of the past in this case appear to be the usual convict's secret; that of keeping from the world the fact that he has served a term behind prison bars. The convict managed to keep his secret through the greater part, and after everybody knew it he got along much better than he did before. The dominant idea of the piece hinges upon an ex-convict's willingness to serve another term in prison for another's deed, in order not to disgrace his sister who had married well. There is a strong web of circumstantial evidence worked into the plot that holds the interest as far as it goes, but it is cleared up eventually, leaving the last scenes to be devoted to the pursuit of the guilty parties. This pursuit ends in the fugitive automobile running over a precipice and being dashed to pieces below. The wreck of the auto is the only sensational incident of any in the piece, and a spectator could not reasonably expect to see more than one automobile destroyed per picture.

Scene from "The Perils of the Past" (Gaumont).

As an example of motion picture technique the picture is admirably done. The acting is of the very highest order; the photography is excellent and the scenes are all well chosen and artistic. Altogether it is well up to standard and will easily hold its own with the average run of films. If there is any fault to find it is in the story itself. To our way of thinking the Gaumont Company has made it a snappy picture by condensation from the original five reels.

"In Slavery Days" (Rex)

By George Blaisdell.

HERE is a fine convincing story of ante-bellum times. Otis Turner produces the picture, the script of which was written by James Dayton of the Universal staff. There are many good situations, and they are all well handled. One of the surprises in this California picture is the sight of an old stern-wheeled steamboat, which somehow we associate with eastern waters. This old craft, which is said to have been found on the Sacramento River, furnishes the background for one of the most effective bits in the two reels. In keeping with the period of the boat are the costumes and the settings. The photography is good.

It is possible many will doubt that the mother of an eighteen-months-old child, even though the parent be blind, can be imposed on in a case of substitution; they will be inclined to believe that the natural keenness of a blind person, strengthened by the interest of mother love, even following an illness, would detect a difference in voice if not in figure or features. And again three years is a long time for a planter to remain in Europe on a business trip. However, a scenario writer is entitled to take some liberties, if these be liberties, in these days.

Scene from "In Slavery Days" (Rex).

The story is of an octoroon who, while caring for the child of the Warrens in the absence of the head of the family, returns to the family mansion her own child in place of the daughter of the house. The children grow up in this reversed fashion. Carlotta, the unconsciously usurping slave girl, becomes the absolute mistress of Tennessee; she is headstrong, willful. When the girls are grown to young womanhood Robert Thornton, betrothed in childhood to the daughter of the house, returns. He meets Tennessee and is attracted to her. Carlotta, piqued, says Tennessee is a friend. Later, when the attachment is growing, Robert repudiates the early arrangement. Carlotta then reveals to Robert the relationship. The young man is stunned. Carlotta then violates a rule of her house and sells Tennessee, who is taken away down river on a steamboat. Sue, the octoroon, conscience-stricken, tells the parents of her deception. Robert starts after the steamboat. There is a hard ride to the waterfront, where another steamboat is started in pursuit. In the meantime Carlotta goes to the cabin of her mother, and in a quarrel the hut is set on fire and both are burned. On the steamer Tennessee is fighting against the advances of the slave buyer. Robert, on the pursuing craft, sees the danger of the girl. When the steamer makes a landing he ties his craft alongside and rescues the girl. Of course, a wedding follows.

The part of Robert is taken by Robert Leonard; it is a fine portrayal he gives us. Jane Ainslee is the blind mother; she is convincing in a difficult part. Margarita Fischer as Tennessee, Edna Maison as Carlotta, and Iva Shepard as Sue all are worthy of special mention. "In Slavery Days" is a picture well above the average.

COLORED LUBIN COMEDIES.

Director Hotaling Produces Some Startlingly Realistic Zulu Pictures at Jacksonville, Fla.

Not to be outdone by George O. Nicholls and his Arabian dramas, Arthur D. Hotaling, of the comedy section of the Lubin Company, went in for novelties and produced three Zulu comedies just before he left Jacksonville.

For the last couple of years Mr. Hotaling and Frank Montgomery, "The Motion Picture Man," have been having fun with their colored fellow citizens trying to hire a negro driver for a supposed grave-robbing expedition, but lately the darkies have been having their turn and unconsciously avenged the wrongs of their fellows.

Several negro actors were taken down from New York for the leading parts, but the extras were procured in Jacksonville and it was a matter of several days before they could be made to realize that when they were told to report at half past eight Monday it did not mean Thursday afternoon, but at last the troupe was gathered together and the large yard of the Southern studio was converted into an African village with the aid of several truck loads of palms, some of them being brought in twenty miles from the beach. The supers were willing enough—but dense, and Mr. Hotaling declared that it would be possible to do four times as much work with white extras. The members of the regular company were ranged along the side lines to keep the colored players inside the field of the camera and even then it required repeated rehearsals to drill an idea of the simple business into their heads. But the results justify the trouble and three capital comedies are the result.

The accompanying photographs show A. D. Hotaling, George Reehm and Walter Stull conducting their temporary school of acting.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs.

By George Blaisdell.

THE Screen Club ball was late in breaking up. That is, the aftermath—if it so may be described—at the clubhouse, where many of the members gathered for breakfast and a social hour. The rooms were well filled when the writer decided at 6:30 to make a getaway. As he passed down the stairway he saw resting on the settee just inside the entrance "Little Mary," a trifle tired looking, perhaps, but undoubtedly happy. Escorted by Owen Moore, she was awaiting the car that was to take her home. It had been a busy day and evening for her. There had been a matinee and an evening performance of "The Good Little Devil," and then the grand march, which she had led with President Baggot. Following that, Miss Pickford had been the center of a never-lessening group of admirers. At 5:30 she was strenuously endeavoring to get her party together, remarking that as she corralled one, another would disappear. Awaiting her machine "Little Mary" talked most entertainingly of some of her sisters of the screen and in keenly discriminating manner of pictures generally.

Albert Bigelow Paine, the author of the absorbingly interesting 1700-page biography of Mark Twain, was a recent visitor at the Kinemacolor exhibition room at 1600 Broadway. For the benefit of Mr. Paine, who for the last few years of the life of the great humorist was his constant companion, an old black and white film showing Mr. Clemens in familiar poses was thrown on the screen. Mr. Paine expressed his regret that during his association with this marvelous man he had not possessed a motion picture camera that he might have secured for coming generations an adequate physical portrayal of the master. Nevertheless, it is unnecessary to point out that the bit of film in the possession of the Kinemacolor company is priceless.

Word comes from Jacksonville that Sidney Olcott, director of the Gene Gauntier Feature Players, was on Sunday, April 27, operated on for appendicitis. He is said to be doing finely. Jack J. Clark is in charge of the company during Mr. Olcott's illness. The company had planned to be back in New York by May 10, as most of the work had been completed. The season has been very successful. The many friends of "Sid" will wish him a speedy convalescence and a complete restoration to health.

On Saturday, April 26, there were inscribed on the registry book of the Screen Club the names of sixty-six members and nineteen guests. Surely this is indicative of healthy interest on the part of the membership.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Brenon and Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Fleckles sail on Saturday, May 3, on the Olympic for a European trip. Mr. Fleckles is the Chicago manager of the Laemmle Film Service. Mr. Brenon is the well-known Imp dramatic director. While away he will visit London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Rome, Turin and Naples. It is Mr. Brenon's intention to visit all the principal Continental studios. He'll have a lot to tell us when he returns—possibly he may find time to drop a line while on tour.

How sudden was the death of "Bob" Ferguson! At the Screen Club ball on Saturday—and passed away the following Monday evening. He was a comedian of unusual talent and had had many years' experience on the legitimate stage. He was a great favorite of Mrs. Fiske's. With her he played in among other pieces "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" and "Becky Sharpe," in the latter being especially effective in the role of Sir Pitt Crawley. One of his most recent successes on the screen was as Red Barney in the three-reel "Kathleen Mavourneen" of Imp, of which company he was a member. His last work, completed a few days before his death, was as the henchman of Robespierre, in the big historical-dramatic production of that title.

A card received from Lamar Johnstone indicates that he has realized his long-time craving and landed in Los Angeles. "Bully place for pictures this," says Lamar. Yes, that's about what they all say. Begins to look as though in time to come New York might he rather lonesome for picture fellers and girls, especially in cold weather. As Mr. Johnstone can adorn a saddle equally as well as he can a dress suit, Los Angeles ought to suit him down to the ground. Good luck!

Ganes' Theater, at Broadway and Thirty-first street, has passed from the ranks of pictures. It is said a restaurant will take its place. Thus is the usual order reversed. It is seldom that a picture theater is converted into anything—unless it be a still bigger and better one. The Ganes will be the exception that will prove the rule.

William Leith, well known among Fourteenth street picture followers, is up for membership in the Screen Club, sponsored by the president.

Miss Florence Turner, old-time and always favorite of the world's picture followers, has sailed for England. There she will fill a number of vaudeville engagements and then return to the screen surrounded by a company of English players. Sailing by the same ship was Larry Trimble, Miss Turner's old producer at the Vitagraph studio, who will continue in the same relation to the popular star. It was Mr. Trimble who made the "Pickwick" films last year, so he is no stranger to the task of making pictures handicapped by English weather. A host of friends, many known but many more unknown, will wish them godspeed and a full measure of success.

King Baggot paid a flying visit to Washington the week following the ball. He got the glad hand from all sides. When he first walked up to the desk in the New Willard he faced a clerk he never had met. Before he had a chance to register, however, he was greeted by a most cordial: "Why, how do you do, Mr. Baggot!" You see, there's nothing to it; the fans are legion.

Edwin August's first Vitagraph appearance will be with Mary Charleson in "The Sea Maiden" on May 10. The scene of the drama is laid on Santa Catalina Island, and there are said to be some fine backgrounds.

It is said the net receipts from the Screen Club ball will approximate $4,000.

Mary Fuller deserves credit for more than giving us something new in writing "When the Right Man Comes Along," in which, by the way, she also played the lead. She showed her originality as a designer of striking garb. The semi-masculine attire in which she appeared was evolved along with the script. If the arrival suggested by the title of this fine drama is to rob us of her screen portrayals, may the day of his appearance be long deferred.

William West, of the Edison Company, was cast in a real tragedy recently in which for a few moments he had an uncomfortably prominent role. Mr. West lives in Mamaroneck, where there have been some stirring labor troubles. A block from his home Mr. West found his way blocked by police. He made a detour, only to find he was between the lines. He flattened himself against a high fence and fortunately escaped the bullets and bricks, but not before he had seen one man killed and several injured.

This sample of judicial wisdom is ascribed to a minor judge in New York City: "The easiest way for a mother to make a thief of her son is to give him money to see picture shows, so that he will become anxious to see them all the time." The judge said more than this. He admitted that "it is not the pictures themselves that do the work," but rather the lure of them. The moral of this seems to be to bar from picture shows all children but those of unlimited means—rather a large undertaking; also somewhat of a hardship on the children that do not steal.

An echo of the facetious "press stuff" epistle conceived by shrewd Screeners and sent to the Mayor signed by Edgena De Lespine was heard early in the night at the Screen Club ball. The letter told all about the "movie dance" which the writer wished permission to introduce. An earnest and rather young reporter from one of the dailies very seriously inquired at the door: "What time are you going to put on this new 'movie dance'?" "Eleven o'clock!" was the confidently reply. How long the cub waited is not known.

When Miss De Lespine heard of the incident she was disappointed. "Why didn't they send him to me?" she inquired; "after my getting out all those definitions, too!"

It is said that most men and possibly and probably also women have a small or large curiosity to see themselves on the screen. If the present plans of the Philadelphia police department are carried out this general desire will not be shared by certain denizens of the Quaker City. It is proposed to record an animated photograph of criminals along with the Bertillon measurements. Five feet of film is believed to be sufficient to reveal the characteristics of gait and other essential points of identification of prisoners.

Flickers.

Arthur Smallwood.

THE subject of my opening "wheeze" this week is Mr. Arthur Smallwood, who has been in and out of the picture business for several years past. Mr. Smallwood came to New York from Cincinnati a few years ago with nothing but his nerve. He joined the selling forces of the Wurlitzer Company and, in the course of his work canvassing managers of picture theaters for orders for Wurlitzer orchestrions, he found a theater that needed a good manager, whereupon he took the job and made some real money. This tempted him to try his hand at making motion pictures, with the result that he soon dropped his little bundle.

A little incident like that had no appreciable effect upon Smallwood's nerve and he was soon busy again piling up the iron men for another venture. He kept on the job longer this time because the plan he had in mind was bigger than anything he had tackled before and required more capital; but matters shaped up to suit him recently and the picture show in Music Hall, Cincinnati, Ohio, now being operated by him, is the result. This is some enterprise, but from all reports Smallwood is getting away with it.

Not satisfied with his success in Cincinnati, Mr. Smallwood attempted to secure a lease on the Bijou theater, New York, and he surely would have had a Broadway house had not the owners of the property been so greedy as to want to declare themselves in on the profits. Smallwood could not see that proposition, so the deal was not consummated and Smallwood is back in Cincinnati packing them in at Music Hall.

About three weeks ago everybody bid Tom Evans goodbye and wished him a happy voyage, on account of his advertising the fact that he was to sail for Europe, but from mail that we have received from him within the past few days, it appears that the ship on which he sailed must have been caught in the fog and taken a short cut through the uncompleted Panama Canal and dumped its burden on the Pacific coast, for Tom's communications are postmarked Los Angeles, Cal.

We were favored with a visit from Tom Bible, manager of the Keystone Feature Film Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

After asking L. J. Rubenstein (Ruby) what he was laughing at, and looking so happy over, he told me that the feature film game was "a pretty soft thing." His picture, "The Gunmen of New York," has made such a hit that he is compelled to work nights to get out all the prints that have been ordered. He has also had several good offers for his negative in Europe.

REMODELING A BINGHAMTON THEATER.

Ned Kornblite, proprietor of the Star Theater, Binghamton, N. Y., visited the office of the Moving Picture World last week upon the occasion of a flying visit to the "Big Town" in search of novelties for his house. Mr. Kornblite is planning to spend $20,000 in remodeling his theater. Its capacity will be increased from 500 to 1000, seats all on one floor. The entrance will be on Chenango Street and the exit in the rear leading out Henry Street. Ample light and ventilation will form attractive features of the new house. A five cent admission is charged for a four reel show running from 2 o'clock to 11 o'clock p. m. Licensed pictures are shown, with Motiograph and Power's machines.

KALEM PRODUCING "THE OCTOROON."

The Kalem Company, which has produced Boucicault's successes "The Colleen Bawn," "Arrah-na-Pogue" and "The Shaughraun" in picturesque Ireland, recently secured the exclusive motion picture rights to another well known drama by the same author—"The Octoroon." This celebrated story of plantation life, intrigue and revenge is peculiarly adapted to pictures, with its many intense and thrilling situations, and the older playgoers will remember that several gripping climaxes are entirely dependent upon pantomime. It will be in two parts.

Mr. Kenean Buel, who is directing the production, has combined the three Kalem companies located at Jacksonville, Florida, and a star cast is assured. The authoritative locations to be visited in the course of the production promise many striking backgrounds.

MARIAN SWAYNE, SOLD PROGRAMS.

Marian Swayne, one of the Solax leading women, sold programs at the Screen Club Ball to the amount of $100. Miss Swayne worked industriously from eight-thirty to twelve. Programs sold for "paper only" and this charming Solax Star saw to it that the paper she received in return for programs were decorated with V's and X's and authorized by Uncle Sam as legal tender. Members and guests parted with their money as readily as they parted with compliments. All just could not resist Marian's "Magnetic Touch" and "Irresistible Personality."

Miss Swayne has been with the Solax Stock Company for nearly two years. She left the company last summer for several months to play in stock in Syracuse, but she came back because she likes the pictures and Madame Blache's organization.

DID ROSIE DO THE RIGHT THING?

Rosie is a Thanhouser comedy product, a stenographer turned cook. In "Rosie's Revenge," released Sunday, April 27, you see why she had to become a cook. She was a bum stenographer! Bill Scroggins, by whom she was employed, needed an amanuensis who could amanuense. So he told Rosie to run along and find a job as dishwasher.

But Rosie looked higher than that. She got the job of cook. Her mistress was a handsome society woman whom Bill Scroggins courted. So did another fellow. One day Rosie's mistress had the rivals to dinner, and Rosie put red peppers and things into Rival Scroggins' food.

Now, did Rosie do the right thing?

Of course, Scroggins made such a mess of himself at the table that he never had the nerve to come back to court Rosie's employer. So weigh this question carefully in your mind.

WARNER'S FEATURES POPULAR ON COAST.

The Mozart Theater, the leading Independent house of Los Angeles, has booked "The Eye of a God" for an entire week. Warner's San Francisco office has closed contracts with the "Silver Palace Theater" and the "Garrick Theater" of Frisco for first runs on all Warner's Features.

The "Alhambra Theater" of Seattle has arranged for a four days' run of "A Daughter of the Confederacy." Their advertising is a revelation. The People's Amusement Co., of Portland, operating a circuit of sixteen houses, have enrolled themselves for a continuous service of Warner's Features.

Mr. Tom Lyle has opened the "Empress Theater" in Aberdeen, Wash., and will show three Warner's Features every week.

MOTIOGRAPH HAS NEW OFFICE IN NEW YORK.

The eastern offices of the Motiograph are now located at 21 East 14th Street, New York. Patrons will please make a memorandum of this fact. A new 1913 Model Motiograph has been installed at the Crown theater, Hackensack, N. J., by J. H. Hallberg.

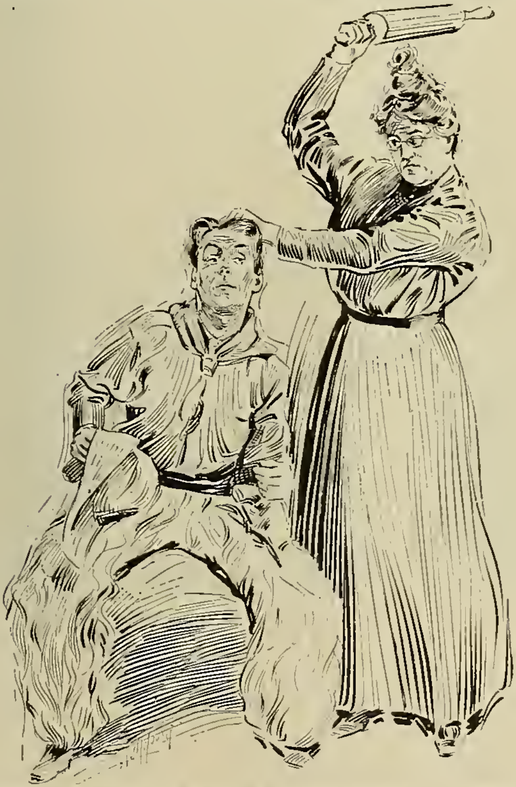
"ALKALI" IKE'S MOTHER-IN-LAW (Essanay).

Exhibitors all know the remarkable drawing quality of Essanay's "Alkali Ike" productions. It is unnecessary to say that this feature is a riot of mirth from beginning to end. It seems that Augustus Carney improves in every picture. Audiences will clamor to see "Alkali Ike's" Mother-in-law, as it is a side-splitting hilarious reel of jovial entertainment. Synopsis: For some unknown reason or other, and much like other human beings, Alkali Ike cannot get along with his wife. To cap the climax Mrs. Alkali invites her mother to visit her. Alkali Ike meets his fond parent-in-law at the railroad station and is compelled by the latter to carry all of her luggage, consisting of a large and cumbersome parrot cage, two over-sized hat boxes, and worst of all, a trunk, which was neatly strapped to his back. Alkali was surprised to discover he had so much strength, but realized it only too well, when his mother-in-law trod behind him with an umbrella forcing the hero onward. Foot sore and weary Mr. Henpecko arrives at his destination, only to be ordered around, at the will of the new arrival. In his rude western manner, Alkali throws his hat on the table, only to be taken by the ear and ordered to hang it up where it belongs. After supper, which does not pass without mishap, Alkali is about to steal out for a quiet smoke when his mother-in-law takes him gently but firmly by the hair and orders him to sit down and listen to one of her beautiful selections on the organ, which was painful. Alkali Ike finally sneaks out, goes to the book store and buys some literature on hypnotism, and oh my what he doesn't do to his mother-in-law is a caution. The tables turn, however, when Alkali Ike's wife discovers her mother leaving for the railroad station under the hynotic influence of her husband. You just ought to see what happens to Alkali.



Sketch of Scene in "Alkali Ike's Mother-in-Law" (Essanay).

Miss Margaret Joslyn as Alkali Ike's mother-in-law, is a scream, while Augustus Carney, the "Gibraltar of Fun" keeps his audience in a continual uproar.

This production is booked for release Saturday, May 10th.

"THE TWO CONVICTS" (Great Northern).

This breezy little comedy has to do with the complications which arose over a case of mistaken identity. These same complications were rather serious for a time, but all is set right and Dan Cupid makes his appearance before the story closes. It has plenty of the genuine element with her and there a touch of melodrama and maintains its interest from the beginning. Two young tourists make their appearance in a country place and about the time of their arrival two convicts escape from a prison in the neighborhood. The convicts discard their prison garb and come across the tourists. The former decide upon a ruse and inform the local magistrate through the medium of a note that two escaped convicts are in the vicinity disguised as tourists. In the meantime the latter are enjoying the hospitality of a wealthy resident, who is the father of two charming daughters. During the night, Black Bill, one of the jail birds, enters the house and steals a purse belonging to one of the young men. He is about to escape when Lind, the tourist, nabs him. Instead of turning him over to the police he allows him to go free and gives him the purse. On the following morning, the magistrate appears at the house and accuses the two young tourists of being the escaped convicts. Naturally the family is dumbfounded, especially the young women, who insist the accusation is unfounded. Just as the strangers are about to be arrested, Black Bill appears on the scene and returns the stolen purse to Lind. Explanations follow and believing that there is no time like the present the tourists propose for the hands of the daughters of the house and are accepted. The comedy is splendidly acted and many of the scenes are out of the ordinary from the standpoint of photography.

BUILDING NEW THEATER AT WATERLOO, IOWA.

Messrs. C. Mercurio and T. Chapo are building one of the finest little moving picture theaters in Waterloo, Ia., to be known as the "Cozy." A Power's No. 6-A projection machine is to be used. Mr. Chado will be manager and Mr. Mercurio assistant manager.

"THE CHILDREN OF ST. ANNE" (Majestic).

This beautiful love story of Creole life in Louisiana was made amid the picturesque southern scenery so well suited to the development of this particular theme. Marie finds a starving boy at the shrine of her patron saint and persuades her mother to adopt him. Later an artist for whom the boy has posed, recognizes in him a talent for art and takes him away to the city to educate. The boy does not prove worthy, however, and puts pleasure before work. Disgusted the artist casts him off and he becomes an outcast. One day hearing from a tramp that he is on his way to the village where Marie lives, he gives him a little carved statue of St. Anne and asks that it be delivered to Marie. When the girl gets this she starts for the city. The boy meantime has found honest employment in an art shop. Marie arrives and thoroughly ignorant of the city and its ways, she falls into the clutches of a human hawk. Passing the shop where the boy works she sees a carved St. Anne in the window and falling upon her knees prays for help. The man attempts to drag her away, but the boy who has heard her cry rushes out and rescues her. When he sees it is Marie, his joy knows no bounds. They are married and Marie pleads with the artist who takes the boy back and he is soon on the road to success. This picture was produced with beautiful artistic effect by Director Lawrence McGill. Laura Lyman as Marie, Louis Kimball as the boy, and Allen Hale in the role of the artist were notably good.

Scene from "The Children of St. Anne" (Majestic).

This picture was released on May 6th, 1913, in two reels.

CRYSTAL TO RELEASE TWO A WEEK.

Beginning Tuesday, May 27th, the Crystal Film Co., of New York, will start their second release of Crystal films. This subject will be dramatic and special pains are being taken to make each reel intensely interesting and worthy. It will be the policy of the Crystal to make this new release entirely different from anything present on the program, intending same to be a high class society drama. There will be absolutely nothing Western about any of the subjects. The reel will feature Miss Pearl White, the popular Crystal star, who has endeared herself to every patron of the silent drama. The extreme high quality that has always been maintained in the Sunday split-reel comedy release of the Crystal will be the keynote and standard of the dramatic release, and the superb photography, interesting story, wonderfully vivid portrayals, elaborate settings and exceptional technical work that will be incorporated therein, practically assures instant popularity and success. The first dramatic release will be Tuesday, May 27th, and the subject will be Where Charity Begins, with Miss White.

Important Changes at American's Santa Barbara Studio.

Important changes have occured since the return of Mr. Hutchinson at the Santa Barbara headquarters. Principal among these was the engaging of Albert W. Hale, a producer of Vitagraph and Thanhouser experience who will hereafter have charge of the first company. The western business management has been given into the hands of Wallace Kerrigan, twin brother of Jack Kerrigan, the American's leading man. Mr. Wallace Kerrigan, has been with the "Flying A" forces ever since the company was sent to California almost two years ago, and during that time devoted his energies toward the business end. The new arrangement will make toward greater and better "Americans."

MARTHA RUSSELL, in "Their Lives By a Thread."

Lovers of the sensational will find in "Their Lives by a Thread," a three-reel Warner's Feature, some startling incidents. Martha Russell, as the daughter of a prosperous American living in Mexico, who has defrauded his life insurance company out of $100,000 by a fiendish plot, falls in love with the president of the insurance company and saves him from death at the bottom of a deep excavation.

To accomplish this, she climbs inside an ore-bucket and with a Mexican girl at the throttle of the hoisting engine, is carried five hundred feet in the air, then lowered to the spot where her admirer has been thrown by half-crazed strikers who believe him to be a strike-breaking leader.

Miss Russell is supported by Robert Kelly, leading man of the Satex Film Co., of Austin, Texas.

"THE GOOD WITHIN" (Reliance).

Frederick Sullivan who produced this picture, Irving Cummings and Edgena De Lespine who portrayed the leading roles all deserve credit for a very satisfactory offering. Miss De Lespine in the role of Paula Varis loves her cousin, Paul, played by Irving Cummings, and she takes his cousinly advances too seriously. Discovering that he is engaged to Edith Weston (Marion Ferel) her rage knows no bounds. A diamond is discovered to be missing from a tiara which Paul takes to his fiancee as a wedding gift from his mother. Knowing that Paul owes a business associate some money, Paula hides the jewels and makes it appear as though he had taken it. But the boy's blind mother's grief so softens the girl's heart that she produces the gem, vindicating her cousin. This film to be released May 3rd.

Scene from "The Good Within" (Reliance).

LUBIN READY FOR PLAY.

The Lubin Baseball Team is on the firing line and is ready for a battle with any of the film men. Mgr. Billy Hallman has the men in first class shape. The team is composed of G. H. Stillfield, Matty Kilroy, Harry Myers, Bill Engel, Ira M. Lowry, John McInnis, Billy Hallman, Arthur V. Johnson and John DeFoney. Any one wishing to challenge this strong team, address G. H. Stillfield, business manager.

AMERICAN BASEBALL TEAM ISSUES CHALLENGES.

Now that the pleasant weather has started, and spring is here, not only does the "young man's fancy lightly turn toward thoughts of love" but baseball as well. In pursuance of this markedly national tendency, the factory forces of The American Film Mfg. Co., have organized or reorganized the "Flying A" baseball team. Exuberant spirits, noon practice in the prairie and challenges are now the order of the day.

"THE OPEN SECRET," (Patheplay).

Gaston Jouvenal, a retired banker, and his wife are anxious that their son and heir, Henry, shall marry the daughter of a favored neighbor. When Henry is consulted in the matter he refuses to consider the proposal, but will give no reason. Mr. and Mrs. Jouvenal storm and rage but the young man is obdurate. By a chance meeting a few days later the elder Jouvenal finds that his son has been married for quite some time and is the proud father of a daughter. His curiosity overcomes him and he visits his son's home. He finds the doctor in attendance upon the baby girl, although the illness is not serious, but the sight of the suffering little one plays strangely and pathetically upon the old man's heart-strings. He begs his charming daughter-in-law not to inform his wife that he has made her a visit and leaves the house with a new joy in his life. Mrs. Jouvenal, however, has herself learned of her son's marriage and fearing that her husband will disown Henry she keeps the knowledge of the situation secret.

Scene from "The Open Secret" (Patheplay).

In their surreptitious visits to Henry's home the elderly couple frequently miss meeting each other by only a few seconds and their efforts to avoid being discovered visiting Henry are highly diverting. When the opportunity offers, Henry and his young wife decide to precipitate matters and accordingly arrange a little scheme which brings Henry's father and mother to the house at the same time. When Mr. and Mrs. Jouvenal arrive their grandchild greets them and they both confess to the happiness they feel.

In this two-reel dramatic comedy, the smile and the tear follow each other in rapid succession with a satisfying and entertaining effect that is distinctly novel. It will be released May 23rd.

CLEVELAND STILL TELLING MINSTREL JOKES.

W. S. Cleveland tells the following annecdote of his recent trip through the South, in the interest of his Cleveland Fidelity Booking Service.

He disembarked from a sleeping car at Raleigh, North Carolina, about seven o'clock one morning, too early to find managers with whom to talk business, and thought it would be interesting to drive through the city for an hour or so, and accordingly hailed one of those ever-present landmarks of the South, an aged colored driver of a one-horse carriage. As Cleveland had not traveled through the Southern part of the country for some years, he was greatly impressed by the remarkable improvements and indications of progress that were apparent on every hand. The driver, in the usual good natured and loquacious manner of his kind, was delighted to be able to point out the various sights which he thought would be of interest to his fare, and proceeded to do so as follows:

"They is many places of note and interest, historical and othawise in ouah city. On yondah hillside," pointing with his whip, "is whah Gen'ral Sherman's army was camped when he heard tell dat Gen'ral Lee had done surrendered to Gen'ral Grant. And hyar am de capital building of de state of Norf Carolina. And right ovah dah," pointing with the other hand, "is de Grand Theater, a permanent picture moving institution, what am constantly on de go."

"THE VEIL OF SLEEP," (Lubin).

A beautiful somnambulist story which came near wrecking the happiness of two worthy lovers. The atmosphere of the drama is typically Western and admits of picturesque scenic background. To secure a needed change Louise Gray goes to Silver City and obtains employment in the Good Hope Mining Co., where Tom Price is cashier. Tom and Louise fall in love, but Louise's happiness is clouded by worry over her mother and sister, who are poor. A large sum of money for the payroll is placed in the safe, the combination of which is only known to Tom and Louise. The manager and Tom are away when Louise hears that a gang of outlaws are in the neighborhood. That night in her sleep she goes to the safe and taking the money out conceals it. Tom sees her take the money and believes that she is stealing it for her family. The next day the outlaws are captured or killed and in the night Louise again in her sleep restores the money to the safe. The act is witnessed by the Sheriff and the girl exonerated. The honeymoon quickly follows and Louise is cured of her nervous trouble.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY NOTES.

Mr. Will C. Smith, assistant manager, has been making a short trip through Central New York visiting Syracuse and other points and attending the convention of the Moving Picture Exhibitors at Wheeling, West Virginia.

Through the Walturdaw Company of London, England, there have been installed thirty Power's No. 6s in twenty various theaters in the Birmingham district; also twelve No. 6s in Bradford, Sheffield, Aberdare, and Plymouth.

The Metropolitan Opera House of Philadelphia has been equipped with motion pictures which are projected by Power's 6A.

The Quo Vadis pictures have been so successful, that six Power's No. 6s have been purchased for other companies of this concern.

The following installations have been made: 1 6A complete to Star Theater, Wytheville, Va., through General Film Company, Washington, D. C. 1 6A complete with Inductor to Mobile Light & Railway Co., Mobile, Ala., through W. H. Peck, Atlanta, Ga. 1 6A with 14 inch magazines for 2,000 feet film to Turn Hall, North Salina Street, Syracuse, New York, through Auburn Film Company, Auburn, New York. 2 6A, complete equipment with motors and mechanical speed control to Charles Stalder, North Hill, Akron, Ohio, through Mutual Film Corporation. 1 6A complete with motor and mechanical speed regulator to W. H. Wilcox, Jonesboro, Arkansas, through Mutual Film Corporation, New Orleans.

FEATURE FILM CREDIT ASSOCIATION.

The Feature Film Renters of Missouri have organized a credit association. The first meeting was held in St. Louis, on April 23, at which these concerns were represented; J. G. Conner of the International Feature Film Exchange; C. Werner of the American Feature Film Co., and M. J. Goldbaum of Warner's Feature Film Company. A subsequent meeting was held on April 30.

CORRESPONDENCE

PHILADELPHIA.

THERE are, in course of construction in Philadelphia, the following picture theaters: 1121-23-25 Fairmount avenue, Sixty-fourth street and Haverford avenue, by Overbrook Amusement Company; Forty-ninth street and Woodland avenue, Fifth and Olney streets, by Frank Hess; Thirteenth and Market streets, Eighteenth and Walnut streets; Broad and Beed streets, by Morgolin & Block; 1614 Market street, by Horace Stein; Aureka Amusement Company, building at 3941 Market street. Besides these there is a number being planned by local men and real estate promoters.

Exhibitors will have to clean up their houses, as the fire inspectors are about to begin another round of inspection, and all places that do not come up to expectations will be closed. Some time ago the inspectors visited every show house in Philadelphia, and many of them were claimed to be fire-traps. The owners of these places were given orders to clean up and make the theaters safe. Now the inspectors are going to see if their instructions were carried out.

The Philadelphia public will have free motion pictures this summer if a a plan is carried out by the city government. It is planned to have motion pictures with the evening concerts of the Municipal Band at the City Hall. Director Neff, of the Department of Public Health and Charities, is the man back of the movement, and he is sure to have the support of every official in getting the necessary money for the project.

Daniel Faunce, of Philadelphia, has purchased a plot of ground along the Boardwalk at Atlantic City, where he will erect a motion picture theater. Plans are now under way by local architects for the theater building.

The Gem Moving Picture Theater, recently opened its doors to the public at Watsontown, Pa. This is the first theater to be built in that town and it seems fair to be the big attraction of the place.

The Broad Theater, at Bethlehem, is under lock and key, the proprietor, Grover C. Hastings, who sank an inheritance of $8,000 in the project during the past year, having been adjudged a voluntary bankrupt. The liabilities may reach $10,000.

John G. Hoffman, proprietor of the Theatorium, at Chester, has made another venture in the moving picture theater business. Last week he purchased the Majestic Theater and immediately assumed charge of the place. Freidman and Gino were the former proprietors of the amusement place, but only held interest for a short time.

C. H. CONGDON.

INDIANAPOLIS.

AYOR SAMUEL L. SHANK has denied the request of some twenty-five or thirty churches that the motion picture theaters of the city be required to close on Sunday. The mayor says the only law under which he could take such action would be the one forbidding one to follow his usual avocation on Sunday, and that to enforce this would mean bringing action against drug stores, grocers, cigar stands, streetcar men, newspaper men, etc. An effort to obtain the passage of a law permitting Sunday performances of motion picture theaters and other theaters was made at the recent biennial sesion of the Indiana legislature. The bill was defeated, however, by legislaters from the rural districts, who feared such action might be opposed by their constituents.

One of the first fireproof motion picture theaters in the city is now being erected at 2731 East Washington street, by Frank J. Geiger. Outer walls are to be of brick, floors of concrete, and the ceiling of steel. There will be two entrances from Washington street and two exits to Pearl Street. There will be a seating capacity of 420 and standing room for about sixty. The operator's booth will be of steel, with an exit from the side, instead of by the usual trap door, which is regarded as dangerous. The building will cost approximately $8,000 without the seats and other equipment.

The Lyric, giving motion pictures and light vaudeville performances, has engaged Mayor Samuel L. Shank to give a humorous monologue during the week beginning January 5, 1914, the salary for the week to be $500.

Michael F. Gill, Guy D. Rock and C. M. Deem have organized the Tacoma Amusement Company, which has been incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $25,000. The company expects immediately to erect a two-story brick building at Washington street and Tacoma avenue, at a cost of $20,000. Part of this will be occupied by a motion picture theater, while the remainder will be rented for other business purposes. The theater will have a seating capacity of about 400, and is to be equipped with all modern conveniences and safety appliances.

The Idle Hour motion picture theater will be operated by the newly organized Idle Hour Amusement Company, which has been organized and incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $10,000. Those interested in the company are: Albert Lochnit, Jr., Jess C. Collins and Lindsley McNees.

The Mutual Film Corporation, 217 North Illinios street, recently suffered a $16,000 loss by fire, but there has been little interruption in business. About one hundred films were destroyed, together with several machines, and the office furniture and fixtures. Many films were water-soaked. The fire is believed to have been caused by an explosion. Strangely enough the building in which the concern is located was not seriously damaged. E. H. Brient is local manager for the company.

There has been a crusade at Richmond against motion picture theaters giving Sunday performances. O. G. Murray opened his place one Sunday recently, giving the proceeds to the flood victims. He was arrested for following his usual vocation on Sunday, and a jury acquitted him. The police department has now ceased its efforts to close the motion picture theaters on Sunday.

Edward S. Sourbier has leased the Oriental Theater at 1105 South Meridian street. This is the largest motion picture theater in the city, seating 1,600 persons. The formal reopening of the place, under new management, took place a few days ago, Mayor Samuel L. Shank being the guest of honor of the occasion.

About $500 loss was caused by fire at the Scenic Theater, 504 East Washington street, a few days ago. There happened to be a small audience and it passed out quietly. The fire started from three films. Jack Hamilton, the operator, jumped from the booth to the floor, but was not injured. The theater is owned by Edward Phillips and A. Braem.

The Lyric Theater is now using Kinemacolor films as a feature, the only place in the city to use these films.

The McLean Place Theater, at 2148 North Illinois street, has been reopened after extensive remodeling. An addition was built, increasing the seating capacity and the theater was redecorated. Mrs. Leona A. Beatty owns and manages the theater.

With an authorized capitalization of $5,000, the Northern Indiana Motion Picture Company has been organized and incorporated at Huntington, to conduct motion picture theaters. Those interested in the company are: R. G. Mitchell, M. W. Strauss and I. E. Clark.

A motion picture and vaudeville theater will be conducted at New Albany by the New Albeny Amusement Company, which has just been organized by H. H. Legg, P. N. Curl, E. V. Knight, Charles Miller, Frank Beaucond, James Deatrick and Joseph Bruns.

Indianapolis Local No. 1, of the Indiana Exhibitors' League, contributed $100 to the citizens' general relief committee for the benefit of flood sufferers.

Contracts are about to be let for an addition to the Manhattan motion picture theater, that will increase the seating capacity to 800, making it the largest motion picture theater in the downtown district.

B. F. Keith's Theater is showing the Edison talking pictures as a regular feature, this being the initial introduction of the pictures in this city.

Motion picture theaters have been opened recently, as follows: L. Kornstein, 3005 W. Washington street; Luella Waltman, Clifton street, near 29th street; Hamilton Amusement Co., 2116 East Tenth street; Margaret Mason and Nellie Ridlen, 1660 Bellefontaine street; and Frank J. Laswell, 2508 West Michigan street.

C. L. CUMMINS.

NEW ENGLAND.

H M. GOODHUE, for some time manager of the Bijou theater, Fall River, Mass., playing programs of vaudeville and pictures has resigned, to become general manager of the Moe H. Mark theaters, Buffalo, New York. Moe Mark, whose chain of theaters will now be handled by Mr. Goodhue, was formerly a New England moving picture man, as he began his activities in this field by building the Comique and Premier theaters of Boston, Mass., which he afterwards sold to the Automatic Amusement Company, of New York. Mr. Goodhue is to be succeeded by Mr. George H. Hill, who comes to the Bijou theater with an excellent record, as manager of the Weller theater, Zanesville, Ohio. The regular policy of vaudeville and picture programs will continue at the Bijou, as formerly.

One of the finest theaters built for the exhibition of motion pictures, to be opened to the public in Connecticut, this year, is the new Casino theater of Hartford. This theater is a model of its kind in every way. It is of fireproof construction, and built along the most approved lines. The Casino opened on April 19, and capacity business has been the general rule this far. The Casino is featuring Kinemacolor service in every way, and the public at once set its stamp of approval on the colored films.

Manager Fred P. Dean of the Hartford theater, Hartford, Conn., believes in offering added attractions to offset the warmer days now upon us, and Colt's Band is the newest feature at the Hartford, which is doing a good business.

Messrs. Pindar and Rudolff, owners and managers of the Crystal theater, Meriden, Conn., are doing a really capacity business, with high-grade programs of photoplays. Mr. Pindar states that it is the present intention to remain open during the entire summer months, due to the increasing business at the Crystal.

Adams, Mass., is not a particularly large city, but it is assured of having a large and up-to-date theater, in the near future, to be devoted to vaudeville and pictures. E. K. McPeck, a local attorney and Mr. William B. Plunkett, a prominent manufacturer of cotton goods, are behind the project. Plans are now being made by E. S. Osteyee, of Pittsfield, Mass., calling for a theater to seat over 800 people. The house will be along the same general lines as the Union Square theater, Pittsfield, Mass., which was designed by Mr. Osteyee.

Mr. Blumenberg, manager of the cosy Casco theater, Portland, Me., playing photoplay programs and illustrated songs, turned over his theater on April 29 to the Bowdoin College Masque and Gown Club. This club presented a play of its own at the Casco for the single performance, after which the theater returned to the moving picture policy again.

Mat Reilly, manager of the Bijou theater, Providence, R. I., is a mighty clever photoplay man, which accounts for the fact that seats are always at a premium at the Bijou, which offers a straight program of pictures, no vaudeville being needed to pull in the trade.

Manager Jack Loewer of the Nelson theater, Springfield, Mass., reports that business is "simply great." The Nelson took a new lease on life since it became one of the William Fox Circuit, and is proving a big money maker, although it formerly did but little business before Mr. Fox secured control. Kinemacolor pictures are now a fixture at this house and they are proving themselves a distinct acquisition.

On Monday, April 21, S. Z. Poli had work started on his new theater at Springfield, Mass. Now that ground has been broken, Mr. Poli intends to push the construction to the limit, as the new house is to be ready by early Fall. The new theater is on the regulation Poli idea, meaning a seating capacity of about 3,000 people. In general appearance, it will be much like the newer Poli theaters and the plans call for fireproof construction. A thoroughly modern house is scheduled, with pictures and vaudeville to bring in the money.

The local moving picture house at Ashland, N. H., was thrown into an uproar on Wednesday, April 23, when Edgar A. Moulton, a singer, attempted suicide by taking poison. The man was found in time, and recovered.

Greenfield, Mass., is now the proud owner of a "really and truly" theater, and one that is distinctly first-class in every way, since Lawlor Brothers threw open their new Lawler theater on April 23. This theater will alternate programs of vaudeville and pictures with road shows.

The Scenic theater, Waltham, Mass., has cast out its programs of vaudeville and pictures, but only temporarily, however. After a few weeks of stock company attractions, the management intends to return to the regulation programs.

J. H. Tebbletts, who has been managing the Empire theater, Pittsfield, Mass., found that it was impossible to interest the public in his stock company attractions, and has severed his connections with the Empire. Messrs. Warren D. Lombard, and Edward Beck have secured a lease on the house, but have not definitely decided what kind of entertainment to inaugurate. Moving pictures and vaudeville will probably be tried out.

On May 5, the majority of the S. Z. Poli theaters in this territory, say good-bye to vaudeville and picture programs, until early Fall, when they return to the regular policy. During the summer, stock company attractions are to be tried out. The Poli theaters at Worcester, Mass., New Haven, Bridgeport and Hartford, Conn., are among those to make the change on May 5.

Abraham Spitz, of Spitz and Nathanson, operating a chain of New England theaters, states that the business in those of his houses devoted to vaudeville and pictures, is exceptionally good. On this account, it is probable that the Empire theater, Providence, R. I., owned by this firm, but playing stock shows will be changed over to vaudeville and pictures, by early fall, if not sooner.

Manager T. A. Boyle, of the Opera House, Rutland, Vermont, states that his patrons are very fickle, and always want something new. On this account, Mr. Boyle, has decided to alternate his vaudeville and picture programs with musical shows, starting next fall.

"The Prisoner of Zenda," a feature picture at the Olympia theater, Lynn, Mass., this week, was just the vehicle that Mr. Geoffrey Whalen dotes upon, and the lecture given was worth going miles to hear. Mr. Whalen is a lecturer of unusual dramatic ability, and Lynn audiences are held spellbound during his discourse. The Olympia is doing capacity business.

On April 21, there was held a public meeting of the Roxbury, Mass., Improvement Society, at the Roxbury court house, at which the social conditions of the district were discussed, by representatives of the Children's Welfare League, social workers, and ministers. Roger F. Scannell presided, and while moving pictures were discussed, nothing unfavorable regarding local theaters, or the pictures shown, was brought up. In fact, many good points were duly noted at this meeting which is much different from former meetings of this and similar organizations, when moving pictures were the pet prejudice of most of the members.

At a meeting of the Theatrical Stage Employes' Union, on April 27, nominations were made for the election of officers and for delegates to the international convention.

The National theater, Boston, playing vaudeville and picture programs, is doing a very satisfactory business. The feature of the picture program this week were local subjects, including views of some of Boston's industries, with the employees going to and fro; scenes from ice-boat races at Mystic Lake, the sports at Franklin Park, and many other scenes of local interest.

Salem, Mass., has a most peculiar executive in Mayor John F. Hurley. The Mayor is greatly interested in things pertaining to the moving picture business. This week, the Mayor turned down an offer to appear on the vaudeville stage. This offer had been prompted by the fact that Mayor Hurley had appeared at the new Federal theater, Salem, on Sunday, April 13, scoring a real hit. The Federal theaters offers vaudeville and picture programs. However, the Mayor has signed a contract with a certain moving picture manufacturer to take part in some films. As a part of this deal, the entire police force of Salem was called out, April 26, when the riot call was sounded, and arrested three fake desperadoes, who were shooting up the town. Over 3,000 people witnessed this proceeding. On Monday, April 28, the Mayor will produce a fake fire in his own house, before the camera, in which he will be seen trying to put out the blaze. Later, he will pull the alarm, and the fire department will be called out. Thrilling rescues by the Mayor will form a most important part of the reel. A great deal of adverse criticism of the scheme is heard among the people of Salem.

The Mutual Film Corporation's Boston offices report that business is booming, and that the demand for Mutual service through Maine has shown a sharp increase, since a branch office was opened at Waterville, Me., April 15. This new office is in charge of Fred Murphy, a live hustler, formerly assistant manager of the Boston office.

The new Lawlor theater, Greenfield, Mass., that opened on April 16 is located on Federal Street, and has a total seating capacity of nearly 1,200. The color scheme of the decorations is brown on the theater walls, and the woodwork is done in old ivory, with the ceiling in a lighter tint. There are three boxes on each side of the orchestra floor, and brass railed inclosure for the orchestra. The chairs are upholstered in leather. The inclining floors of the orchestra and one balcony affords an unobstructed view of the stage. The Lawlor Brothers Theater Company, Incorporated, has its officers—Nicholas J. Lawlor, president; Thomas L. Lawlor, treasurer; and Frank J. Lawlor, secretary.

Both the Premier and Pastime theaters of Lowell, Mass., are again open and showing programs of photoplays, as all difficulties have been settled in a satisfactory manner.

S. Z. Poli has promised to give one entire day's receipts of his theater at Springfield, Mass., towards the $200,000 fund raised to build a new Y. M. C. A. building on Chestnut Street. Local newspapers were busy lauding Mr. Poli's generosity this week.

Although William White has only had charge of the Opera House, Lawrence, Mass., for one week, yet he has already made numerous changes about the theater, all of which have helped business at this house in no uncertain manner. Manager White is offering vaudeville and pictures, and is playing to capacity houses.

J. Fred Lovett, manager of the Broadway theater, Lowell, Mass., installed talking pictures in this theater on April 21, and to judge from the cordial reception they were accorded, it will be long before the "talkers" are removed. The Premier theater, also of Lowell, and under Mr. Lovett's supervision, is doing a very nice business, with photoplay programs.

George Delmore, one of the best known moving picture operators in New England, is now connected with the Opera House, Lowell, Mass. Mr. Delmore left the Nickle theater of that city to take up his present duties. The Opera House is now assured of excellent projection, as Delmore is one of the best moving picture men in this territory.

The Princess theater, Marlboro, Mass., is a photoplay house that does a big business, because it is managed ably. In order to keep the projection up to the highest standard, a new Power's Cameragraph No. 6, has been installed at the Princess, through the New England Universal Film Exchange, Boston.

The headquarters of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League, Massachusetts branch, at La Grange St., Boston, is now getting into first-class shape. A Power's No. 6-A complete outfit was installed by the R. D. Marson Moving Picture Company, of Boston.

The Columbia theater, Bath, Me., has been leased by the Burt & Burt Company. Some needed alterations and improvements are contemplated by the new owners, after which the Columbia will be operated as a photoplay house, no vaudeville being used, according to present plans.

Plans have been filed and accepted for a theater on Grove Street, Meriden, Conn. The new house, which will be devoted to moving pictures, is to be built by Joseph Ricci. Plans call for a seating capacity of nearly 500 people, and a theater that will be thoroughly modern and fireproof. With a good location on Grove Street, Mr. Ricci should have a paying proposition.

The Helen Gardner pictures of "Cleopatra," the five-reel production are scheduled for presentation at the exclusive Symphony Hall, Boston, on April 28, 29, 30 and May 1. Miss Gardner is billed as the "Bernhardt of moving pictures."

A moving picture theater is soon to be built at New Haven, Conn., by McLellan and Moore, to seat 750 persons. An excellent location has been secured on Oak Street, in the business district.

Edison's talking pictures at Keith's theater, Boston, Mass., have made a most favorable impression, and are regularly placed in the very middle of the vaudeville program, between the "feature acts." The Pathe Weekly still closes the show, and is a fixture at this house.

The Star theater, Boston, is now showing first run Mutual films, and illustrated songs, having cut out all the vaudeville acts. A special feature is Lecturer Noonan, who ably explains and enlarges upon the feature photoplays.

Jacob Lurie of the Beacon theater, Boston, gives a big show and does a big business with licensed films and vaudeville. In fact, Mr. Lurie's show is so good that he charges 20 cents on Sundays, and then is unable to accommodate the crowds.

Colonel Bill Stanton, manager of Harry Katzes' Auditorium Theater, Fitchburg, Mass., is now playing stock-company attractions, but will probably turn the Auditorium Theater back to vaudeville and pictures by early Fall. The Colonel has made a decided success of his Fitchburg venture.

A Powers Cameragraph, No. 6, was bought by the U. S. S. "Prairie," Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, through the New England Universal Film Exchange, Boston. Both Powers and the Edison Exchange seem to do an international business.

Mutual exhibitors in New England are satisfied exhibitors—there can be no doubt of it, as the next few lines will prove. Under date of April 4, the Mutual Film Corporation received this letter: "To Those Interested:—We, the undersigned managers, do most cheerfully recommend the Mutual service to all those who have been so unfortunate as not to have discovered the supreme excellence of the pictures comprising the program issued each week by the Mutual Film Corporation. Henry Shanley, Columbia Theater, Attleboro, Mass.; O. Harpnot, Jewel Theater, Lowell, Mass.; D. E. Reed, Star Theater, Pawtucket, R. I.; L. H. Manning, Union Theater, Providence, R. I.; John Levey, Superb Theater, Boston, Mass.; Felix Ailand, Pastime Theater, Boston, Mass.; M. Saodler, Revere Theater, Revere, Mass.; A. B. Howard, Nickel Theater, Taunton, Mass.; J. L. Caffrey, Ideal Theater, Boston, Mass.; T. B. Leamon, Central Theater, Stoneham, Mass.; Lou Vail, Scenic Theater, Warren, R. I.; C. H. Parker, Congress Hall, South Boston, Mass.; C. E. Cook, Opera House, Woonsocket, R. I.; J. F. Williams, Gem Theater, East Boston, Mass.; Alfred Basolet, Auburn Theater, Auburn, R. I.; W. L. Bigelow, Globe, Nickel and Palace theaters, Fall River, Mass."

George Arnold, of Hartford, Conn., intends to build a theater in that city, to be devoted to vaudeville and picture programs. Plans are now being made by local architects.

Messrs. Sweetser and Powers are to build a new theater at Caribou, Maine, which will seat 550 people. The house will be modern and has a location in the business district of the city.

Fogarty Brothers report that their new theater, Jewett City, Conn., has opened to very encouraging business, with programs of pictures and songs. The Park Theater, as it has been named, seats 350, and is very neat and cozy, having been built this winter by Fogarty Brothers.

Pittsfield, Mass., is soon to have a new theater, to be devoted to photoplays, as Mr. D. S. Freedman has secured a permit from the local authorities and has had his plans approved.

HENRY.

LOUISVILLE.

PICTURES played an important part in the entertainment tendered by the Louisville, Ky., Paper Company to members of the Kentucky Printers' Cost Congress, who gathered in the Kentucky metropolis recently for their annual convention. C. W. Dearden, advertising manager of the Strathmore Paper Company, of Mittineague, Mass., was on hand with three reels of film showing the various stages of the manufacture of paper. The show was given at the plant of the paper company at Thirteenth and Maple streets, and was attended by more than 200 printers of Kentucky and Indiana. Mr. Dearden lectured in connection with the film, and the printers left Louisville with definite ideas regarding the paper-making business, in lieu of the hazy thoughts which they formerly possessed on that subject. It is conceded that the introduction of motion pictures at the convention was a clever stroke, and one that emphasized the educational features of the gathering. Other entertainment features included singing by Fred Wells and Will Green, both of whom are now singing in a Louisville moving picture house. B. F. Keith's Louisville theater, which recently introduced Edison's talking pictures in the Kentucky metropolis, is to run through the entire season, according to present plans. Ten, twenty and thirty cents are to be the admission prices charged. The number of vaudeville acts is to be reduced to five, and it is believed that, coupled with both the talking and silent pictures, this program will be strong enough to allow the theater to run profitably during the hot weather.

The National Moving Picture Company, recently formed in Louisville, is resorting to the daily papers in a stock-selling campaign. The advertising has been on an extensive basis, full pages having been used recently. The company, according to its ads, will send, without charge, the booklet, "The Story of a Nickel," telling something of the vast growth of animated pictures. Under the head, "An Appreciation," the company paid tribute to the moving pictures, referring to them as the "marvel of science, mirror of art, product of the ingenuity of man and the inventive power of his mind." It ended with the assertion: "Motion picture, you are great! You are the agent of the age, the messenger of futurity! You are great—and we are grateful!" The company's plans to erect a theater in the Eastern section of Louisville have not been abandoned, according to a recent announcement, and plans will be completed shortly. The Crescent Hill house is to seat about 1,000 people, and will be one of the handsomest in the Kentucky metropolis. The National also expects to erect other houses in Kentucky and elsewhere, forming a chain of photoplay theaters.

William Hibbitt, of Louisville, after holding various positions at Keith's Louisville house, was given the management of the Olympic, a moving picture house. He resigned, and now is staging a vaudeville act in moving picture houses, with himself in the leading role.

The Mutual has established a branch office in Louisville, and will henceforth distribute its films through the new station, instead of shipping direct to exhibitors, as in the past. Offices have been taken in the Novelty Theater Buiding, at Fourth and Green streets. The Universal has maintained an establishment in Louisville for some time, while other distributing companies also are represented, the addition of the Mutual filling the field.

The North Side Amusement Company, which recently took over a business house in New Albany, Ind., with the intention of remodeling it for service as a moving picture theater, has filed articles of incorporation, the capitalization being set at $15,000. Those interested in the new company are: H. H. Legg, P. N. Curl, Charles Miller, E. V. Knight and others. The new theater will be ready for occupancy within sixty days.

A permit has been taken out by the Woodland Amusement Company, of Louisville, for an airdome to go up at 1021 South Preston street. About $300 will be expended. Alf Oldham is the chief stockholder in the company.

With a capitalization of $12,500, the Covington, Ky., Amusement Company has filed articles of incorporation. S. K. Long, Polk Lafoon, Charles E. Clark, and William Riedlin, Jr., are incorporators of the company, which will operate a moving picture theater in Covington.

The new Prows Theater has opened at Cynthiana, Ky., doing a rushing business on its initial performances. The theater is a handsome one, with a seating capacity of 400.

J. A. Pendery is to erect a new motion picture theater on Dun street, Cincinnati. The house will have a seating capacity of about 300, and will cover a site 28 by 100 feet.

Work on the new Odeon Theater, Benson street, Cincinnati, has begun, and will be rushed. The house, with a seating capacity of 500, will be ready for business by August 1. George G. Fox has secured the contract for excavation and construction work.

The Gem Theater Company has been awarded a charter, and will alter a house at Nashville, Tenn., for exhibition purposes. F. E. Hann is president of the company, while Charles H. Smith, J. M. Meek and V. N. Hacker also are interested.

A new airdome is to go up at Dayton street and Colerain avenue, Cincinnati. It will have a seating capacity of 500, and will be owned by Charles E. Marqua. Brick and steel will be used in its construction. It will be 50 by 150 feet.

Those who recently announced that they would operate the Gayety Theater, Louisville, during the coming summer, have announced that other plans have been decided on. The Gayety will probably be dark during the summer. Vaudeville and moving pictures were to have been exhibited, but those considering the plan did not relish the idea of competing with the straight moving picture houses and Keith's Theater, which also is to operate without a stop.

The Crystal Theater, of Louisville, is undergoing improvements, the lobby being redecorated. A feature of the Crystal, which is controlled by the Falls City Amusement Company, is a Wurlitzer seven-piece orchestra, which is being tested. The instrument plays thirty pieces without supervision of any description. The orchestrion has proved generally satisfactory, the only fault being that it does not, of course, play to the pictures.

The Broadway Amusement Company has taken over the Royal Theater, at Eighteenth street and Broadway, buying it from the Royal Amusement Company. There were several reasons for the transaction, the chief being that the West Broadway Theater, across the street from the Royal, gave that corner almost too many houses. Though both did well, it was felt that it was policy for one of the companies to withdraw from the field. The consideration involved was not announced. The Royal will be conducted as in the past, with motion

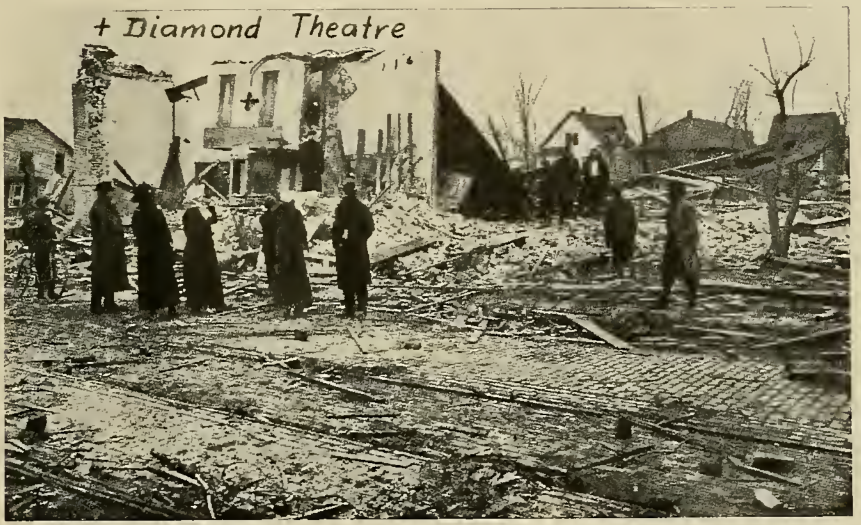
WITHSTANDS TORNADO AND FLOOD

Perhaps you think it is not essential that your motion picture projector should have this qualification.

Messrs. Weaver and Finch did not think their machines would ever be tested so severely. You never can tell what is going to happen, so be prepared for the worst. To its other virtues we add this assurance of reliability.

Another reason why you should use Simplex Projectors:



Diamond Theatre,
O. S. Finch, Proprietor.
Omaha, Neb., April 16, 1913.

Precision Machine Co.,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

As I have had a Simplex machine since last October, it's about time I said something about it. Have given the machine a thorough trial before making any comments. It not only stands the test of running pictures, but also stands a tornado. As you may have heard my theatre was destroyed by that awful tornado of March 23rd. Of all the brick and timbers that fell on the machine nothing broke only the top magazine. The weight would have smashed any other machine. Am sorry I did not get a picture of the machine as it was after the storm, but had too much trouble to think of. I would not trade a Simplex for any other make going. You have them all beat a mile, as the saying goes. I have started to rebuild again, so will have the machine in operation about the first of June. There was no one killed in the theatre as was advertised over the country.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) O. S. FINCH.

Mr. O. B. Weaver, Prop. Lyceum Theatre, Main St., Dayton, Ohio, has a Simplex Projector which was submerged for days in the flood. A little time spent in cleaning it up and it is now as good as new.

Here is Your Library, Mr. Exhibitor.

The Motion Picture Annual, published by the Chalmers Publishing Company, is a small encyclopedia. The exhibitor can always turn to it with confidence. It has been prepared by practical moving picture men, who know and understand the needs of the exhibitor. Add this to your library forthwith, for it costs but one dollar and twenty-five cents in paper covers or $1.50 in cloth boards. It is fully worth it. The best writers in the motion picture field have provided the literary matter in it. The complete list of releases for 1912 (Licensed and Independent) and the classified trade directory are worth something to you, many times the price perhaps.

pictures the attraction. The West Broadway also will be operated as usual, Fred Dolle and other officers of the Broadway believing there is enough patronage in that section of the city to give both houses plenty of action. The Broadway now owns five theaters in Louisville, all using moving pictures. In conjunction with the films, the Arlington-Blanchard-Carr Company is providing amusement. This stock company is now on its sixteenth week in Broadway theaters, playing in rotation to the Ideal, West and East Broadway theaters.

The sale of the Royal Theater to the Broadway Amusement Company, has lightened considerably the duties of Manager Louis J. Dittmar, of the Majestic Theater Company. Mr. Dittmar has supervised both these houses in the past. The opening of the new Arcadia skating rink and dance hall made additional calls on Mr. Dittmar's time, and this fact was partly responsible for the sale of the Royal, which seats 440 people. Mr. Dittmar will retain the management of the Majestic, one of the most popular theaters in the South. He also is interested in several business houses, and in addition to his regular duties is vice-president of the Kentucky Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

Much improvement has been felt in Louisville motion picture circles in the receipt of films, which for a time was exceedingly poor. Railroad facilities have been put back on a normal basis, apparently, and exhibitors are receiving and showing new films daily, as in the past. Theaters of Jeffersonville, Ind., which were closed down for a time by hight waters, have resumed business. The Ohio, after striving to break all previous records for altitude, has crawled back into its normal channels and business in moving picture circles is splendid.

The Central Film Service Company, of Indianapolis, has secured the Kentucky rights on "As in a Looking Glass," the three-reel Monopol offering. The same concern will show the feature in Indiana, including it in the regular service.

The Orpheum Theater, of Louisville, one of the most popular houses of the Princess Amusement Company, attracted big crowds recently with pictures of flood scenes in Dayton.

Work has begun on the new annex to the Grand Theater, of New Albany, Ind., the house of the Switow Amusement Company. Plans have been completed whereby the Grand will be closed down but a few days during the final stages of the building. The Grand, when completed, will have a seating capacity of about 1,200. M. Switow is head of the company which only recently was incorporated.

Despite the fact that the Gaiety Theater, a burlesque house of Louisville, is to lose its present service by a re-arrangement of interests, the proposed Jefferson Theater will go up according to original plans. The Gayety is to lose out after this season, and the disposition of the Jefferson street house is uncertain. It is announced that no change will be made in plans for the Jefferson, which will present vaudeville and moving pictures. Irvin C. Simon, president of the Princess Amusement Company, is manager of the Jefferson Theater Company.

Attendance at the Orpheum Theater, Louisville, is likely to be hurt somewhat by the building operations taking place on adjoining property. This was recently put out of commission by a fire. The place is owned by the Whallen Brothers, proprietors of the Buckingham Theater, the home of burlesque and moving pictures, and for a time it was thought that a new theater would go up on the ruins. However, the Whallen Brothers recently decided to erect a business house there, and work has begun. The entrance to the Orpheum is cut off to some extent by the razing of the ruins.

Miss Vera Black was a recent visitor at the Majestic Theater, of Louisville, lecturing on the making of motion pictures. Miss Black is very popular in Louisville through her connection with the Biograph Company, and exceptionally large crowds heard her descriptions of the inside of the film-making industry.

Despite unfavorable weather, Louisville exhibitors have had splendid business recently. Many high-class films found their way into the Kentucky metropolis, and have proved attractions of note, without exception. With good prospects for better weather, the situation is in splendid shape. Films are being changed daily in most of the houses, as in the past, express companies now being able to accept shipments for immediate delivery, and the famine of a couple of weeks ago being a thing of the past.

David Levinson, manager of the Novelty Theater, has enlarged his orchestra and added two popular Louisville singers to his program. A three-piece aggregation is now providing music for films shown at the Novelty. Fred Wells and William Green, both well known in moving picture circles, are the vocalists at the Novelty. This is a good deal of an innovation, as Mr. Levinson has not favored singers greatly in the past. An added attraction is J. Howard Albert, who carries his own slides with him and lectures on celebrated cathedrals, great thoroughfares and the tombs of noted men.

While the moving picture theaters as a whole are in good shape in every respect, a rumor which is now going the rounds in the Kentucky metropolis, indicates that this is not altogether true of the theaters which stage legitimate shows. With the regular season approaching an end, stories of all kinds are getting into circulation, and while perhaps not absolutely trustworthy, are at least interesting. It is said that but one or two of the legitimate theaters has made money during the season which is ending. This being the case, theatrical men are looking askance at the new National Theater, on which work is progressing slowly. The Gayety, the home of burlesque, is scheduled to be closed next fall, and may be converted into a moving picture house. The old Avenue, formerly noted for the class of melodrama presented, but more recently a motion picture house, also is to pass away. It is said that work on the Jefferson Theater, a vaudeville house, will begin shortly. Both the Shubert, Masonic and Macauley's theaters, which have presented high-class attractions, are said to have done no better than break even this season, and it is asserted that one will be closed during the coming season. In the meanwhile, animated pictures are drawing big crowds daily, and exhibitors are free from worry.

Though pedestrians were alarmed by the explosion of a barrel of denatured alcohol at Taylor's drug store, at Fourth and Chestnut streets, patrons of the Masonic Theater and Keith's Theater, a few feet away, were not frightened, and few knew there was a fire near by until they arrived on the street. Both playhouses are near the drug store. Patrons of the Masonic left the house when the odor of smoke reached them. At Keith's it was announced that the moving pictures, which usually conclude the performance, would not be shown, and the audience was in ignorance of the cause until the street was reached. The blaze was kept from spreading, the loss being only $500.

W. C. Legg, of the New Albany, Ind., Amusement Company, has returned from Indianapolis, Ind., where he secured a permit for the erection of a vaudeville and moving picture theater in New Albany. A four-story brick building on the south side of Main street, between Pearl and State, has been purchased by the new company. The upper floors are to be removed and extensive alterations made. The house will be 60 by 120 feet, and will have a seating capacity of 1,000. Work will begin May 1.

Moving picture theaters of Maysville, Ky., have reopened after a shut-down of a week because of the flood. Both the Pastime and the Gem have reopened, while the Washington will follow shortly.

Cornelius Owen, manager of the Rex Theater, of Fulton, Ky., sustained slight injuries recently on his first trup with a new Ford automobile, which he purchased. Mr. Owen lost control of the machine and drove it into a grocery store. Neither exhibitor nor car was injured, the chief loss being to the grocer's eggs.

The new Princess Theater has opened at Earlington, Ky., Forrester & Fawsett being the owners. Four reels of picture are to be supplied daily by the St. Louis License Film Exchange. Handsome souvenirs were given away to patrons at the opening performances.

The opening of the new Princess Theater, of Russellville, Ky., has been delayed by reason of the flood, which held back furnishings for the house. The motion picture theater will be put into commission late in April, however.

The American Amusement Company has been formed at Central City, Ky., and will operate a chain of theaters, according to present plans. The American has taken over the Empress, formerly owned by the Consolidated Theaters Company, of Louisville. Alterations are planned in the theater, which is a modern one. The roof is to be elevated to make room for the installation of a balcony, which will provide seats for colored people. John T. May has been elected president of the American Amusement Company, which will erect other houses shortly. T. W. Murphy retains the management of the Empress.

A Power's projection machine has been purchased by the management of the Auditorium, of Danville, Ky. The machine supplements other new equipment recently purchased.

The City Council of Henderson, Ky., has rejected a proposal to close a moving picture theater of that city. A petition from the Audubon Baptist Church and the Clay Street Methodist Church was presented to the Council recently, asking that the theater in question be forced to close from Saturday night to Monday morning. The Council held that the matter was out of their jurisdiction, and that they had no voice in the matter.

The management of the Tabb Opera House, of Mt. Sterling, Ky., came to the rescue of Ohio flood sufferers recently, giving a benefit performance. The admission price was raised to 15 cents, and more than $60 was netted for victims of the high

J. F. Hawn is president of a company formed at Barbourville, Ky., for the purpose of erecting a new theater. A site has been purchased and work will begin immediately. Motion pictures are to form a part of the program to be presented in the new theater, according to plans of the promoters.

Dr. Edward Behymer, of Cincinnati, will erect a motion picture theater at 3737 and 3739 Eastern avenue, in the near future. It will be 32 by 125 feet and contain 400 seats.

The owners of Norwood Theater, Cincinnati, have postponed improvements in the theater temporarily. Owing to upset conditions, contractors have been unable to bid on the work, and the alterations will be held in abeyance for a few weeks.

The Imperial Theater, 280 West McMicken avenue, Cincinnati, is to be improved by the addition of a balcony, which will increase the seating capacity by about 250.

BUFFALO.

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE. Local No. 6, of Buffalo, recently held a luncheon at which plans for the national convention of moving picture men in New York in July were discussed. Exhibitors from other parts of the State were in attendance. The idea of raising the standard of pictures was advocated at the meeting.

A strike of Buffalo street railway employees seriously hurt business at the moving picture theaters here last week. The streets were patrolled by several thousand members of the New York State Militia. On account of serious rioting by the strikers the regular patrons of moving picture houses preferred to witness the exciting scenes on the streets than to go to shows. The strike ended Friday night with a victory for the men and attendance at the theaters soon resumed regular proportions.

Manager Marcus is taking care of large crowds at the Academy Theater this week, where pictures of the Dayton floods are being shown.

An attractive electric sign was erected in front of the Strand Theater last week. Manager Eidel, of that house, is using the high class picture, entitled "Satan," as a feature. "The Prisoner of Zenda" was the attraction at this house the week of April 21. There was a special musical program.

On account of traffic being tied up by the street car strike Manager Laughlin of the Majestic Theater advertised the middle of last week that there would be no moving picture show at that house Sunday night.

Mitchell H. Mark, head of the Mark-Brock Theatrical Enterprises, owners of several moving picture theaters and others, have sold the Lewis block, Swan and Washington Streets, in this city.

The Edison talking pictures still occupy a headline position on the bill at Shea's vaudeville theater here. Al Becker and John Carr are in charge of this part of the program. Mr. Becker has operated moving pictures at Shea's for several years. His assistant is a brother-in-law of Michael Shea, owner of the theater.

The New Lyric Theater, on Washington Street, near Lafayette Square, will open May 22, and will feature vaudeville and Kinemacolor pictures. The owner is Mitchell H. Mark, who is proprietor of the Family Theater, Buffalo, and several other moving picture houses here and in other cities. The Family, which has played vaudeville and pictures, will feature pictures exclusively after May 22. A. R. Sherry, manager of the Family, will also manage the New Lyric, which is only a few feet from the former house. Isidore Moses is his assistant. The Lyric, which, by complete remodeling, has been converted into the New Lyric, played the Stair & Haviland attractions for several years. The house was first called The Corinne and later the Lyceum. Work on Mr. Mark's magnificent theater, The Strand, at 47th Street and Broadway, New York, is progressing rapidly.

An effort is being made to prevent the opening of moving picture theaters in Hornell, N. Y., on Sundays.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Buffalo has adopted a resolution that its members will refrain from exhibiting any film showing advertising in any form.

A representative of a Chicago moving picture theater, whose name has not been announced, is considering a plan to build a similar house on Central Avenue, Dunkirk, N. Y.

The new Globe Theater, Main and Ferry Streets, Buffalo, will open May 5 under the management of the Sherman Amusement Company. The house will feature moving pictures and will be fireproof.

Charles Bowe, manager of Keith's moving picture theater, was formerly connected with the Academy, when it played melodrama.

H. E. Hughes, formerly president of the Slide Advertising Company, of this city, has been appointed salesman in charge of the Buffalo and Rochester territory of the Lee Lash Company of New York. This concern deals in slide advertising for moving picture theaters, scenic painting, etc.

The Bijou Dream, Main and North Division Streets, managed by J. H. Beaver, will be remodeled at a considerable expense. This moving picture house was one of the first of its kind in Buffalo and occupies a valuable site in the heart of the business section.

BILLY BISON.

INDIANA.

MANAGER JOHNSON, of the Lyric Theater, at Champaign, Ill., has closed a deal with Dr. P. Mackay, of LaFayette, whereby that city will have a modern picture house. A site has been secured on Main Street and work begun on a fireproof structure 37 ft. 6 ins. x 120 ft., which will represent an investment of $35,000. The Champaign house will be managed by C. L. Hunter, who has been assistant manager for the last six months.

The Palmer Amusement Company, of Washington, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000 to operate theaters. The incorporators are Lyman H. O'Donnell, Ernest E. Forsythe, Samuel C. Oskridge, John Bourgholtzer, Harry M. Palmer and Ray Palmer.

The Ticket Premium Company, of Fort Wayne, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000 to conduct picture shows. The incorporators are E. T. Keech, J, Kaminski, Edward Krause and F. L. King.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

KALEM.

THE ADVENTURE OF AN HEIRESS (May 12).—Florence, the daughter of H. Benjamin Baker, a millionaire, chafes at the restrictions which her parents exercise over her. Some girl friends call, explaining that it is "Tag Day," and ask Florence to join them in selling tags to raise funds for a benevolent organization. The parents of the heiress are horrified and will not listen to the proposition.

Baker is not inclined to favor his secretary, Dick, as a son-in-law, and when the young man attempts to intercede for Florence, he is dismissed from the millionaire's service.

Later, Florence's father relents somewhat, and brings the girl a handsome necklace as a peace offering. She places the pearls in her jewel box, and, putting the key in her purse, she quietly leaves the house to join the girls.

An enterprising reporter learns of the gift and writes an article for his paper, stating that the young heiress will no doubt wear the necklace at her forthcoming debut. The item comes to the notice of Prentiss, a society crook, who manages to steal Florence's purse while purchasing a tag from her. Having secured the key to the jewel case, Prentiss enters the residence in the guise of an employe of a vacuum cleaning concern.

While in search of another position, Dick, the former secretary, becomes suspicious of Prentiss' actions and is the means of securing the necklace and bringing the crook to justice.

MAN'S GREED FOR GOLD (May 14).—The old miser, living in a tenement, keeps his savings in an earthen idol. The janitor of the building suspects that the old man has concealed wealth, but is unable to locate it. Finally the miser dies and the janitor disposes of the idol to a dealer in antiques.

Carter, a bank clerk, is given to speculation, and in response to his wife's earnest appeal, he promises to give up the precarious practices, which are jeopardizing his position and happiness. However, the young man is weak and breaks his promise.

While shopping the wife buys the idol and brings it home. Carter is called upon for margins and takes his wife's jewels to meet the demand. Later in the day he receives a second telegram in the wife's presence, and the sacrificing woman brings out the jewel box, only to discover that she has been robbed by her husband.

Fearing that Carter will become desperate, his wife removes the cartridges from the revolver which he keeps in a drawer.

That night a burglar visits the house. Carter goes after the intruder with the revolver, but the crook discovers that the weapon is unloaded and attacks the bank clerk. Mrs. Carter rushes to the scene and fells the burglar with the idol which she grasps from the mantel. The earthen image is shattered and a fortune lies at the feet of the young couple. As the burgler is led to prison, the clerk assures his wife that he will profit by his experience and they happily make their plans for the future.

PAT, THE COWBOY (May 16).—Pat bids farewell to the ould sod and sets sail for America, where he secures work on a ranch. His eccentricities furnish a great deal of amusement for the cowboys, and Betty, the ranchman's daughter, misses no opportunity to ridicule the stranger. When the men leave for the round-up, Pat, determined to demonstrate his efficiency, mounts his pet mule and proceeds to corrall all the pigs. This is the last straw and he is banished from the ranch.

Betty has given her promise to the foreman, and goes to the church to await the ceremony. But the bride-groom has a thrilling experience with some desperate bandits and fails to keep the appointment. Betty becomes tired of waiting and when Pat appears on the scene with the captured outlaws, the girl decides that her first choice was a mistake.

FOOD INSPECTION (May 16).—From cold statistics the average person is unable to comprehend the immense amount of work accomplished by the Health Department of America's metropolis. Through this interesting topical production we learn that four and one-half billion pounds of food are received in New York annually. In 1912, 26,000,000 pounds of impure food were destroyed by the inspectors. A cargo of 34,000 boxes of lemons from Italy is examined, together with other commodities. The five million quarts of milk received each day in New York; the bacteriological tests and the examination of eggs, present an interesting sight.

THE POET AND THE SOLDIER (May 17).—Adapted from Trench's "Apollo and the Seaman," by permission of Henry Holt & Company, Publishers, New York.

"I heard a soldier sing some trifle
  Out in the sun-dried veldt, alone;
He lay and cleaned his grimy rifle
  Idly behind a stone.
What grief of love had he to stifle
  Basking so idly by his stone,
That grimy soldier with his rifle,
  Out in the veldt alone?"

The poet finds an answer to his question when, later, he meets the soldier, mortally hurt in the army hospital, and hears his story. He learns of the soldier's courtship and happy married life in an English village: his transfer to a hill garrison in India, where tribesmen have been making trouble; the attempt made by a native rebel to assassinate him as he and his wife sit together in the moonlight; the sacrifice of her own life to save his.

Happy in knowing that the period of waiting for his loved one is almost over, the soldier takes the hand of the poet.

"If after death, love, comes a waking,
  And in their camp so dark and still,
The men of dust hear bugles breaking
  Their halt upon the hill,
To me the slow and silver pealing
  That then the last high trumphet pours
Shall softer than the dawn come stealing
  For, with its call, comes yours!"

THE BATTLE FOR FREEDOM (2 parts—May 17).—An illustration of the perils of crossing the South African veldt. The Willis family at Cape Town suffers reverses and starts with a party across the arid plain for Kimberly to recoup their fortunes, leaving behind the son Charles, aged 20, and the old grandfather. The entire party perishes on the way for lack of water, except the little Willis girl, Ellen, whose father steals enough water from the general supply to keep her alive. She is found by a party of Boers, and is adopted by a Boer family named Joubert. Charles and his grandfather at Cape Town hear of the calamity and never expect to see any of their family again.

Twenty years later Ellen is the belle of Jacobsdal. Charles, her brother, is a captain in the British army. The Boer war is on and the Joubert farm becomes a battlefield. A great battle takes place and the Boers are defeated. Charles takes charge of the prisoners. A locket Ellen wears discloses to him her identity.

THE PAYMASTER (May 10).—Shorty Kennedy and Bill Watson, two notorious ex-convicts, applied for work at the Great Western Mining Company. The superintendent, not knowing of their record, gave them employment. In less than a week the two men were discharged for drinking, and when they saw Carson go to town for money, they decided to hold him up. Carson was delayed at the bank until too late to pay the men that day, and there being no safe at the superintendent's office, he took the money home and secreted it in his bedroom. The ex-convicts concocted a plan to get Carson away from the house, and, by securing one of the Mining Company's letter heads, sent Carson a note purporting to be from the superintendent's wife, stating that her husband was taken suddenly ill and asking his assistance. His suspicions were not aroused until on his arrival at the superintendent's house, he found him in perfect health and his wife declared the note a forgery. During Carson's absence, the ex-convicts entered his home, bound his wife and endeavored, through intimidation, to make her disclose where the money was hidden. When she refused, they made a careful search, during which Kennedy found a box of "Rough on Rats," and with fiendish ingenuity, the two desperadoes decided on a plan to force Carson's wife to tell where the money was hidden. Taking a piece of bread, they mixed the rat poison with butter and sugar, and before the helpless mother, they offered it to her child. As the baby reached out its hand for the poisoned bread, the mother could stand the strain no longer, and told the men where the money was hidden. In the meantime, Carson tried to reach his home by telephone, but the crooks had broken the receiving cord, leaving the wire open. Carson heard the struggle his wife was having with the robbers, and calling on the miners for assistance, arrived at his home in time to save the money.

LUCKY COHEN (May 12).—Sol Cohen, a Jew peddler, has the whole village of Pikeville buying the cheap jewelry that he has for sale. He tells them that it is solid gold, and they fall for the "stall" and many of the men and women make purchases. Sol leaves them well satisfied, and he is also satisfied, for he has made a fine profit. Not long after one of the jays, while washing his hands, makes the discovery that the ring that he has bought is nothing more than brass, and wild with excitement, he informs the constable and townspeople, who have also been stung. They immediately get clubs and other weapons and start in pursuit of the Jew. In the meantime, he has wandered along and a tramp, who is hiding behind a tree, holds him up with his empty hand covered with a handkerchief, takes his pack and clothes away from him and leaves him bewailing his fate. The crowd catch sight of the tramp, now dressed up in the Jew's clothes, and give chase. They catch him after he has dropped the pack and tray, right at the foot of the tree behind which the Jew is hiding. They beat the tramp up thinking that he is the Jew, while lucky Sol recovers his goods and goes on his way rejoicing.

A TEN-ACRE GOLD BRICK (May 12).—Jed Bascom and his wife, who live in the Middle Atlantic States, where the winters are noted for their severity, are about tired of the cold and snow. One evening, after Jed has put in a hard day's work on the farm, and has arrived home with an armful of wood, he receives a prospectus and reading matter concerning Tropical Farms. He answers the letter and tells the real estate men that he will come on as a prospective purchaser. Skin & Dolle, the real estate men, who are land sharks, upon receiving Jed's reply decide to fix up a fake fruit farm on one of the worthless pieces of land that they have. Accordingly they buy a quantity of grape fruit, oranges, bananas and pine apples. These they give their men instructions to tie upon the trees with twine, so that when the unsuspecting buyer arrives they can show him the wonderful bargain they are going to sell him. Jed arrives and falls into the trap. He buys the farm, but he pays the bill with a check. The next day he takes a survey of his purchase, and finds out the deception. Instead of raising a row, he and his wife borrow a hundred dollars from the land sharks. Then he wires the bank to stop payment on the check. He then sends Skin & Dolle a letter, telling them what he has found out. When they receive the letter they faint.

THE PADRE'S STRATEGY (May 13).—Ramona Martinez, a beautiful Mexican flower girl, is the support of her widowed mother. One day, while out gathering flowers for her basket, she meets a young Mexican youth and they are mutually attracted with each other. In time the acquaintance ripens into love. Manuel Vasquez, the leader of a band of Mexican guerillas, comes to the city one night and enters a cafe where many of the army officers and better class of Mexicans are enjoying themselves. During the evening, Ramona enters the cafe to sell her flowers. She passes from table to table and finally comes to where Vasquez is seated. He speaks to her but she repulses him. He leaves the cafe and calls his lieutenant and one of his band, and tells them that they shall get the girl and bring her to him. They go to the cafe, and as the girl leaves she is overpowered and carried away by the bandits. Jose, who is coming to meet her and take her home, sees the abduction, but is too late to be of any service. He enters the cafe and tells of Ramon's trouble. The habitues of the place are not interested in the flower girl and his appeal for aid is unheeded. He then decides to go to the priest and ask for aid. He does so, and while there a messenger comes from the bandit, asking that the Padre accompany the messenger into the mountains to perform a marriage ceremony. The Padre hits upon a plan whereby they can rescue Ramona, and he gives Jose a priest's robe, and they arm themselves. They then accompany the messenger to the stronghold of the bandits. As the ceremony is about to be performed the Padre and Jose suddenly draw the guns and overpower the two bandits and bind them. The Padre and Ramona then leave the camp, she, dressed as a priest, goes for aid, for Jose has been captured. They take two of the bandit's horses and start for the city. Arriving there, they go for the cavalry, who immediately set out for the rendezvous. They surprise the bandits and capture the entire band. As they are led away, Jose and Ramona kneel and receive the blessings of the Padre.

LONGING FOR A MOTHER (May 15).—This story deals with the longing of a child for his mother, whom he has never seen. The father, Lord Harcourt, avoids the little fellow, who is a constant reminder of the woman whose life went out when the long hoped for son came. The art gallery, where a full length oil painting of the sweet faced woman hangs, is the little boy's favorite resting place. Raymond gazes on the face, and he fancies that his mother smiles at him. Then in a phantasy he sees his mother step out of the frame. They hold sweet communion, and the boy feels that he is no longer alone. They play and romp over the lawn. The phantasy continues; his mother hears his evening prayer, he kneels by her side and repeats the words she has taught him. She lays him in his little bed and tells him stories till the "sand man" comes to claim him. Then he awakens from his day-dream, and only the sweet figure on the canvas remains. He is sobbing out his disappointment against the unresponsive painting, when a sweet young woman that Lord Harcourt has asked to be his wife, comes upon the motherless boy, and hears his impassioned appeal to his mother to return to him. Her whole heart responds to the child and she takes him in her arms. Lord Harcourt, missing his fiancée, hurries to the picture gallery in search of her and sees the tender scene. The man has never before realized the heart hunger of the motherless boy, and the woman, soon to be his wife, shows him how the child has suffered for a parent's love. Harcourt's conscience reproves him, he tries to atone to the boy, who responds eagerly, and finds happiness at last, in the tender arms of his new mother, and in the long denied companionship of his father.

BREED OF THE WEST (May 16).—Tom Morris, a young cowboy, is in love with Helen Walters, the daughter of an old miner. Jim Watson, the foreman of a ranch, is also in love with Helen, but she prefers Tom, and Jim resolves to get rid of his rival in some way, thereby leaving the coast clear for his own wooing. A band of Indians have been committing depredations in the neighborhood and Jim devises a plan of forming an expedition to exterminate them. He also plans to have Tom accompany them, resolving that he will not return alive. Helen, hearing of the plan to exterminate the Indians, makes Tom promise that he will not accompany the party. When the posse is being formed, Tom is asked to join, but refuses. The men taunt him and accuse him of cowardice. He finally gains Helen's consent to go, and receives Jim's sacred promise that he will bring Tom back unharmed. The expedition departs. In a battle with the Indians the little party is nearly exterminated and Tom and Jim are both badly wounded. Jim discovers Tom lying unconscious and determines to kill him. As he is about to raise his gun to commit the deed, a vision comes to him of his promise to Helen, and he decides to prove himself a man. Placing the form of the unconscious Tom on his shoulders, he starts across the desert for home. During a little party, at which Helen is present, she sits thinking of her lover, when suddenly a premonition comes to her that Tom is in great danger. So strongly is it suggested to her that she induces her father and several other friends to accompany her in a search for Tom. They start out on the trail taken by the expedition. In the meantime, Jim has been tramping across the desert with his burden and finally the strain proves too much and he falls exhausted. There is only a little water left and as he is about to drink some of it, the unconscious Tom revives and asks for a drink. Jim hands him the canteen and Tom, in his delirium, drains it. Realizing that they must have water to remain alive, Jim again picks Tom up and starts on his weary tramp. After a short time, he is unable to go further and sinks to the ground. Here Helen and the searchers find them. Tom is revived, but Jim's wounds and his exertions have proved too much for him and he is beyond help. Helen realizes that he has given his life to fulfill the promise he made her, and she presses a kiss upon his lips as he dies in her arms.

RETRIBUTION (May 17).—Stephen Elliott is the president of the Traders Bank and Milton Gray is the cashier. One day Elliott comes into Gray's office and is introduced to the cashier's wife. She is a pretty woman and the president feels that he would like to possess her. The next day he sends an invitation for Gray and his wife to visit him and take dinner, that he may become more acquainted with the cashier's wife. He then plans to incriminate the husband. A few days later he again visits the cashier's office, and during a pleasant conversation, Gray drops his pencil. As he stoops to pick it up the president surreptitiously takes a bundle of currency from the desk. The next morning it is found that the money of the bank is short. An investigation takes place, without favorable result. Gray declares his innocence, but without avail. The president sends for the police and has the cashier arrested. He then goes to Gray's home and informs the wife that her husband is a criminal and in jail. He promises that he will help clear him, but of course does not intend to do so. Gray is tried and sentenced to a term in the penitentiary. The next action of the arch rascal is to induce Gray's wife to get a divorce which is successfully carried through. Elliott then proposes to the woman and is accepted. The warden of the prison treats Gray very kindly and instead of giving him menial duties to perform, assigns him to do typewriting and act as a clerk. Six years pass, Elliott has married the divorced wife and they have a child. Gray having served his term, is released from prison and swears vengeance. He watches the president's mansion, and one night, Elliott, sitting in his library, sees Gray's face at the window. He is appalled. The wife and maid are upstairs putting the child to bed. The guilty husband is terrified with fear as he sees his victim draw a gun. Gray will kill him on the stroke of twelve. As he makes a movement to prevent Kate from entering the room, he is attacked with heart failure and falls back in the chair dead.

SELIG.

A MIDNIGHT BELL (Special—2 parts—May 5).—The picture opens showing the sitting room in Widow Gray's house, the residence of Nora Fairford, village school teacher. She and the widow's daughter, Annie, are friends. On her way to school, the teacher is met by John Bradbury, the young minister. They walk together as far as the postoffice and there are met by Lizzie Webber and Nellie Bowen, spinsters, who engage the minister's attention with gossip of the coming church social and he is forced to leave Nora. They walk to the church where the party is augmented by the minister's sister, Dot, and the old deacon, Lemuel Tidd.

The next scene takes place in the village bank, of which Stephen Larabee, is cashier. Annie Grey loves Ned, an officer of the bank and nephew of the president, Squire Olcott. Finding that Annie doesn't love him, Larabee, on the night of the church social, goes to the bank, opens the inside door of the safe with a duplicate of the key he had given Ned, and abstracts several packages of money, hiding them in the cushion of his pew at church. This is done to direct the blame toward Ned. Martin Tripp, an overgrown schoolboy, seeing the church door ajar, thinks that a ghost has been there and places a bear trap in the belfry with which to catch the ghost.

The next morning with malevolent intent, Larabee asks Ned for the safe key and upon opening the safe he feigns great surprise in finding the money gone. In self-protection he brings the justice of the peace. A few days later the constable gets a telegram from Boston stating that Ned is innocent, but that Squire Olcott has been speculating. Thereupon Ned, in a spirit of immolation, proclaims that he is the guilty one. The Boston detective, feeling sure that Ned is innocent, helps him to escape jail and flee to another part of the country in order that the trial may be delayed, thus giving him time to run down the real thief. The fugitive goes to the church to sleep and there encounters Larabee taking the hidden money. The deacon, who is up in the belfry doing some oiling, see the struggle, but being caught in the bear trap is unable to get down. He therefore rings the bell at midnight, bringing the villagers to the church. The desperate but quick-witted Larabee declares that he found Ned with the money, but when Deacon Tidd comes down with the bear-trap on his foot, he tells the true story, which sends Larabee off to jail, where he belongs—so that justice is meted out to the wicked and several pretty romances culminate satisfactorily.

THE POST-IMPRESSIONISTS (May 12).—Dick Carew, the son of a soap-maker, and Dorothy Wilton, the daughter of a lawyer, meet in Paris, where they have gone from America to imbibe an atmosphere sicklied with artistic buncomb by the Cubists. The young man, visiting a cabaret, the meeting place of frousy post-impressionists, is impressed with their windy theories, mainly denunciations of everything that common sense and decency understands. Dick is just ignorant enough about art to be impressed with this buncomb, and takes Dorothy to the Cubist. Their fathers come to Paris to visit them, and are allowed to go to a night class where the merry maniacs are studying a model that has been distorted artificially by Cubes in order to impress the unimaginary, so that the face of the boxy model is the only semblance to "the human form divine." The fathers naturally think they need the services of an alienist instead of an artist, to tell them what it is all about. The parents are next dragged to an exhibition of the raw art products, and gaze with wonder at the inscrutable crude color markings on the wall. The judges pick out two lovely nudes, that look like a jumble of Jack-straws, the complications of Jacks-at-the-easel, and award them the first prizes. These strange things are from the brushes of their children, and, by a trick in photography, they reveal from the seeming wreckage, the faces of their fathers.

LIEUTENANT JONES (May 13).—Col. Stanleigh is a "sporty" individual, infatuated with Mary Thompson, the sister-in-law of the post commandant, and the daughter of an old reprobate addicted to cups and cards. Mary loves Lieut. Jones. This fact infuriates Stanleigh, who plans dire revenge on both. Old Thompson, heavily indebted to Stanleigh, is induced by him to rob the safe of the monthly pay roll. Jones frustrates this plan, but is not disposed to ruin the weak old man, on account of the love he bears for his daughter. Stanleigh discovers this and diverts suspicion toward Jones, who is tried, convicted and sentenced. An Indian uprising calls the garrison away from the fort. Lieut. Jones rides out alone, disgraced. He discovers the ruse of the Indians in time to make a desperate ride, get in touch with the misguided troops, and get them back to save the post. Poor old Thompson, mortally wounded, confesses his crime. This exonerates Jones and implicates Stanleigh. The lovers are again united and Stanleigh loses his insignia of rank.

BUCK RICHARDS' BRIDE (May 14).—Buck Richards lives in untidiness on a lonely ranch with a slovenly Chinaman as a cook. He is too much engrossed in his affairs to realize the loneliness or meagerness of his life until he is accidentally visited by a homesteader with a neat, wholesome wife and babies. This brisk, orderly woman proceeds to straighten up his home. He feels, for the first time, the potential thrill of fatherhood and the lack of his lonely life. He finds a bright, capable young woman on his next trip to town, and marries her. She grows to like him, but he seems so completely absorbed in his business affairs that a misunderstanding arises. Finally she feels that he no longer loves her, and goes back to her old life of service at a cheap restaurant in a frontier town. But the thing not counted upon comes to pass, and, as she sits one day with her own baby cooing in her arms, she feels that its busy father has the right to know of its existence. She sends him a postal card with the picture of herself and the baby. This brings him flying into town and their misunderstandings are soon patched up and a happier life begins.

IN THE LONG AGO (May 15).—Dreamer comes wandering down a canyon toward the sea, playing softly on a reed pipe. Starlight and a group of maidens are picking flowers. They have no thought of him. But the low, sweet music moves Starlight away from the vacuous gayety of her companions. In the lodge of her father, the great chief, she sits moodily unanswering the suit of the painted warrior lingering in the shadows of the big tepee, ignoring his gifts, to the disgust of her father.

Dreamer sits by the moonlit waves playing a sea-tune. Starlight comes, drawn by the magic of his melody. The love motif holds them in its spell; but it is broken by the rude song of warriors drawing their war-craft on the beach. He hides the girl behind him, as he plays to disarm the suspicions of the grim savages. They pass, reviling him for his gentle weakness.

cine man make an evil compact to win the girl through a love potion. Dreamer is brought before the chief and scoffing warriors; for the nonce weakness leaves him and he combats with the greatest warrior and overcomes him in the interim. The medicine man sneaks into the chief's lodge and throws Starlight into a trance. After victory Dreamer demands the hand of the chief's daughter, and then finds her as one dead, owing to the mischievous incantation of the medicine man. He would play her back to life, but his flute was broken before battle, so he flees, helpless, to the loneliness of the woods. The medicine man comes to restore the maiden but fails. In his solitude Dreamer recalls the legend that a flute from the thigh-bone of a rival will restore life. As Starlight is about to be laid away her true lover comes running with his flute of rigid bone that has cost him much effort to secure. Then he comes playing in the village, and the music lifts above the wailing lamentation—the dead. Starlight rises from her catafalque, the color of life is restored to her cheeks, and she follows Dreamer away beyond the horizon to happiness.

A DAUGHTER OF THE CONFEDERACY (May 16).—General Lee gives Lieut. Archer a despatch to be carried to General Jackson. The young soldier meets a Union scouting party, and wounded, he finds sanctuary at the Allen mansion. The house is subsequently searched by the Union party, but Virginia Allen, by conducting the officer through a secret door in the wainscoating of the dining room, saves him. She then takes him away and hides him in a cave. She takes General Lee's despatch from the lining of Archer's coat and tucks it in her hair, and then rides away with the Union soldiers toward the Confederate lines. She takes this document to Gen. Jackson without difficulty and he is deeply grateful. Eventually she returns to her own home and finds Lieutenant Archer recovered. They plight their troth and he goes back to the field of war.

The students show their practicability in caring for every detail on this trip.

VITAGRAPH.

THE VAMPIRE OF THE DESERT (2 parts, May 16).—Ishmael, the son of Hagar, an old hag, living on the edge of the desert, falls completely under the charms of Lispeth, a vampire. One day there passes the miserable hut in which these three strange people live, a wealthy banker, named William Corday, his wife and son, Derrick. Lispeth wields her magic power over the husband and soon has him in her power. When he attempts to kiss her, she repulses him. So clever is she that the wife has no idea of her husband's unfaithfulness. Acceding to the wishes of Lispeth to be taken away from her humble abode, the banker and his wife take her to the city and give her a home with them. In fashionable dress her fascinating powers seem doubled, and one day in his study the husband beseeches Lispeth to flee with him. This is overheard by the son, who denounces his father. In order that the son should not tell his mother, Lispeth assures him that it was with him whom his father wanted her to flee. The son, believing this, embraces Lispeth, but is thrown aside by the angry father. Then Lispeth tells the father that she had to win the son over in order that he should not tell his mother. Lispeth continues her play with the father and son; but at length arranges to elope with the old man. Just as they are leaving the house, Lispeth is interrupted by the son. Father and son are facing an awkward situation, when Ishmael arrives and takes Lispeth back home. In a maniacal burst of fury, Ishmael takes her life.

THE WRONG PAIR (May 12).—Peter Hobson, an irascible old gentleman, throws fits when he is told over the phone that his daughter is about to elope. He starts for home at top speed, thinking perhaps to be in time to stop the couple. On the way he almost winged by an automobile, and on looking around sees it to be that of his would-be son-in-law, with his daughter actually in the car with him. Hobson quickly secures the aid of a policeman, who starts off in a racing car to chase and arrest the couple. Then, in his excitement, the old man posts up a notice offering a reward of one thousand dollars for the capture of the pair in time to prevent the marriage. Every young man in the neighborhood scours the country, seeking the elopers.

The policeman, in the racing car, catches up with and arrests a pair of speeders in an automobile, bringing them back with him to Hobson's residence. He will not listen to any explanation, but just forces them to come along. Simultaneously with the policeman's arrival at the house, comes a number of young men, bringing several other pairs in tow. It costs Mr. Hobson quite a lot of money to get rid of them all without suits or damages. The last pair to arrive, come unattended, and prove to be the elopers, who have had the knot tied and come back for papa's forgiveness. Papa is by this time all in and has not energy enough to refuse it. He sees that he cannot change the condition of affairs, and so decides to make the best of it.

THE GRAND CANYON (May 12).—A splendid travelogue, showing the wildest scenes of the majestic valley of the Colorado River. The valley where the human voice may be heard over fourteen miles away.

MR. HORATIO SPARKINS (May 13).—A young linen draper's clerk "blues" himself and has a rare good time, posing as a society man named Horatio Sparkins, while his real name is Samuel Smith. He spends all his money on fine clothes and his evenings in going to assemblies and balls, where he pretends to be a poet and a man of considerable means. At one of the balls he meets the Maldertons, a family of parvenues, who at once see a chance of making a good match for their daughter, Teresa, who is getting to be decidedly passe. They go to a Mr. Flamwell, a young man who claims to have acquaintances in the best society, and ask about Mr. Sparkins.

Flamwell tells them that he believes that Horatio is a young nobleman in disguise. Mama Malderton then makes plans to get the supposed nobleman into the matrimonial net, in which also shall be her daughter. She invites Horatio to dinners and parties and shows him a right good time. The whole family lionize him to the best of their ability and write to their friends, saying that Teresa has at last made an ideal conquest. Sparkins, who well sees what they are after, does not spoil the fun, but enjoys himself thoroughly, making the best of his opportunities for cheap enjoyment.

All goes well until Mama Malderton takes her daughter on a shopping expedition. By chance they enter the store in which Smith, alias Horatio Sparkins, is employed. To their horror they discover that their poetic young nobleman is merely a dry-goods clerk. Teresa promptly has hysterics and is conveyed home by her mother, who has to break the dreadful news to the deluded family.

A SOUL IN BONDAGE (May 15).—Passing into a cabaret show with a gay party of friends, Winnie Alden, acting on a sudden impulse, takes a little flower girl with her. This causes much joking among her companions, who cannot understand what has come over her. A chance remark of the little girl's shows Winnie what a false life she is leading, and she decides to abandon it. Edward Ferris, her man-friend, laughs at her when she tells him her intention and insultingly asks her to come to him when she needs money.

Good luck attends Winnie, who obtains a typist's position in a city office. She lives very happily in a boarding-house and cuts herself off entirely from all her former companions. While working here she meets Roy Dayton, who falls in love with her, and after a time proposes marriage to her. His earnest pleading wins her consent and she is looking forward to the wedding day.

Edward Ferris finds out where she is working, and one day shadows her to her home. She sees him and lets him see plainly that she does not want anything to do with him, but he forces himself upon her by calling at the house the next day. When she tells him of her engagement he laughs rudely at her and asks her what her intended husband would think of her past life, telling her that if she will come to him she will have all the luxury she can desire. Roy Dayton enters the room and overhears part of what is said. He demands an explanation from Winnie, who cannot give it. Upbraiding her for having won his love falsely, he leaves her in anger.

Winnie falls in a swoon and afterwards becomes seriously ill, and is taken to a hospital. In her delirium she raves constantly of Roy, who is finally sent for by the nurse, who sees that unless Winnie sees him she will die. When Roy sees the condition of his sweetheart he is stricken with remorse and his love is re-awakened. Warmly clasping her to his heart he asks forgiveness and brings the smile back to her wasted cheeks.

HIS LIFE FOR HIS EMPEROR (May 16).—The schemes of certain English merchants and politicians require that the Emperor Napoleon be unseated, whether by fair means or foul. Hearing of ex-Captain Lacroix, who has been degraded by Napoleon, they send an emissary to arrange with him for the emperor's assassination. Lacroix accepts their money and plans with his cronies to lure the object of their hate to an empty house, where they intend to kill him. The plot is hatched in the secluded corner of a wine shop, but the conspirators neglect to notice an intoxicated man who is sleeping there. The man is Pierre Duchesne, an official who has been discharged from a government bureau for drunkenness, but who, nevertheless, realizing that he has only himself to blame, bears no malice.

Lacroix writes a letter to Napoleon, telling him that valuable maps may be obtained from a disgraced English officer then in Paris, and bidding him to come alone to fetch them. A youth is despatched with the letter and further details of the plot then arranged. Meanwhile Duchesne has remained silent in his corner, but has heard every word of what has passed. He rushes to the palace and unfolds the plot to Napoleon, who has just decided to go to the meeting place. Duchesne pleads with the emperor to allow him to go in his stead, disguised to resemble his sovereign. Napoleon consents, and, after testing Duchesne to see if he can carry out the part successfully, sends him to the rendezvous, ordering that a band of soldiers shall follow him and ensure his safety.

Duchesne enters the house and is slain as he enters, before the soldiers can come to his aid. Napoleon, "The Scourge of Europe," who has followed the soldiers, kneels and kisses Duchesne's dead body reverently as it is laid upon the divan.

BUNNY AND THE BUNNY HUG (May 17).—Norman Winthrop, a surveyor, accidentally meets John Bunny, an Irish watchman of a building. He introduces him to Tom and Will Hawley, two of his friends, at a little poker game in which Bunny pockets all the winnings. Talking over the matter the next day, the three men agree that it would be a great joke to introduce Bunny into society, and accordingly they take him to a ball, first buying him the correct outfit. Bunny has, in fun, styled himself Count O'Rooney, and it is under this name that he is introduced to the guests. Tom and Will tell everybody that, in addition to being a count, O'Rooney is a multi-millionaire, and everyone tries to become acquainted with him, particularly as he is found to be an amusing story-teller.

The "count" makes a decided hit with the ladies, especially with Ethel and Molly Donovon, the sweethearts of Tom and Will. When the girls cancel a dance with the two boys, preferring to listen to Count O'Rooney's side-splitting anecdotes, both become considerably peeved and rather wish they had tried another kind of joke. Bunny convulses everybody by explaining that a red bandana handkerchief, which he absent-mindedly pulls from his pocket, was a gift from the Czar of Russia. After the ball the girls rave so much about the "count" that the boys feel even more sick about it and decide to put a spoke in his wheel.

After a day or two they organize a party, including the girls, and go down to the building where Bunny works as a watchman. When the girls see who he really is they receive a powerful shock and get very angry with the poor old man. He soon gets them laughing again, however, with one of his good stories. With a pocketfull of Havana cigars, Bunny is quite satisfied with the ending of the affair, which he regards as the funniest incident of his life.

ESSANAY.

THE RANCH GIRL'S PARTNER (May 13).—A bandana handkerchief, a horse, and love, are the chief characters in this Western drama. John Kelton falls in love with Marjorie Wayne. Charlie Stevens, the richest man in the western town, is also in love with Marjorie. Stevens steals a horse and unintentionally drops a bandana handkerchief. Stevens blames Kelton. The sheriff finds the handkerchief and arrests the real thief. Kelton later pays the mortgage on Marjorie's home and marries her.

THE SAME OLD STORY (May 14).—Augustus Carney falls martyr to the enchanting ways of Beverly Bayne, a manicurist in a barber shop. Carney makes a date with her for seven o'clock that evening. Later, Carney tells his private secretary, Billy Mason, about the appointment. Mrs. Carney enters the office about a quarter of seven, plants herself in a chair and refuses to move. The manicurist arrives and is introduced to Mrs. Carney as Mason's wife. Mrs. Mason arrives and demands an explanation, which is rather amateurishly

BOOSTING BUSINESS (May 15).—Jim Barratt, a baking powder salesman, arrives in the town of St. Charles and finds that business is miserably slow. Barratt originates a clever scheme by which he will not leave empty handed. He writes a note, stating that Charles, the grocer, had not found the $100 bill that had been packed in one of the cans of baking powder. This Barratt accidentally drops on the street. One of the villageites picks it up. The news spreads fast. In an hour both grocers are completely sold out of the celebrated baking powder. Barratt "happens" by and is given a splendid order by Charles, the grocer, and Joseph, his competitor. Barratt enters the hotel bar, where he informs several men seated about, of his clever ruse, and how it worked. The tables turn, however, when the men discover that their wives had been "stung." Just see what happened to the baking powder salesman.

TWO SOCIAL CALLS (May 16).—Jim Malone, an ex-convict out of work, leaves his wife and two babies in search of employment. On the other side of life we see a happy couple with a young, healthy child, surrounded by all that prosperity affords. Charles Randolph, the father, accidentally drops his pocketbook that afternoon. Jim picks it up and escapes to his home with it. Mrs. Malone returns the pocketbook to its owner by mail. The next day, Mrs. Bandolph's maid, heavily laden with food and clothing, makes a visit to the slums to help the needy ones. During her absence from the automobile, Margaret, the child, in search of the maid, gets lost. The maid returns to the Randolph home and explains the situation. Mrs. Randolph becomes hysterical. The police are notified and a search is made. Margaret is finally found in Jim Malone's home. Randolph recognizes him as the thief. Margaret's love for Jim saves him from the penitentiary and rewards him with a splendid position.

BRONCHO BILLY'S GRIT (May 17).—Broncho Billy, intoxicated, enters Brown's general store, knocks over a barrel of brooms, and is about to help himself to the chewing tobacco, when the grocer interferes. Brown finally shoots Broncho Billy in the wrist. Mary Walker, a villageite enters, and discovering Broncho Billy suffering from the wound, washes and bandages it for him. The following day Broncho Billy calls on Mary to thank her for her kindness. Mr. Walker, overhearing the conversation, intrudes and orders the cowpuncher off his premises. That afternoon, the sheriff having been informed of the episode at the grocery store, tells Broncho Billy that he is a detriment to the community and to leave town immediately or take the consequences. The following day Mary's brother takes several horses to the nearby town to sell. The sale is made in good order and everything goes smoothly enough, until the weak son meets a gambler. The gambler has no trouble in getting the son intoxicated and taking his money from him by a clever gambling scheme. Broncho Billy enters the saloon and is nonplussed when he sees Mary's brother gambling the watch with the fair face of his sister in it. Broncho Billy holds up the gambling joint, restores the money to its owner, and takes the half-paralyzed form to his home. The rest of the story is very interesting.

GROUNDLESS SUSPICION (May 2).—One day, while the husband is at his office, the nurse informs the wife that their baby is blind. Not wanting to break the awful news to her husband, the wife writes for an eye specialist to come at once, telling him that her husband must not know of his coming. But before the doctor arrives, the husband comes home and finds his wife in tears. He is informed that nothing is wrong; but his suspicions are aroused when his wife receives a letter from the specialist, which she will not show to him. He goes out and upon returning, hears his wife say to someone over the telephone, "Can you come now, while my husband is away?" He goes, greatly depressed, into his study. Half an hour later he returns to where his wife and the specialist are and sees his wife's arms around the man's neck, begging for he knows not what. He is about to shoot both when his wife, with a hysterical cry, throws her arms around him because her little one can now see.

BILL'S SWEETHEART (May 3).—Bill, who is with a bunch of cowboys on their way to town, picks up from the wreckage of a prairie schooner a little baby girl. Five years later the little girl, while running after butterflies, gets lost. Bill, waking up from his siesta, goes in search of her, but she cannot be found. The little girl, in the meantime, has climbed into a freighter's wagon. For twelve years she lives with him. One evening, while gambling with Mexican Pete, the freighter loses his money, and the girl, whom he had staked against the Mexican's winnings. But before the Mexican can take the girl away, Bill wins her from the Mexican, places her in the care of a woman neighbor and eventually marries her.

THE HUNDRED DOLLAR ELOPEMENT (May 5).—Geraldine Gwynne is taken to a school for young ladies by her father. She is a headstrong, wilful girl who lost her mother when she was quite young. She forms a strange attachment for a young village loafer and is about to elope with him, but the principal of the school, Miss Preston, discovers it in time to telegraph her father. On learning the character of the fellow with whom his daughter is planning to elope, he goes straight to his house and offers him one hundred dollars to forget the girl. This the ardent lover promptly accepts and signs an agreement to that effect. Then the father repairs to the rendezvous and awaits the coming of his daughter.

Slipping down a ladder from her window, she steals cautiously across the lawn and, running around the corner of the barn, she comes face to face with her own father. It is a terrible shock and the girl is led away, sobbing with anger, grief and disappointment. But when her father shows her the agreement which her ardent lover signed for the consideration of one hundred dollars, she realizes what a fool she has been and that the hateful, prying school principal is really her best friend.

WHEN GREEK MEETS GREEK (May 6).—John Blackstone, the successful financier, recognizes no will but his own. The committees of the various companies he controls are directors in name only, as Blackstone's voice is a dominant force. His household consists only of himself, his son, whom he treats as a child, and a host of frightened servants and a stenographer, who is mortally afraid of his testy temper and violent imperiousness. In one of his tantrums one day a serious mistake costs her her position, and although his son, touched by the elderly woman's tears, pleads for her, her dismissal is abrupt and certain.

Blackstone telephones to the agency for another stenographer, and the lady in charge, knowing the difficulties that would confront the new applicant, decides that there is but one girl on her list who could cope with the situation, Portia Wood.

When Portia first meets Blackstone, he looks upon her as another victim of his domination. He hurls the most rapid dictation at her in the first test of speed, and is surprised and annoyed to find that she takes it easily and instantaneously.

In the days that follow comes a struggle of wills. Gradually Blackstone recognizes Portia's abilities. In the meantime, Blackstone Jr., has fallen in love with her and one day proposes marriage. On being refused, he becomes angry and insinuates that she has designs upon his father. This is the cause of a violent quarrel. During it Blackstone Sr., enters. His son leaves in a rage, leaving Blackstone Sr., and Portia to speak their minds. Suddenly they discover they love each other and end their opposition in an embrace.

AUNTY AND THE GIRLS (May 7).—Aunt Elsa, a full-of-life old lady, and her nephew, Bobby, concoct a scheme to frighten Bobby's young sisters. She puts a false face on and wraps herself in a sheet. Thus arrayed, she appears before the young ladies and badly frightens them. At a sewing bee the girls try to get even by putting on men's clothes and endeavoring to kidnap aunty; but their plan is overheard by the wily Bobby, who advises aunty of the scheme. Aunt Elsa then dresses the cook in her clothes. She is captured by the girls, bound to a tree, and as they are laughing at "aunty," the girls themselves are pounced upon by two "western desperadoes," are blindfolded and taken to a house, where they learn that they have been beaten at their own game by Bobby and aunty, who prove to be the desperadoes.

WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF "SHEP" (May 7).—Ruth, a very nice young girl, is under the guardianship of her Aunt Jane, a straight-laced spinster. Ruth is in love with a young man, and every time her aunt catches her in his company she orders her home to play the piano. No sooner has the aunt left the room when Ruth runs out to her lover, leaving "Shep," their faithful dog, playing the piano. Edward is ordered out of the house; but "Shep" takes a note to him from Ruth, and returns with one, fixing a meeting place. "Shep," seeing no one in the room but the aunt, hides the note in the waste paper basket until Ruth comes. Because Ruth tears up the note without letting her see it, the aunt locks her in the woodshed. When the aunt brings Ruth her supper, she leaves the door open and Ruth, seizing the opportunity, runs away, while "Shep" slams the door, locking in the aunt. She manages to get out just in time to see a fast receding automobile, with the lovers and "Shep" in it.

AN ACCIDENTAL ALIBI (May 10).—Joe Hardy, a young farmer of good standing, proposes to, and is accepted by Jessie Barnes, daughter of a neighboring farmer. When Joe brings the matter to the attention of Mr. Barnes, he receives a flat refusal. Joe, being a hot-tempered man, goes to the saloon, and, in the presence of several witnesses, makes threats against Mr. Barnes' life. He later, however, decides to forget it all and goes to the city. During his absence, Mr. Barnes, while riding through the country, is thrown from his horse and killed. The body is found and when Joe returns home he is captured, tried and convicted. After Joe's trial Jessie is persuaded to visit a friend in New York, and while there she goes into a moving picture theater, where she sees her lover on the screen. She communicates with Joe's attorney, and by the moving picture it is proved that Joe was in New York at the time of Mr. Barnes' death.

THE GOLDEN WEDDING (May 9).—Their anniversary over, the guests going, two weary old people sit by the fireside to rest. They fall asleep and dream of their past life. Their dreams carry them from boy and girlhood all through life to this day, greatest of all, their golden wedding. Their first meeting shows them, at the age of five, on their way to school, and even then, as young as they are, the seed of love is sown. A few years and we see them growing past the school age.

Next we see the youth proposing and being accepted; the happiest moment of their lives, their first-born baby. War between the North and South breaks out and the youth is called to fight for his side, the South. As he goes away he puts the picture of his wife in his pocket next to his heart. Daily letters are written from the front telling of the war and the little wife anxiously waits for the next one to come, but one day none arrives, then another day. Something must be wrong.

At the front the boy is wounded, and if it had not been for the tintype in his pocket, the bullet would have killed him instead of glancing off, only causing a broken arm. Home he comes to rest and to wait for his arm to heal. Happiness reigns once more in the little home. War is over and they live the quiet happy lives of country folk till we meet them again, asleep at the fireplace. His pipe drops. He awakens. It is time to go to bed. He lights the candle and the good wife calls in the cat and both, arm in arm, go upstairs to dream the dreams of their youth again.

THE HEART OF VALESKA (May 12).—Valeska, the daughter of a poor cobbler, is occupied caring for her sick mother and keeping house. Nearly enough money has been saved to pay the taxes, when the medicine bottle becomes empty and Valeska borrows from the taxes to buy medicine, hoping to be able to repay it.

In the small town in which they live is a man who is paying attention to Valeska, and favored by her, except at times when his drinking makes him a useless wretch.

One day, while gathering firewood, Valeska is overtaken by a nobleman, and he offers her assistance in giving her a lift in the coach to her home.

Time goes on—more money is needed for medicine and the tax money is again borrowed. When the medicine bottle is filled and wrapped in newspaper and taken home, Valeska discovers an announcement in the paper of the coming marriage auction—a custom still in existence.

First of all, to raise more money, Valeska sells her beautiful hair to help her poor parents—then goes off to auction herself to become some worthy man's wife. At the auction the nobleman has dropped in out of curiosity. He sees Valeska on the stand and bids the highest for her—gets her and when he learns her story from her own lips, he, honest nobleman that he is, takes her to her home, buys medicine and comforts for the sick mother and then is about to go when Valeska real-

THE PROPHECY (May 13).—Among the fashionable guests and fortune hunters at Lady Jane Manners' brilliant house party, were Dick Bruce and his affianced wife, Dorothy Cameron. The hearts of all the men began to beat faster when Lady Manners announced that Countess Morowsky had accepted her invitation and would arrive that evening. In the afternoon the men, returning home with some game they had shot, ran into a Gypsy camp, and in the course of the fortune-telling Dick Bruce was admonished to "beware of a lady in black." That evening he was introduced to a lady in black, who proved to be Countess Morowsky. He fell in love with the countess and ignored his sweetheart to such an extent that she went to the countess' boudoir and begged her to return with her retinue of servants to London. This the countess agreed to do, and the next morning she left. Dick, having heard of Dorothy's interference, upbraided her, and he too journeyed to London. Sir George became jealous of Dick's fascination for the countess and contrived to break up an opera party between Dick and the countess. She came to Dick's apartment for an explanation, learned of his weakness and reconciled the sweethearts.

THE TWO MERCHANTS (May 14).—Ebenezer Burke and Jeremiah Briggs are in the same line of business in the small city of Bedford. Julia Burke has become fascinated with a traveling salesman and she receives court from him against her father's wishes. They plan an elopement, but their plan is frustrated by Briggs, who asserts that it is his business to protect her, even if he is her father's rival.

While out driving with his family, Briggs sees the salesman waiting in a secluded spot with a buggy. Becoming suspicious at once, he stops and watches him. He soon sees Julia coming with a suit case and his suspicions are confirmed. Jumping out of his carriage, he rushes over to the buggy and seizes the girl. The salesman attempts to interfere but Briggs thrusts him aside and Julia is taken back home in the Briggs equipage, dissolved in tears.

Burke is wild with rage at this interference on the part of his rival and he decides that the meddlesome old codger has gone too far entirely. Early next morning Burke is at his store waiting for the appearance of Briggs. When he arrives the climax is reached. Into the back yard of Briggs' store they go and fight it out in true country style. Both 'winded,'' they realize that they are a couple of old fools and a reconciliation takes place. They join hands and fight the appearance of a new store.

ECLIPSE.

THE WILL OF FATE (May 14).—Dick is in love with Anna, a neighbor's pretty daughter. Dick's father and Tony, the brother of Anna, both of a smuggler's band quarrel and are separated by townspeople. The revenue officers for some time have been in search of Dick's father, and he is fatally shot upon being discovered by them. Anxious about his father's return, Dick and several of his companions set out to learn of his whereabouts. After a long search, he is found lifeless behind a crag of rocks. Dick's mother remembers his former quarrel and accuses Tony of the murder of her husband. A month passes and although Dick and Anna still love each other, his mother will not consent to the marriage of her son to the sister of the man who caused the death of her husband. Dick becomes one of the smuggling band and the hiding place of their goods is operated by Dick's mother. She receives a letter, telling her to leave the trap-door open that night as Tony will arrive with a bale of lace. A diabolical revenge is formed in her mind, and that evening the trap-door is shut upon the supposed Tony. In the meantime, Dick had persuaded the smugglers to allow him to carry the goods to the hiding place, his motive being the seeing of his sweetheart. Therefore, Dick is the victim of his own mother's revenge and when the trap-door is opened some time later the catastrophe is revealed.

CINES.

A WOMAN'S INFLUENCE (May 17). — Mr. Morse is often compelled to reprimand Peter, his gamekeeper, for the latter's brutality. Peter, however, has a great reverence for Emma, Mr. Morse's daughter, and in her presence he is easily pacified. Invitations are sent out by the Morses for a wild boar hunt. The hunt is a grand success, but so many complaints against the gamekeeper are presented to Mr. Morse that he finally discharges him. Emma pleads with her father for Peter's sake in vain. She often visits him and tries to console him in his misery. After he is caught poaching on the estate by Mr. Morse himself, he is so furious that he swears revenge. Not wishing to be weakened in his purpose he avoids Emma as much as possible. A few days later Emma remembers the gamekeeper's birthday and wishing to present him with the watch she has purchased for him, sets out to look for him with it. In the meantime Peter has been lying in ambush for his former employer. His senses are awakened when Mr. Morse is seen coming up the lane and Peter immediately aims his rifle at him. He is just about to pull the trigger which undoubtedly would have made him a murderer, when he hears Emma's masterful voice behind him. "Peter, look and see the present I have for you." Peter timorously drops the gun and falls mortified at her feet.

GULF OF TOGULIO, NORTHERN ITALY (May 17).—This is one of the most picturesque landscapes of which Italy can boast. In detail are shown St. Marguerite, St. Michael, Rapallo, Annibale Bridge and many other noteworthy edifices.

WILLIE'S ALARM CLOCK (May 13).—Willie's attitude towards work causes the disgust of Gertrude's father, who disapproves of their marriage until Willie is satisfactorily employed. Gertrude secures a position for him in the office of her cousin, a banker, who believes Willie's services a doubtful investment. He is right. Willie, by his unpunctuality, soon arouses the ire of the banker; so much so that Gertrude learns of it. She presents her lover with an alarm clock, which, not being set right, interrupts his sleep. Willie's well-aimed boot knocks it from the table. The alarm is broken, and consequently, he does not arrive at the office until late, when he is promptly discharged.

Willie receives an indifferent audience when again calling on his sweetheart, which immediately causes his repentance. By using every possible precaution he wins the confidence of the banker, and is taken on the pay-roll again, and makes good.

Later, Willie and Gertrude are married, and on their honeymoon the alarm clock again makes its appearance, only to wind up a most interesting comedy.

RELICS OF ANCIENT ROME (May 13).—These views carry with them the very atmosphere of the days when these grounds were traveled by the men who made their country foremost in architectural, musical and mythical arts. They were produced by excellent photography, and a painstaking selection of the castles and aqueducts in the Champagne Romaine.

EXCESS BAGGAGE (May 10).—In order to save expenses while on their honeymoon, the Newlyweds resort to economical methods of living. Their bridal chamber is also their dining room and at the end of their two weeks' stay it resembles a pantry just before house-cleaning. When they decide to leave, the tin pans, can openers and cooking utensils, are taken out of the bureau drawers and wrapped up in one large bundle. Their intention is to drop the bundle at the first convenient place, but try as they might, it always comes back. Their first attempt fails, their second almost succeeds and when the last is made Mr. Newlywed arouses the ire of a policeman and is arrested. He makes explanations to the sergeant and is dismissed, but before leaving he drops the bundle on the other side of the desk out of the sergeant's view and leaves unmolested.

THE PEOPLE OF SOMALILAND, EAST AFRICA (May 10).—In this Educational picture of the Somali natives, we see them in their every habit. A typical village is first shown, after which comes the Sultan of Gheledi. As to the local marketing a butcher with a cleaver is shown at work. The methods of protecting their homes against storms, the maintenance of their maize and cotton plantations comes next. Weaving and many other industries in their crude state closes this picture.

BEAUTIFUL LAKE COMO, ITALY (May 10).—This picture, in colors, reveals one of the most favorite haunts of the American tourist; therefore, the assurance of its beauty and picturesqueness.

THE BROKEN VOW (Special—2 parts—May 2).—Although Juliet is only a simple shepherdess, she is quite conscious of her charms. Tony, a cattle-herder on the ranch of a wealthy cattle king is in love with her. While on his way to town with a herd of cattle, he stops for a few moments to see his sweetheart, and presents her with a necklace, which they agree is a token of their betrothal.

He tells his employer of the joyous news of his engagement. The favorite meeting place of the lovers is under a tree at the edge of a cliff and on this sacred spot they swear eternal devotion.

The home of the cattle king is a rendezvous for fast society. While at one of these society functions, the cattleman and his friends decide on a hunting trip, Tony to be their guide. During the hunt Juliet is accidently shot and is taken away by the ranchman in his automobile, despite Tony's pleadings.

Juliet's convalescence comes about several months later and unconsciously she has captivated the admiration of the rich ranchman. Well and strong again, she is ready to return home, when the ranchman allures her by presenting her with jewels and decorative ornaments. She is so enchanted that her engagement to him is soon announced.

Receiving no word from Juliet and filled with anxiety, Tony makes an inquiry at the home of his employer, where he finds Juliet already married. Broken-hearted and miserable, Tony decides to go far away and forget.

Two years pass, when Tony being in the vicinity again, observes the ranchman riding through the woods, and a diabolical revenge is framed in Tony's mind. He jumps up and drags the cattleman from his horse to the ground, and a pitched battle between them ensues. The outcome is in Tony's favor, after tying the ranchman to the tree dear to his memory as the spot where he had often courted Juliet, sends for her, and before the eyes of her husband, leaps with her over the cliff into eternity.

A MIXED AFFAIR (May 6).—When Albert learns that by his marriage to Lucy, a beautiful girl and friend of the family, she will inherit a fortune, he immediately leaves for the city to meet her. Albert has never seen Lucy.

Through a series of misconceptions, he unknowingly falls in love with Lucy, believing her to be Helen, an indirectly introduced cousin of his friend, Henry.

When Helen appears, he mistakes her for Lucy, and when his anxious father arrives to see how matters are progressing, Helen is introduced as his fiancée. While Helen is escorted and dined by his father, Albert and Lucy (of whose identity he is still ignorant), love each other, and leaving a note, they decide to elope.

When the father returns with Helen, he is exasperated. Albert and Lucy are hunted down, and found entering a hotel, where explanations fall thick and fast.

Henry not only wins an heiress, but also possesses the girl he loves.

And Many Others.

A WOMAN OF IMPULSE (May 14).—On the Countess Cheroeh's estate, a farmer named Solman employs one Gaston Larue, an old man who is supporting his three motherless children by driving for Solman. Larue is making a hurried delivery of a heavy load one day when the Countess happening past rebukes him for whipping his horse. Impulsively the Countess drives to Solman's farm and instructs him to discharge Larue. This is done, and the old man, unable to find work, is starving with his children, while the Countess, decrying cruelty in others, is hunting deer with friends. On a lonely road one day the horse the Countess is riding shies and throws her and, painfully injured, she is found by Larue's children. Her timely discovery by the youngsters saves her life. When she has recovered the Countess goes humbly to the home of the driver to reward the children and beg Larue's forgiveness for her inhumanity.

A REDSKIN'S MERCY (May 14).—Silver Cloud and Yellow Bear, two Indian warriors, in search of a token of their bravery to bring back to their chief, come upon Marion Watkins, the wife of a white settler in the neighborhood. Her plea for mercy melts the heart of Silver Cloud, but Yellow Bear is not so affected. A fight between the two braves ensues and as a result of it Silver Cloud hurries with Marion to the paleface camp, while Yellow Bear, mortally wounded, struggles back to his tribe. Hearing Yellow Bear's story the chief calls his men together and the Indians set out to annihilate the pioneers. After a stirring battle strength of number tells and the white settlers are forced to flee. Silver Cloud again helps Marion to escape, but his own life is the forfeit.

AN ITINERANT WEDDING (May 15).—The Widow Woods has a beautiful daughter, Gwendoline, whose hand is sought by Charley Arloss. He sends a rather ambiguous note to the widow, which gives her the impression that it is her hand he is seeking. At the widow's reception the next day, Arloss finds himself inn love with Gwendoline, but loved by both Gwendoline and the widow. Fearing that should Mrs. Woods learn the truth she will forbid the banns, Arloss presses a clergyman guest into service, but before the ceremony has been even started the widow is heard approaching. The lovers and the witnesses hurry upstairs where the ceremony is continued until Mrs. Wood is heard hurrying up the stairs. The party is on the roof of the house when the knot is finally tied and in the excitement the bride falls through a chimney that is being repaired. Hubby goes to the rescue and, man and wife, they tumble out on the hearth before the assembled guests.

THE JELLY FISH (May 16).—This film deals with the jelly-fish that inhabits the Mediterranean Sea and the species is more richly colored and more beautiful than that of any other part of the world. Some of the specimens examined are a yard in diameter. The jelly-fish has introduced himself to practically every surf bather and they should take this opportunity to study the innocent-looking creature at close range.

ALONG THE BANKS OF THE RIVER EURE (May 16).—A scenic film that includes views of the ruined aqueduct used to carry the waters of the Eure to Versailles and several examples of Fifteenth Century architecture built at the instance of Louis XIV, and the whole handsomely colored.

SARAGOSSA (May 16).—The capital of the ancient Province of Aragon and a reminder of the golden age of Spain when she was the greatest power in the world.

A WRECKED LIFE (May 17).—Three miners stop at a country inn for refreshments and become interested in the story of an idiotic woman servant in the place. The owner of the inn tells the story of the woman's life. Deserted by her husband she searched for him for years in vain and after she had given him up for dead and had become engaged to the son of the narrator she found her husband—and her dead lover at his feet. The next morning she was found stark mad. At the conclusion of the story one of the visitors rises, white with terror, and calling the woman announces that he is her husband. The inn-keeper turns upon him savagely and avenges at one stroke the death of his son and the wreck of the woman's life.

MELIES.

THE BLACK TRACKERS (May 15).—In a wild part of Australia, Wilson, an English trader in kangaroo skins, has his camp. Coming into daily contact with the black negroes of that country, he becomes their friend and they, in return, protect him. An Englishman, a stranger, comes to the camp whom Wilson's black friends take an instinctive dislike to, but since he brings news of the outside world, the trader takes him in as a guest.

Wilson receives gold for a consignment of skins, and, believing the stranger to be asleep, steals carefully away to place it in his secret hiding place. But his guest sees all, and, following him, learns of the hiding place. When Wilson returns the stranger is lying, as when he left, apparently asleep, but no sooner is the trader off his guard than his guest pounces on him and deals a terrific blow. Then so as to point suspicion of the crime toward the black natives, he places spears about the trader's body and sets fire to the camp. The flames and smoke alarm the natives and they come in time to rescue their friend from being burned to death. Then, assured that his wounds are but slight, they leave him and take up the trail of the culprit.

The stranger having secured the gold takes refuge in the nearest village, spreading the news that the blacks have murdered Wilson. The village is aroused and a party sets out to avenge the crime. Meeting the blacks they learn the truth, verified by Wilson, and all make haste back to the village just in time to prevent the stranger from making his escape by boat.

BIOGRAPH

THE KING AND THE COPPER (May 12).—The King of the Cannibal Islands has selected a queen to adorn his throne, but the royal policeman with his hypnotizing eyes wins her away. Jealous, he pretends to have committed suicide and to the throne his subjects raise a fisherman. Under the rule of the fisherman the copper loses his job and the queen's love, so consequently every thing works out well in the end for the king.

A RAINY DAY (May 12).—It is a gloomy day at the club rooms and Jinks goes out to rubber. In this occupation he is discovered by a couple of members of the club who tell of it in the rooms. The boys put up a job on Jinks that teaches him a lesson and cuts him aloof from the rubbernecks.

THE STOLEN LOAF (May 15).—The butler, a Raffles, stole the necklace, but cornered, he hid it. Fate gave it to a poor man and the clever Raffles had him arrested and convicted. But fate also brought happiness to the poor man for through his sorrow fate convicted the butler and made society recognize its injustice to the poor man.

THE YAQUI CUR (2 parts—May 17).—The prospector had taught the Indian boy the doctrine of peace. When his tribe resisted the attack of another tribe the boy did not take part. The din of the battle, as the horsemen circled them again and again, the moans of men caught under falling horses struck terror in the boy's heart. The incensed warriors cast him from the tribe with the brand of a coward. It was then that his opportunity came to follow the white man's wonderful doctrine. "Big love man lay down life for friend."

HAWAIIAN LOVE (May 12).—A native girl, Labela, is beloved by Kalike: she suffers his embraces and he is content. The captain of a small trading vessel visits the planter and sees the girl, who appeals to him. He makes love to her and she finally agrees to marry him. The boat puts to sea and Kalike is broken-hearted.

The captain abuses his crew and ill treats the poor girl he married. The crew decide to scuttle the ship and chop a hole in the bottom, they getting away in the only boat.

The boat sinks, but the captain and his wife manage to get away on some wreckage. They come to the beach and the man seeks out a Chinese liquor keeper; he is tired of the woman and trades her for money to the Chinaman. She is seen by her old lover, who comes up, and, after a struggle with the Chinaman, he strangles him and takes the girl away. His mind is full of murder, and he seeks out the captain. The captain sees him and staggers back, thinking he sees an avenging angel. He falls over a cliff, paving the way of happiness for Labela and Kalike.

GEM.

BILLY'S ADVENTURE (May 13).—Violet Horner is in love with Billy Quirk. Her father dislikes Bill and tells this to Bill's father. Incensed at this, the elder Quirk bets Violet's dad that he (Horner), will beg Bill to marry his daughter. Horner takes the bet. To keep Violet away from Billy, she is sent to a boarding school. Bill, disguised as a girl, gets into the same school and nearly wrecks it. The ruse is discovered by the principal. Billy persuades Violet to elope with him, and while running to the parson, they bump into her father, who calls an officer, but Bill gives the cop the slip. Later, Mr. Horner gets a letter from his old friend, Captain Spar (who has settled in the Canary Islands), telling that his son, the Prince, will call. Violet steals this letter and shows it to Billy, who conceives the idea of hiring a couple of tramps. He makes them up as Zulu slaves, and himself as the Prince. In this disguise they go to the Horner home, where they get dad's goat. Pa Horner 'phones to Billy's dad to have Billy come over to marry Violet, and collect the wager that the young folks may have as a wedding present.

VICTOR.

A FAIR EXCHANGE (2 parts, May 16).—A rich young man is attached to his father's stenographer. Knowing her character the father objects, disowning his son when he persists in his attentions to the girl. In the grip of poverty, the girl's true nature is disclosed, and the gentleness and goodness of her sister is revealed. The insincere girl finally rejects her lover, who is aided by the good sister. Father and son are reconciled, the latter realizing that he had chosen the wrong sister. An embezzling clerk in the father's employ finds favor with the fickle girl, and an elopement is arranged. Through an error, the elopers carry away a suit case containing embroidering. The other case, containing the embezzled funds, is knowingly restored to the rightful owner by the sincere sister.

HOMLOCK SHERMES (May 18).—Pearl, the girl detective, is at home chafing with inactivity and the want of something to do. She decides to go out for a walk in the hope that something in the way of an adventure may come her way. Fred Hanley, a young man, has become a confirmed drunkard. A friend of his brings a doctor to visit Hanley. Hanley becomes excited during their visit and frightens them nearly unto death by shooting at them with a revolver. They leave in haste, but decide to lock Hanley in his room. This they do, leaving a servant to watch the door. Hanley, crazed for want of drink, writes a note that he is wrongfully imprisoned, and offers $5,000 reward for anyone who liberates him. This he throws out the window, just as Pearl is passing the house. She picks it up, reads it and realizes that her quest for an adventure has borne fruit. She immediately goes home and disguises as a boy. Coming back, she applies for a job and the woman downstairs employs her and puts the supposed boy to work. Pearl has a hard time of it, peeling potatoes and scrubbing floor, but with never a chance to liberate the unfortunate, supposed prisoner. Later, however, she is caught upstairs listening at the door by the servant, and is kicked downstairs. The woman pulls her ears for leaving the kitchen, and all in all, Pearl is treated exactly how a real detective should not be. However, at last, Pearl succeeds in gaining access to the room and is fondly dreaming of the five thousand dollar reward and her noble work and bravery, when Hanley's friends enter and explain. Pearl appreciates that she has been stung and beats a hasty retreat, resolving to detect in a more profitable way in the hereafter.

OUR WILLIE (May 18).—Willie's Pa and Ma have been divorced. Willie tries to get them to make up, but without avail. Ma has engaged herself to young Belmont. Pa has induced youthful Miss Stuart to consider him as her future husband. Willie plans to reconcile the foolish couple. He is sick and they visit him. Ma brings her youthful fiancé and Pa brings his lady friend. They each object to the other administering to Willie's wants. In the meantime, the young husband to be and the young wife to be are carrying on a merry flirtation. The elder people leave, taking their young friends with them, before the flirtation is carried too far. The next day the young people meet on the street and Belmont asks Miss Stuart to marry him. She agrees, and they each write a letter to their respective ex-fiancees that they have met sweethearts more to their liking. Willie, meanwhile is conspiring and scheming as to how he can reconcile his parents. He has his friend, Tom, pose as a doctor, and he pretends to be very ill. He has Tom phone for his warring parents. They arrive and are very solicitious as to Willie's welfare. Willie insists that he is going to die and the supposed doctor agrees with him. Willie then begs his parents to re-marry before he dies and they agree to do it for his sake. Tom phones for a minister, and they are remarried. This seems to have hastened Willie's recovery, for he immediately jumps out of bed and congratulates them.

THE VIOLET BRIDE (May 14).—David Armstrong, a young officer in the United States Army, is engaged to a young girl. According to the ideas of his mother, his ambitions will be crushed and his life ruined if he marries this middle class girl. Mrs. Armstrong does all in her power to persuade her son to propose to a fascinating widow, Mrs. Greeley-Hamilton.

David gets a month's leave of absence. Mrs. Armstrong meets him with Mrs. Greeley-Hamilton. The widow bestows upon him her choicest fascinations, but both are much disgusted when he insists upon calling on Cecile. That evening the mother tells her son that he will break her heart if he does not marry as she wishes. She works upon his feelings so far that he promises to obey her and he writes a note to Cecile trying to explain things to her.

Back in the home of Mrs. Greeley-Hamilton, she is telling her accepted admirer, Charles Fellowes, that her marriage will make no difference to them. Fellowes accepts the state of affairs.

The wedding takes place and Cecile attends and almost creates a scandal by breaking down. During the dance that follows the marriage, Fellowes sends a note by a servant to the new Mrs. Armstrong, and she steals out to him. Their meeting is an impassioned one and he crushes her to his bosom, and in so doing the violets she wears leave an impression on his shirt front. David, having followed his bride, sees the embrace, but does not detect the man. He speaks with his wife and notes that the violets have been crushed.

He walks among his guests and in the card room sees Fellowes. He gives him an imperative order to follow him, and Fellowes goes upstairs with him. A lady, who has watched the happening, tells the wife and she follows them upstairs. She looks through the door and sees David with a revolver, threatening to kill Fellowes. She screams and the guests arrive in time to prevent a tragedy, but the woman that David married swoons by the stairs, and falling down their length, is mortally injured. A month later David returns to his regiment, where he introduces the forgiving Cecile as his beloved wife.

THE TARANTULA (May 16).—A Spanish-Mexican girl, known as the Tarantula, is coolly polishing the blade of a stiletto with which she has just killed a lover she was tired of—her new lover being a young Mexican boy whose beauty and innocence appeals to her. An American engineer rides into the camp and reports the finding of the body of a man who has been stabbed. An old man in the camp warns the American of the evil this woman does and tells him she is guilty of the murder, and points out the young Mexican boy as the latest victim.

The American makes up his mind to resist her, while she, noticing him, tries to catch his eye. He refuses to look. He makes his way into the bar, where he meets the Mexican boy. They both take a great fancy to each other and the American, who is on his way East, promises to take the boy with him. In the meantime, the small encampment have a long journey to make across the desert.

The boy tells of his love for the Tarantula, and taking the American outside, introduces him, but the American refuses to meet her eye. She laughs at him, and picking a flower offers it to him, but he refuses it. In a tent in the desert the Tarantula is preparing the evening meal and the American walks in. He has made up his mind to meet her eyes and defy her. He does so, but she cannot meet his. She laughs and rushes out of the tent.

She is now tired of the Mexican boy, Jose, and begins to hate him and thinks if he is out of the way she can win the American engineer. That night she goes out on the desert to look for a tarantula, she having decided to kill him by hiding one of these deadly insects in his bed. She finds one and returns to the encampment, and placing it in his pillow, creeps to her own bed. Jose has been in the habit of tending to her comfort, and that night, as it is cold, he takes the thick blanket off his bed and tenderly puts it on hers. Finding that his pillow is a little softer than hers he changes it, quite innocent of the fact that she has placed a tarantula there, whose bite is instant death.

They retire for the night when the camp is awakened by a scream and Tarantula appears with a wound on her breast where she has been bitten by the tarantula that she intended should kill Jose. She goes to speak, but falls dead between Jose and the American. Jose throws himself on the ground and drawing a stiletto, attempts to kill himself, but the American prevents him. The American packs up his kit, telling Jose to come with him and start life afresh in the East.

THE SQUASHVILLE LADIES' FIRE BRIGADE (May 12).—Things have been very quiet with the Squashville Fire Brigade and the boys have fallen into bad ways. The unexpected happens and the fire bell rings, the boys rush to the fire house and eventually get off with the machine. An annoying thing occurs to spoil all the glory and fun. Some interfering girls, the sweethearts of the firemen, happen to be near the scene of the fire and thoughtlessly put it out before the fire fighters arrive. They jeer at the boys and the latter ask the girls if they hadn't better organize a fire brigade of their own. The girls say they will and that in future all fires will be put out promptly. The boys turn over the costumes and fire house to the girls.

The girls get busy and sweep the fire house out and make it look real cute with pretty pink curtains and bows and things. They hang pictures of themselves on the walls, as well as photographs of their mammas and papas. The girls give the nicest pink teas imaginable. At other times they have sewing bees and hang ribbons on the trumpet.

Unfortunately, a perfectly horrid fire breaks out at Daddy Basset's home and daddy and mother take to the draughty veranda. The boys, with their bad habits, are still up; they run in and manage to stamp out the fire. In the meantime, a person has rung the fire bell and the ladies have been disturbed from their slumbers. They rise quite hastily, dress and do their hair. They go to the fire station and prepare to enter, when the captain finds she has forgotten the key. She returns to get the key and finds it is hanging by a piece of baby ribbon on her trumpet. She returns and they all enjoy the joke on the captain. The old machine is very heavy, but the girls are brave and get going. Little Corinne drops off and weeps in the road. The others find she has disappeared and go back to find her. One girl is dispatched to the machine to get the smelling salts in the medicine chest on the back, and Corinne is soon able to proceed.

The girls are met by the boys, who are most rude and say unnecessary things to them. The girls will not be ridiculed. They throw off the costumes and make the boys resume the work.

will go to get from the smelter tomorrow will give him and his wife, Mary, enough to go and buy the farm they longed for. Tom is a rascal. He mistakes Mary's interest in him for a deeper feeling. He knows of the savings in Jack's home, and he covets Mary. He waits until Jack goes to the smelter, and shaking off the attentions of poor Sadie, he goes to Jack's cabin. Sadie, inflamed with jealousy, follows and watches him. She creeps up to the window in time to see Tom terrorize Mary, who has repulsed him, and to see him write a note and leave it on the table, seize the baby and tell Mary that if she wants it she had better follow him and get it.

Mary follows the brute, frantic in her fear for her child's safety, to a shack in the hills and Sadie follows cautiously. Tom locks the woman and her child in the shack, and barring the window, he goes to bury the bag of savings which he had forced Mary to give him.

Sadie creeps up to where Tom has thrown his coat down and takes the gun from his pocket. She runs to the shack, smashes the window in, and releasing Mary and the child, she sends them home, refusing to go herself.

Sadie has a mission to perform. She gets in the window and awaits the coming of the brute she once loved and now hates. He enters the shack and is taken aback. He attempts to bully, but Sadie holds him up in a determined manner. She backs him out of the shack and makes him dig up the bag of savings and throw it to her. She then tells him to hit the trail and to keep going, because she intends to put the sheriff upon his trail. He goes, cursing her.

In the meantime Jack has returned home and has found a scrawled note telling him that his wife has left for good with Tom. Jack cannot believe it, but failing to find Mary, he is crushed. His grief turns to rage. When Mary appears he will not listen to her, and matters are at a crisis when Sadie appears with the money. Jack is penitent and all is well, except with poor Sadie, who, refusing to go with them, goes away to fight out her battles alone.

AN EYE FOR AN EYE (May 16).—Tom Kirby and Buck Edwards are partners in their mining claims. Both have been up against it. Tom makes a big strike and he suggests that Buck finish making the monuments, so that he may be able to go and record the claims as quickly as possible. Tom gets his horse and as he is about to mount when the demon of avarice enters Buck's soul and he shoots at his partner and wounds him. Buck thinks he is dead, and going on to the county town, he records the claims. When questioned, he states that Tom shot himself in despair before the strike. He proposes to the saloon keeper's daughter and is accepted.

Tom pulls himself together and with his finger dipped in his own blood, he writes on the horse's side, "My partner killed me." The horse is found at a water hole. Tom is found, revived and taken home. Buck confesses and is taken to the desert and left there.

THE TOLL OF WAR (3 parts, May 13).—Edith Eldridge, daughter of Colonel Eldridge, disguises herself as a boy to enlist with her two brothers in the Confederate army. Her identity is discovered and she is rejected. Federal raiders ransack and burn the Eldridge home, and kill Edith's father. Enos and Mammy, faithful slaves, save Edith's life. To avenge the murder, Edith turns spy for the Confederates. With Enos, she goes through the swamps to the headquarters of General Johnson. The general pleads with her to give up her perilous undertaking, but she insists. Entering the Union lines, she arrives alone near the quarters of Lieut. Phillips. She feigns illness and the officer carries the seemingly prostrate girl to quarter, where she confides her to the wife of an officer. Edith's story is plausible, and she is allowed to remain.

Slowly, but surely, Lieut. Phillips is falling in love with her. Enos is captured. Edith aids him to get work around the quarters. She plans to secure the outline map of the Union fortifications, entrusted to Lieut. Phillips. By betraying her faith she secures them and makes her escape. She is pursued and wounded, but reaches the Confederate lines.

As a result of the information the Confederates make an immediate attack. During the battle Edith sees both of her brothers fall, and witnesses the danger of the Confederate ammunition wagons. Climbing into the seat of an ammunition wagon, whose driver has been shot, she attempts to cross the stream with it. The Confederates are repulsed, and Lieut. Phillips captures Edith, takes her back to the Union camp as a prisoner. Enos learns she will meet the fate of a spy. The old negro decides to appeal to President Lincoln. He steals away in the night.

Upon reaching Washington, Enos is first denied admittance to the White House, but on the following day is allowed to plead for the life of his mistress. His story touches Lincoln't heart, and the president wires General Thomas to suspend execution and send the girl to him. The message arrives in the nick of time, and Lieutenant Phillips is selected to take the prisoner to Washington.

Edith is bitter in her prejudice and heaps invectives on the president's head when she comes before him. Nevertheless he pardons her. She is taken away by Lieutenant Phillips, who tells her to go where she will, as she is free.

Edith remains in Washington, and Enos becomes man-of-all-work at her boarding place. She works as a seamstress. She treasures a picture given her many months before by Lieut. Phillips. Wise old Enos brings her a newspaper in which she reads an article concerning the president's plans to attend Ford's theater and witness the performance of "Our American Cousin." The article states that Lieut. Phillips, in company with Gen. Grant and his wife are expected as the president's guests. Edith, hoping that the Phillips mentioned is her Northern lover, scrapes her savings together and with the aid of Enos' "coppers," attends the play.

All cheer when the presidential party enter the box. During the play Edith watches the box intently. She sees a man glide along toward the president. A shot is fired. President Lincoln's head falls quietly on his breast and his arms to his side.

In the uproar that follows Edith hastens out and to her lodgings, where the wounded president is brought and placed in Edith's bed. Lieut. Phillips assists Mrs. Lincoln from the room and turns her over to a woman. He recognizes her. It is Edith. Back in the room with the dying man, they stand with clasped hands as Abraham Lincoln closes his eyes on this earthly world. Sometime later Enos apprises Mammy that he is back and well, and with him is Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Phillips.

IN THE SECRET SERVICE (May 17—2 parts).—General Gordon, of the Federal army, receives a message from General Grant, telling him to intercept important dispatches "from Lee to Webber, carried over wires" in Gordon's vicinity. Lieutenant Barrett assumes the task; takes his instruments and sets out. Colonel Webber, of the Confederate army, has a daughter Edith. Lieutenant Fairfax aspires to her hand, but his attentions only annoy her. Barrett taps the wires, but is seen by a Confederate officer and shot. The officer creeps up to him, thinking him dead, and Barrett suddenly shoots, kills him, and takes his uniform. He finds some plans in the dead man's pockets addressed to Col. Webber and copies them.

He ties the copied information on his horse and starts the animal toward the Federal camp. He then mounts the Confederate's horse and soon meets Edith. She, seeing a wounded Confederate officer, sympathizes with him and takes him to her father's home. Meanwhile the horse reaches the Federal camp and Gordon gets the message and plans.

Barrett meets Webber and Fairfax, and gives Webber the original plans. Edith binds Barrett's wounded hand and the handsome couple are mightily attracted to each other. The household retires for the night and Barrett prepares some dummy despatches. For seals he uses candle wax and the blood from a cut finger. He then enters the Colonel's room, changes the dummy dispatches for real ones. On the following morning Webber, Fairfax and others depart for the front and Barrett is left with Edith. By this time he is thoroughly in love with the girl and he leaves her with genuine regrets. Riding to the dead officer he dons his own garments and rides safely to the Federal lines. That night Edith takes a message that the Federals are advancing. She gets her horse and rides madly to her father's camp, where Barrett's treachery is discovered. The Confederates fill the trenches with dummy soldiers. When the Federals charge they are overwhelmed by the Confederates. Barrett's troops are beaten back. The retreating Federals decide to surprise the town where Webber lives. The Colonel, Edith and Fairfax barricade the house, but Fairfax is fatally wounded. The Colonel also is badly wounded. Barrett gives Edith his coat and hat, telling her to save her father. As they are about to go, Barrett is shot in the head and passes away in the arms of Edith.

A WOMAN LOVED (May 12).—Vivian Morris takes a horseback ride with Count Schwenk, a snob, whom her parents wish her to marry, although she does not admire him. Her horse runs away and she is thrown senseless across a railroad track. Harry O'Connor, a plain manly business man, saves her from being run over. This begins a love affair between Vivian and Harry. Harry discovers later that Vivian's younger sister, June, is deeply in love with him, and that Vivian is becoming fond of the count. Harry puts the girls to a test. After three weeks absence he appears with an ugly scar on his face and with one arm gone, saying he has been in an auto accident. Vivian no longer sees in him her idol, but June loves him none the less. The next time Harry sees June the painted scar is gone and the hidden arm is sound and whole. She has stood the test and all is well for June and Harry.

ANGEL OF THE CANYONS (May 12).—Jim Beverley was an untrained, natural artist. His sweetheart, Madge, often visited him while at work in the mountains, but never completely sympathized with his work. She wanted his whole love and attention.

Bill Hogan was much beloved by pretty Carrie, but he, being also in love with Madge, ignored her. Bill felt that Jim's ability to paint was what had won Madge's heart.

In a cosy part of the canyon lived charming Pauline, commonly called "The Angel of the Canyon," because of her many good deeds for the villagers. One morning she saw the artist at work with pretty Madge gazing petulantly at his canvas. She saw them quarrel, Madge fly toward the house, and Jim turn angrily toward his work. Then she stepped close beside him and he, thinking it Madge, took up her hand and kissed it, without looking up from his work. Even an angel can have human feeling, and the angel in this case found a special delight in the unexpected kiss. When Jim, in confusion, apologized, it seemed a desecration. But Madge, watching from a distance, thought otherwise.

Several days later the angel, walking in the direction of the artist's glen, found and took away his canvas. Three weeks later he called upon her and found a check for $100 awaiting him and a brand new box for his equipment. Delighted, he showed his treasures to Madge, who only pouted and then cried. Meanwhile, Bill Hogan nursed a grudge in secret.

A day came when the angel, strolling through the woods, saw a terrific fist fight between Bill Hogan and Jim. Beside them stood Madge and Carrie, vainly trying to separate them. Then came the angel's moment of renunciation. She had grown to love Jim and had to fight herself to repress the desire to go away. But her better nature conquered. She separated the combatants, gave Jim to Madge and pacified the troublous Bill. She strolled with Bill into the forest and when she returned, he went willingly to the happy Carrie.

THE KISS (April 15).—Old man Hathaway was a trapper and lived with his only daughter in the mountains. Pretty Claudine often went forth to visit the traps with him and one day, when so bound, they saw a youth kiss a maiden affectionately. Seeing a chance for an object lesson, the old trapper sagely shook his head, saying, "My child, such kisses are poison. Guard against them."

Claudine had a herd of goats which she tends carefully, and one day, sitting on a rock with them scampering about her, she made so pretty a picture that Ralph Walters, a young artist from the city, asked her to pose for him. They arranged an engagement for the following day. He posed her prettily and then, overcome by her beauty, impulsively kissed her upturned, inquiring lips. Claudine fled in shame. From a distance she watched him, debating her father's advice. Then, plucking a handful of poisoned berries, she went again to him. He ate them gladly. In a few moments he fell, deathly sick, across the rock and Claudine ran, badly scared to her father.

Together they rescued the sick artist, and took him home. He recovered, and one day, while away with her father, she told him her reason for giving him the poisoned berries. Furious at the insult offered his daughter, the aged trapper hurried back, gave Ralph a gun, and offered him a chance for his life. Overcome by feeling, Claudine stepped in between them and spared Ralph from the deadly hatred of the old man. A few minutes later Ralph was picking his way through the boulders, pondering upon the quaintness of backwoods ways and the ease with which an innocent expression of admiration was transformed into an excuse to kill.

THE GREAT HARMONY (May 17).—Old von Berlitz lived in the little village with his daughter, Gretchen. He played the pipe organ at the church, loved it, and in quiet worked on plans for a new patented pipe organ. Gretchen worked in the grocery store.

The church committee, ever seeking a chance, grew tired of von Berlitz and discharged him, bringing from the city young Ziegfried, a handsome musician of note. Ziegfried called on the old man and felt mighty guilty of depriving him of support. Incidentally, he fell madly in love with Gretchen, and began to visit the house regularly, bringing his own pupils for instruction. In spite of himself, the old musician began to love the younger man for his kindness.

One day Ziegfried called when von Berlitz was working on his drawings of the new organ. Ziegfried became interested and finally took the drawings to the far away city. Thus he did not appear for recital at the church, and the committee again visited old von Berlitz, this time to offer him his old place back again, and to tell him that the young musician had run away with the drawings. Two weeks passed and then three, and still the old man held his faith. Then came to Gretchen a telegram, which she read joyously to him. It said:

"American Organ Co. offers $10,000 for new patent. Will hold out for $15,000.
Home soon. ZIEGFRIED."

And home he came with the check and in return asked a gift he was willingly given—the hand of the more than happy Gretchen.

EXPRESS C. O. D. (May 4).—It is said that luck comes to every man once, but in the case of a certain crabbed old express agent, Dame Fortune made a bunny nose at him.

When the opportunity to achieve fortune came to him, the express agent did not realize it. He had just been rejected by the woman he loved, a beautiful widow, and life looked very dark to him. Then an express package arrived, consigned to the woman he loved and containing two rabbits, the property of her small son.

If the widow had paid the express charges right away the chances are that this story would never have been written. But the rabbits were detained in the musty railroad station, their new owner being out of town, and by the time she returned she absolutely refused to pay the board bills of Mr. and Mrs. Rabbit and all the little Rabbits.

There were many arguments between the woman who was beautiful and the man who was scorned, and the rabbits kept on multiplying. Finally it reached a point here the woman would have lost all her savings had she tried to pay the bill, so she agreed to marry the express agent on his promise to cancel the debt. Now they live very happily together, and are known among their neighbors as "the rabbit millionaries," because of the nature of their fortune.

HER SISTER'S SECRET (May 6).—The famous specialist was grave as he gave his verdict. His patient must go to California if she wished to regain her health. The proposed trip to the land of perpetual summer seemed a great treat to his youthful patient, but her older sister, who was to accompany her, realized fully the fight that had to be made before health was won back for the invalid.

In California the younger girl soon regained her strength, and she and her sister prospered on their little farm. Love came to the older girl in the person of a young, manly farmer. She cared for him, although she admitted it to no one, and as for him, one look into his eyes was enough, but she had 'little sister" to consider, and gave him no opportunity to speak his mind.

The younger girl thought that the many presents of flowers and fruit which the farmer brought were intended for her alone, and, being of a very romantic temperament, mistook a passing fancy for the farmer for love. She told her secret to her sister, and the older girl, accustomed to making sacrifices for the younger, made the greatest one in her life, when she refused the farmer's proposal of marriage. Then in her diary, where she recorded the events of each day, she wrote that she had refused the man she loved, although it nearly broke her heart, because her little sister loved him.

"Big Sister" had gone on an errand to a nearby town when the younger girl accidentally found the diary, and curiosity led her to open it. She read the pathetic entry, realized the love which had prompted the sacrifice, and resolved to be worthy of it. She went to the farmer and told him why he had been rejected, then leaving a note of farewell to her sister she took the train for the East and returned to her relatives.

As for the older girl, she did not refuse her lover a second time. She married him and they were very happy. And her sister in the East later met the man of her choice, and never regretted the action which had won her sister's respect and gratitude.

THE OTHER GIRL (May 9).—The annual tournament of roses at Pasadena, California, is participated in by many summer visitors, who eagerly vie with one another for supremacy.

A young college man decided one year to compete, prepared his entry with care and arranged with his fiancee to be the driver. This young woman was of a jealous disposition, however, continually quarreled with the young man, and just before the hour set for the fete, declined to take charge of his chariot and left him apparently helpless. While he was wondering what he should do, he saw a beautiful flower girl pass. She was a farmer's daughter and with her mother was bound for the city, hoping to sell posies to the merrymakers. The young man noted how attractive she was and on a sudden impulse urged her to drive his car. She demurred at first, but finally consented, much to his delight.

The "other girl" was angrier than ever, and broke her engagement. She expected that her fiance would beg her pardon, but he took his dismissal in a matter of fact way and seemed quite cheerful about it. Then, like a latter day prince he started out to find his "Cinderella," whose modesty and beauty had won his heart. They met at last and the girl was glad to see him, for she had dreamed of "a fairy prince" and the owner of the chariot of roses was the man whose face appeared in her dreams.

SOLAX.

THE CASE OF THE MISSING GIRL (May 7).—Burstup Homes, the detective, tries to locate a girl who mysteriously disappears. The girl's parents, while they suspect that she has eloped, still, in order to avoid a scandal, keep the matter quiet and rely on the ingenuity and resourcefulness of Burstup.

Naturally the bum detective follows many wrong clues. The girl's powder and puff leads him in the wrong trail and into a bag of flour. Many other ludicrous accidents happen to him until he finally discovers the girl's and her lover's hiding place. In order to get to her, however, he has to contend with a big gang. He reduces them to submission by means of hypnotism; but before he gets away something happens and breaks his hypnotic spell, and he is temporarily defeated. His hour of triumph comes later when he has himself smuggled into the gang's den enclosed in a life-sized frame. With one shot he kills the whole outfit, and carries off the missing heiress.

THE PAST FORGIVEN (May 9).—Margaret Reeves, an unfortunate girl, who has fallen into the clutches of a white slaver, is induced by a Salvation Army rescue worker to give up her present life, and make a new beginning. She decided to redeem herself in the new west, as a helper to an overworked wife on a big cattle range out West. She meets the foreman of the range. Attracted by Margaret's reserve, he falls in love, and tries to win the girl as his wife. A conflict between conscience and love rages in the girl's mind and love wins. She pushes the past far behind her, and takes a chance for happiness. Secure in her Western home, her joy reaches its zenith when their child is placed in the foreman's arms. The first jar to her happiness comes when she meets the keeper of the dance hall. She pleads with him for the child's sake, to keep her secret, and leave her secure in an honest man's home. Pretty faces being scarce, the man follows her home and forces his attentions on the terrified girl. The foreman, entering unexpectedly, sees him and hurls the intruder against the wall, and the disgruntled man sneers his revenge to the husband, leaving a shattered faith and a wrecked home. The husband, unforgiving, drives the shrinking wife from his hearth, and, snatching their baby girl from its cradle, swears she will never follow in her mother's footsteps. Margaret, bereft of home and child, wanders into the open, and encounters a young Indian mother playing with her papoose. The desolate woman, hungering for her baby, caresses and croons over the Indian child, and so wins the gentle young squaw's heart, that she takes Margaret home to her people. In her simple way, the Indian wife sees the white woman is in great trouble, and draws the story from her. She determines that Margaret's baby shall soon rest in its mother's arms. Stealing away from the camp, she locates the home where the lonely man mourns over the motherless babe in its cradle, and, in her tragic, broken English, shows the husband his cruelty in keeping the child from its mother. With barbaric gestures she depicts Margaret's remorse, and, seeing the man's face softening, she gently places the sleeping child in his arms and leads him, with his precious burden, to the camp which shelters a bruised and stricken woman.

DAD'S ORDERS (May 14).—Frank Goodman after graduating from college as a doctor goes to a nearby country town to visit his uncle, an old doctor by the same name. When he arives he becomes acquainted with Bertie Parsons, daughter of wealthy old Ed. Pearsons, whose one great desire is to see her wedded to Dr. Frank Goodman. Old, mean and with a sour disposition he is as distasteful to Bertie as he is ardent in his lovemaking to her. When young Dr. Goodman meets Bertie, he is greatly attracted by her and when he learns of her father's choice for her husband, he rebels.

While waiting in the old doctor's office a note is left there which he reads. It is from Ed. Pearsons saying that he is dying and requesting the doctor to come at once prepared to marry his daughter by his death bed. To save her, the young doctor decides to masquerade as the old doctor and marry her himself. In his haste he leaves the note on the table. The old doctor finds the note and prepares to comply with the request. In the meantime, the young doctor secures his disguise and is married to the girl not even herself knowing the difference. After the marriage while in another room, the doctor attempts to kiss the bride which she does not want and in an outburst of temper she grabs his whiskers. When they come off and she becomes aware of the deception practiced on her, she is very angry, but as she thinks of her escape from the other man she becomes grateful.

While they are absent, the old doctor appears and says he is ready for the ceremony. When the girl's father learns the truth, he is so angry that he gives up all idea of dying and jumps out of bed a well man. When the facts become known to him, his humor overcomes his anger and all is forgiven.

THE MAN IN THE SICK ROOM (May 16).—Miriam Scott is loved by two men; Robert Henderson, only son of wealthy people, and Richard Blakely, a poor but ambitious young doctor. She admits she prefers Blakely, yet decides to marry Henderson for the home and social position he can give her. Blakely's failure to win Miriam makes him reckless. He starts gambling, gets in with a rough set who rob him and finally becomes a thief.

Meanwhile Miriam marries Henderson, who gradually tires of her, and neglects her. One evening, Henderson quarrels with his wife, and leaves the house for his club. Miriam is left alone with their sick baby, which grows worse and worse. Miriam becomes frightened, goes into another room to telephone for the doctor and is confronted by a masked burglar. Frightened, yet more alarmed for her baby's life, she tells him her troubles. He recognizes in Miriam his former sweetheart—but keeps masked. He treats her baby, and saves its life. The mother, grateful wishes to pay him; he refuses, takes off his mask identifying himself—Blakely. Explanation of his present position follows. He denies knowledge of whose home he has entered. Meanwhile, the police have followed Blakely's trail to Henderson's home. They demand admittance, and ask Miriam his whereabouts. She answers that no burglar has been there; the officers withdraw satisfied. Miriam hastens back to Blakely—gives him a suit of her husband's clothes, slips money in the pocket and sends him away. The husband returns penitent, hears the story, sees the baby now peacefully sleeping, realizes how badly he has treated his wife and begs her forgiveness which is granted.

KEYSTONE.

MABEL'S AWFUL MISTAKE (May 12).—Mabel has two suitors—Smith and Jones. Smith is an elderly man who impetuously sweeps everything before him, and his dashing ways win Mabel's heart. Poor Jones is downcast when he learns that Mabel is to marry Smith, and follows Smith home. He learns that Smith is already married and has ten little children. Peering through the window he sees the terror-stricken family bullied by Smith. Smith and Mabel go to the minister's house to be married, and Jones, dogging their footsteps, attempts to interfere but is driven away by Smith. Jones has an idea, and rushing to the Smith home he tells Mrs. Smith that her husband is marrying another girl. She grabs two arms full of little ones, and with the rest toddling at her heels she arrives in time to prevent the wedding. Smith and his wife and the kids go home, and Jones gets the girl.

In revenge, Smith captures Mabel and carries her to the old saw mill. Tying her on a board he awaits the moment when the saw shall cut her in two. Jones tries to rescue her but is driven away by Smith. Jones telephones the police, who have many exciting adventures before they reach the spot. In despair, Jones holds back the big fly wheel. It lifts him off his feet and he revolves rapidly around, but he finally masters it and holds it back. In a laughable melodramatic manner the doors are broken down and the heroine is rescued "in the nick of time."

THEIR FIRST EXECUTION (May 15).—A new electric chair has been installed in the prison, and the officials impatiently await the first execution. The victim, with careless disregard for their feelings, makes his escape from the prison. The sleuth goes in pursuit, and finding the discarded convict's garb dons it as a disguise, hoping to meet the hunted man and ingratiate himself. Prison guards capture the sleuth, and disliking to disappoint the waiting crowd, decide to execute him. He is placed in the chair and the current turned on, but he stubbornly resists death. The current is doubled and trebled, to no avail. Meanwhile the real criminal has been captured, and he is brought back in time to save the sleuth from his perilous position.

MUTUAL EDUCATIONAL.

THE OLD CLOCK (May 8).—Marius Capistrol had always expected a big legacy when his aunt died, but was greatly disappointed when he received nothing but an old clock. In order to raise enough money to pay the interest on the mortgage of his little farm, Marins offers to sell some of his furniture to a wealthy neighbor farmer, named Mathias. But Mathias did not want any of the furniture except the old clock, which Marius was loathe to give away, having become much attached to it. One day Marius receives a letter from a notary in a distant town saying that a relative in Java had died and left him his entire fortune. He shows the letter to Mathias and asks him to advance him enough money to go to the city and back. Mathias gives him the money with the stipulation that should he fail to pay him back within twenty-four hours, the old clock would revert to him. In the city Marius finds that he must wait two hours for the notary. During that time he goes out and buys many valuable things, all of which is to be paid for at 5 o'clock at the Golden Hen Hotel. When he meets the notary, he is informed that there was a mistake in reading the legatee's name, and Marius has to return all the purchases he has made. He arrives home just as Mathias is taking the clock from the wall. He attacks the old farmer and in the struggle the clock falls to the ground, disclosing a large number of bank bills and gold. Marius pays the old farmer what he owes him, and he and his wife settle down to a long life of happiness.

MOSQUES AND TOMBS OF CALIPHS AND MAMELUKES (May 8).—This particularly entertaining and instructive film gives a very comprehensive idea of Arabian architecture, which is entirely different from all others. The mausoleums which the Arabians erect for their departed rulers are most beautiful. Each one of them is an everlasting monument to the Mohammeden belief of the immortality of the soul. Each stone that is used in the construction of these tombs is inscribed with extracts from the Koran, which is their Bible. It is in the Mosques that the peculiarity of their art of building is most forcibly portrayed. The roofs of these are huge domes, which resemble an enormous inverted bowl. Surrounding them are countless spires or minarets as they are called. From these the famous "call to prayer" is given by the priests. The Arabian sunsets, which are almost sublime, gild the domes and minarets of the mosques until they look like huge balls and tongues of fire.

HIS MASTER'S RIVAL (May 15).—When Captain Ronchon received a letter from Mrs. Desgranges, saying that she would be pleased to see him at Nice and listen to his proposal of marriage, he immediately prepares to start for that city.

He, therefore, grants his servant a week's holiday. The valet, however, starts for Nice ahead of his master. As sooo as he arrives there he starts frequenting the most fashionable restaurants and in one of them makes the acquaintance of a young woman, to whom he gives his name as Captain Ronchon.

A short time after that he finds himself in trouble with an American major, who is also making love to this same lady. The Major challenges Jean to a duel, but the best he receives is a dish of ice cream in his face.

When Jean's holiday comes to an end and Captain Ronchon arrives at Nice, he finds affairs in a pretty mess. When he goes to call on Mrs. Desgranges, she exclaims, "This cannot be Captain Ronchon. He is a different looking man from you." She then catches sight of the Captain's valet, who had been hiding behind him during all this excitement, pointing to him said, "Why, this is Captain Ronchon."

The Captain turns around and asks his valet for an explanation. Of course, Jean has all kinds of excuses to offer and things are finally getting straightened out, when just at this moment the Captain's card is brought in from the Major, and on it is written a note in which he calls him a coward. The Captain, not stopping to find out how the card came in the Major's possession, rushes out to search for him. He finally locates the man who has insulted him and they immediately start to fight a duel.

However, while the duel is going on between the Captain and the Major, Mrs. Desgranges decides that she likes the valet better than the Captain and they go to secure their marriage papers. When Captain Ronchon returns, he finds that he has been jilted by the widow in his absence.

THE VALLEY OF ALBULA—Switzerland (May 15).—This film reproduces the beautiful landscape through which the railroad passes in the Valley of Albula. This road, built from 1897 to 1903, has opened the Haute Engandine to International service. It may be compared to that of St. Gothard, except that it is shorter. Following this road, we run along the mountain, around the plain of Campi, through tunnels and over viaducts, all of which afford a splendid view of Albula and its vicinity.

KAY-BEE.

FOR LOVE OF THE FLAG (2 parts—May 16).—Prairie Flower, the squaw storekeeper, has a pretty half-breed daughter, named Wianie, who is courted by many, but favors Sergt. Ashford, of Ft. McKee. Prairie Flower does not approve of her daughter's attachment, and endeavors to stop the growing romance.

Ashford receives his commission as second lieutenant, which does not please Col. Flanders and the other officers, who are academy graduates and do not take kindly to the man who has risen from the ranks. He finds himself in a peculiar position, the privates treating him as a superior officer, and his brother officers avoiding him as much as possible.

Ashford goes to visit at Sergt. Adam's house, and has a pleasant time chatting with Mrs. Adams, and playing with the baby.

Mary Flanders, the colonel's daughter, gives a dance, and neglects to invite Ashford. He feels the snub deeply, and violates military etiquette by spending the evening with the Adams, who are giving a party for their baby, which is attended by the private soldiers. The Colonel is furious, and in a fit of passion orders Ashford's arrest. Angered beyond control, Ashford resists arrest, leaps upon the colonel and knocks him down, and then runs away. Jumping on his horse he gallops away, pursued by the soldiers. A wild chase takes place, and Ashford's horse is shot and comes crashing down. He jerks the horse to its feet and forces it to continue its flight. Eluding the pursuers, Ashford takes refuge in Prairie Flower's cabin, and Winnie hides him in the attic. The Colonel orders Sergt. Adams upstairs to search for the lieutenant, and Adams reports that no one is there, and the soldiers depart.

A week later the soldiers dam the creek, bringing a protest from the Indians, who have their supply of water cut off. The Colonel treats them arrogantly, arousing their anger. From the attic Ashford hears the Indian chief tell his sister, Prairie Flower, that an attack is to be made on the fort. Visions of himself taking the oath of allegiance to the flag come to him, and he decides to warn the colonel, writing a letter which he persuades Winnie to carry for him, she being innocent of the contents of the letter, which advise Col. Flanders that the fort will be attacked that night and suggesting that he mass all the cannon at that point.

The Indian chief hears of Winnie's visit to the fort and suspects treachery. He questions his sister, and Ashford tells him that the message was one of defiance, that the whites were now his enemies and he would lead the Indians against them. The chief suspects treachery, and insists upon Winnie and Ashford leading the attack.

The attack is made, and is met with a roar of cannon which mows down the redskins. The battle is soon over, and Winnie is lying dead. The men at the fort try to express their admiration of Ashford's bravery, but he turns fiercely on the colonel and tells him: "I did it not for you, but for my oath to the flag." Abashed, the soldiers withdraw, and Ashford takes Winnie's body to Prairie Flower's cabin.

BRONCHO

A SLAVE'S DEVOTION (2 parts—May 14).—Col. Trent speculates in cotton and loses, and is compelled to borrow $1,500 from Beal, for which he gives his I. O. U. payable in one month. Edith Trent is in love with John Craig. Beal is determined to win her, and his loans to her father are made with the idea of getting Col. Trent in his power. Trent is forced to sell three negro slaves, among them his faithful Jim.

Abraham Lincoln is inaugurated as president of the United States, and rumors of impending war create much excitement. Beal buys the three slaves, and takes them to his plantation. Trent continues gambling, and Beal refuses to advance him any more money, until his notes have been paid.

The war breaks out and Beal demands payment of his notes. He agrees to cancel the indebtedness if Trent will persuade Edith to marry him, which proposition is indignantly declined by Trent. Edith overhears the conversation, and to save her father promises to marry Beal. She writes to Craig: "Dear John: Circumstances over which I have no control make it necessary for me to break our engagement. I cannot explain the reason. Please do not try to see me. Edith." Craig is worried and angry, and endeavors to see Edith, without success.

Beal's overseer has always treated the slaves with brutality, and they rebel and turning upon him one day give him a severe beating. The ringleader is caught, and Beal, furious with anger, gives him a terrible beating, which is stopped by Edith, who is horror stricken at his brutality and breaks her engagement. In revenge, Beal determines to foreclose his mortgage on the Trent homestead, and Jim, the slave, makes up his mind to save his old master by destroying the notes. Beal catches him in the act, and a terrific struggle ensues. Jim breaks away and escapes, and Beal puts bloodhounds on his track. Jim runs to Col. Trent and tells him the story, and the Trents try to save Jim from his pursuers, spiriting him to the swamp where his trail is lost.

Three years later Craig is a captain in the southern army. The Beal plantation is occupied by the northern troops, and Capt. Moore, the union officer, receives word that Capt. Craig is sending despatches through the lines by a negro messenger and is instructed to catch him.

The negro referred to is Jim, who has attached himself to Craig. The message he carries is one to Edith, telling her that he will make his way through the lines on the following Wednesday night. Jim is captured, and Beal is jubilant as a trap is set for Craig.

The appointed hour arrives, and Beal comes riding along in the moonlight. A soldier takes careful aim and fires, and the horse goes down. Craig darts into the bushes. In his anxiety to see Craig captured or killed, Beal has pushed forward and is struck by one of the bullets sent after Craig, and dies. Craig makes his way to Edith, and is joyfully greeted by her. Jim escapes and rushes to the Trent home, warning Jim that the Yankees are coming. Escape seems shut off, when the negro makes Jim change coats and hats with him and dash out. The Union soldiers take after him and Craig, goes the other way. A thrilling chase takes place, the negro being finally wounded and captured, and he dies with a smile on his face, pleased at having saved Craig. After the war Craig erects a tombstone over grave of the negro reading: reading: "Greater love hath no man than he who layeth down his life for a friend."

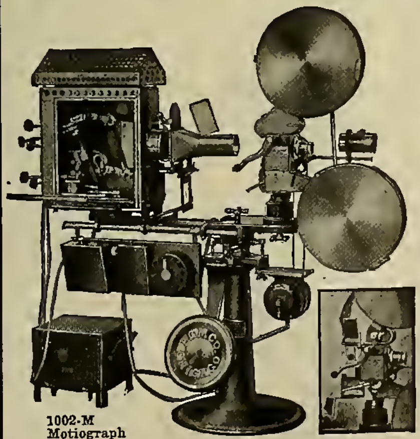
YOU KNOW Something Makes the Motiograph Different

What Is It?



1002-M Motiograph

All machine specifications read much alike; yet, YOU KNOW all machines are not alike in the service they give extending over a period of years. There lies the difference, plus—the way the MOTIOGRAPH Makers DO things. IT IS STANDARD. The MOTIOGRAPH standard has always been simply this: make every part of the machine the best, buy only the best material; make it the right way; put it together with skilled labor; test it with utmost care and then sell this product in a standard, high-class way. THIS HIGH MOTIOGRAPH STANDARD IS EXPENSIVE; YET, WE THINK, MERELY GOOD BUSINESS POLICY. It has established the reputation of the MOTIOGRAPH. We are proud of that reputation, and jealous of it, too.

Laura's father—keeper of a gambling house in the city—has a run in with the police and escapes to his daughter's home. The next morning Weston receives a telegram from his chief advising him to look for Graham, who is suspected of being in hiding somewhere in the mountains. When Weston goes to see Laura, he finds Graham, the notorious gambler, with her. The older man reads his doom in the detective's eyes and as soon as the girl is out of hearing, he signifies his readiness to go back and asks only that his daughter be spared all knowledge of his reputation. Unseen by Laura, Graham starts for the city with Weston. On the road, the moonshiners, who have been waiting their opportunity, jump out and fire at the detective. He is rendered unconscious. This is Graham's chance to escape. But as he looks at the injured man and realizes what Weston means to Laura, he knows he cannot go away and leave him to his fate in the lonely woods. He manages to get him home, where with the girl's help, he is brought around all right. On the road to recovery, Weston makes up his mind not to bring back the father of the girl he loves and writes to the chief handing in his resignation and stating at the same time that Graham is not in his neighborhood.

THE CHILDREN OF ST. ANNE (2 parts—May 6).—Running away from his brutal father, Jacques is found starving at the foot of the shrine of St. Anne, by Marie and her mother. The boy is taken home and given food. Moved by her daughter's prayers for the preservation of the boy, the mother adopts Jacques. Years pass and the boy and girl fall in love. He carves a little St. Anne for Marie which she hangs around her neck. Jacques meets an artist of wealth who realizes the boy's talent and takes him to the city where he puts him in the Art Students League. Jacques drifts into a life of dissipation, gradually forgets Marie and is eventually cast off in disgust by the artist. He meets a tramp who suggests that they go south for the winter. On their way to the ferry Jacques sees an Italian, whose business it is to make plaster casts of saints for churches, discharging one of his workmen. He applies for the job, and, after proving to the Italian that he is a sculptor is taken on. Jacques models a statuette of St. Anne which pleases his employer so much that he places it in the window. The tramp wanders to the south and comes upon the cottage of Marie, whose mother is now dead. During her conversation with the tramp she knows by instinct that the man he met is Jacques, and she has an old curate write this note for her which she takes to the city, showing it to different people: "This girl cannot speak English. Please take her to where in your city lives Jacques Le Blanc." In the city she shows the note to a flashily dressed young man who pretends to know where Jacques resides. On their way they pass the window in which the statuette of St. Anne is displayed and Marie, thinking it is a shrine, kneels and prays. The young man in trying to drag her away, tears her dress at the throat, revealing the carved St. Anne. Her screams bring the workmen out of the shop, among them Jacques, who recognizes Marie. He saves her, and ambittion and good fortune come to the children of St. Anne.

RELIANCE.

THE GOOD WITHIN (May 3).—Mrs. Clemens, blind, hires Garda Willis, a girl of questionable character, as her companion. Ralph Clemens, on his return from college, falls under the spell of the fascinating beauty and she leads him on to spend every cent he gets on her.

Mrs. Clemens, not dreaming of this state of affairs, is very kind to her companion, who softens to the old lady under this better influence. But she does not let up on the boy. Coveting a diamond star, worn by one of Mrs. Clemen's friends, she makes this known to Ralph and hints that if he gets it for her she will accept his proposal and elope with him.

The boy manages to get the jewel and gives it to Garda, who foolishly displays it on her gown. She is arrested. Mrs. Clemens is heart-broken over the girl's predicament. Garda is given the third degree and refuses to confess. Later, realizing that the mother's heart will break when she knows her boy committed the crime, the woman takes the full blame on her shoulders and confesses to the theft. That night, the boy, at his mother's side, realizes Garda is paying the penalty for his foolish act, and that his mother will never know the truth.

A CRUEL SUSPICION (May 7).—Mr. Boyd, a very jealous husband, through a combination of circumstances, finds his wife talking to a good looking bachelor named Perry. He forbids his wife to talk to the man again, but later when she meets with an accident, Mr. Perry goes to her assistance and they are both discovered in each other's company by the irate husband. He will listen to no explanation and orders his wife home. Later, their child, a boy of four years, is taken suddenly ill during the evening while the maid is out. The mother starts to go for remedies and on her way to the drug store, meets Perry, and in her anxiety for her sick boy, asks Perry to go to the drug store for her. He does so and returns with the prescription and helps the wife in her care for the child. Mr. Boyd, who has been working in his office late, returns. Their boy has just gone to sleep and Perry is about to leave the house when they hear Mr. Boyd returning. Perry and wife remember Boyd's insane jealousy. The wife tells Perry to hide behind the curtain or he will kill him before she has a chance to explain. Perry does so. Boyd enters the room, notices Perry's stick which he forgot to take with him. The maid who has been spending the evening out with the policeman on the beat, who is escorting her home, arrives in time to see Perry jump out of the window. He grabs Perry and holds him. Meantime, the husband, who has looked about the room for some explanation of his wife's guilty looks, hears a commotion outside. He takes his gun from the drawer and exits. The policeman tells Mr. Boyd that he caught Perry jumping out of the window. Boyd is sure now that his wife is untrue to him. He tells the policeman that he will deal with Perry and under cover of gun forces Perry back into the house to confront the guilty wife. When the wife pleads for Perry and tries to explain he threatens to shoot them both.

Meantime, the druggist discovers that he has given laudanum in place of some other ingredients while mixing the medicine for the sick child. He starts on a run for the house and arrives there just in time to prevent Boyd killing his wife and Perry, and they all turn to revive the child. The husband now willing to listen to explanations, begs Perry's pardon and his wife's forgiveness.

GAUMONT.

GAUMONT WEEKLY, NO. 60 (April 30).—Gymnastic Contest.—International meeting of world's athletes at Nice, France.

Canadian Train is Wrecked.—Six killed and fifteen injured when excursion party meets disaster near Montreal.

The "Vaterland" Launched.—Sister ship of Imperator is christened at Hamburg.

Aftermath of the Flood.—Railroad companies lost millions in bridges swept away.

Dresses and Coats.—Creations of Callot Soeurs, Paris, shown for the first time in America.

International Boat Race.—Yachts from all the world compete on the Riviere for trophy.

Almost Human.—Lumber-carrying machinery used by Pacific Redwood lumber yards in California handles one million feet of lumber per day.

Italy's Royal Cavalry.—Imperial guard celebrates its 22nd anniversary.

The Funeral of King George.—Slain monarch of Greece is buried with royal splendor.

WHILE THE ROBBER ROBBED (April 29).—The manager of the Princess Theater seeks free publicity. He informs newspapers that Miss Mela Drammer, leading actress in "The Green Camel" company, in a fit of artistic temperament, refused to appear in her part on the previous night, because her famous pearl collar had vanished. She subsequently went on, so the story went, the collar being found. It had been hidden in a joke.

The actress, while she didn't have the artistic temperament in the form attributed to her, had it in other ways. She was fearfully extravagant and was almost submerged in debt. Her jewels were paste, and her furniture bought on the installment plan.

She receives a note from a lawyer representing several creditors. He writes that if he doesn't receive a settlement within twenty-four hours, her goods will be sold at auction. This doesn't trouble the actress.

A man in the burglaring business has heard of the actress' pearl collar. He would like to have it. In the night he forces entrance into the house and finds the actress asleep. He takes the collar, which of course, is paste. He is stricken by the actress' beauty. He hasn't the heart to take her belongings. He notices the dun from the lawyer, and numerous bills. This determines him in his action. He restores the jewels to the dressing table. All he takes is a rose.

In the morning, the actress awakes and is alarmed to find that her much-advertised pearl collar has vanished. She at last finds it where the burglar had left it. She never knew that she had been visited by a burglar and that she was as effective to the hearts of men when asleep as when awake, until, when opening a letter that day, she reads: "Darling: I am sorry my visit last night was so brief. It grieves me to think that one so young should be worried by debt. I therefore enclose money to satisfy your creditors, and have taken a rose in exchange. Yours, JACK."

THE SHOE ON THE OTHER FOOT (May 1).—Mr. Pumpernickel installs his son and brand new daughter-in-law in a house which he owns. In the same building lives a music-mad policeman. The copper has powerful lungs. Every time he plays, the melody is so powerful that he shakes the house, which rocks like a ship in a gale. Persons in various parts of the building have the pleasure of seeing their family heirlooms topple over. There is destruction generally.

Young Mr. Pumpernickel's excellent father tells the policeman that he will have to vacate or shut up. The policeman, angered that his art is not valued, determines that he will get even. When young Mrs. Pumpernickel goes out into the street where the policeman is patrolling his beat, he arrests her after she has refused to pick up a piece of paper which she had thrown on the street. This action is a violation of the highway ordinance. Mrs. Pumpernickel is so prostrated after she has been bailed out that she is hysterical. When she goes home she takes to her bed.

A doctor is called. After hearing details, he prescribes complete rest and quietness, and that a policeman be obtained whom she can torture every morning for a week.

A dummy is made of a policeman, they being unable to find a live one who will consent to being tortured in the morning. Young Mrs. Pumpernickel and her kin punch the bloomin' 'ead off the dummy, stick their fingers in his eyes and bite their initials in his cheeks. There is a hole in the partition between the apartment of the policeman and that of the young Pumpernickels. The policeman looks through and sees the indignities being practiced upon the effigy. He enters the apartment surreptitiously when the Pumpernickels are absent. He carries out the dummy and takes its place. When the Pumpernickels return and take up their exercises upon the supposed dummy, the "dummy" suddenly comes to life. Then the invalid has another shock for her already outraged nerves.

GREAT NORTHERN.

HER FIRST LOVE AFFAIR (May 10).—Amelia Barlow, was a charming young girl who had reached the age when, in fact, she was neither girl nor woman. She wore braids on Monday, marcel waves on Tuesday, wore short skirts on Wednesday, and long frocks on Thursday. But she was charming withal, and spent most of her spare time in reading "Along the River," and other stories of love and romance. Her fond parents were tolerant and granted her every wish until one Mr. Henry made his appearance and announced that he had just passed his exams. and was anxious to take unto himself a wife. Amelia's parents were willing, but when Henry proposed to the young woman, she laughed at him and sent him away in despair. He wore glasses and was of the "small lemonade" type of suitor. The Barlows were indignant and decided that their daughter must be taught a severe lessen. After a family conference, it was decreed that Amelia must serve a year at clerical work in Mr. Barlow's offices. The girl was duly installed, and on the third day makes the acquaintance of Tom, one of the junior clerks. It appears to be a case of love at first sight, and all goes well until the elderly chief accountant discovers his employer's daughter in the embrace of the young clerk. Then it was that drastic measures were decided upon and the family decides that Amelia must be sent to a friend in the country, where she may be able to repent her folly. Tom hears of this determination on the part of Amelia's parents and plans to thwart them in their designs to send their daughter away and deprive the young couple of the happiness which they had planned for the future. Through a signal he summons Amelia to a window and deposits a note in one of the flower bushes which surround the Barlow mansion. In this he imparts the information that he will be on board the same train which will take her to her destination in the country. Mr. and Mrs. Barlow escort their daughter to the depot, and while they are bidding farewells, Tom boards the coach ahead and is unseen by the unsuspecting parents. At the first station out of the city, Amelia and Tom alight and hasten to a minister, where they are married. Then a telegram is sent to Papa Barlow announcing the event and asking for forgiveness.

DROP US A POST CARD AND WE WILL MAIL YOU OUR WEEKLY TRADE PAPER "FEATURE HINTS." IT TELLS HOW TO ADVERTISE AND MAKE A THEATRE SUCCESSFUL.

WE have spent years and years of experience and many thousands of dollars to make the Radium Gold Fibre Screen perfection.

Do Not Speculate But Investigate

Exhibitors who know the facts never hesitate to pay the price. If there is a difference in price there is a difference in quality. There is no occasion for you to make a mistake if you do your own thinking.

High-Class Lens Equipment Means High-Class Pictures

Every expression and gesture of the moving picture artist is thrown clearly, brilliantly and sharply upon the screen by

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses

Moving picture men everywhere know how much depends upon the lens equipment and realize that the Bausch & Lomb objectives and condensers mean as much to the success of a film-story as a good stage manager does to the success of a play.

Equip your machine with Bausch & Lomb lenses, and assure your patrons high-class pictures—the kind that attract and hold a desirable clientele.

The Edison and Nicholas Power Machines are regularly equipped with our lenses. They can be procured also through any film exchange.

Write for our free booklet. It will prove interesting and valuable.

This Trade Mark The Guarantee of Excellence on Goods Electrical.

A G-E Rectifier Will Increase Your Profits

IN previous advertisements we have explained how the G-E Rectifier makes pictures more brilliant, how it gives these better pictures at less cost for current, and how it can be used to advertise your theatre.

Better pictures will give increased attendance of old patrons. Advertising your theatre will attract new trade, and reduced operating expense will increase your margin of profit.

Write our nearest office for complete information and prices.

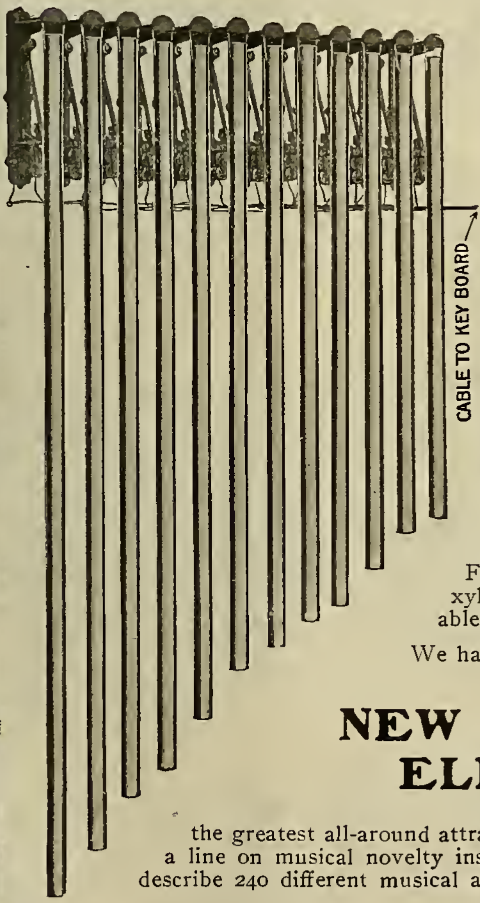
ARE YOU AWAKE

to the fact that you can greatly increase the attractiveness of your program without increasing your operating expenses, by the addition of the Deagan Electrically-operated Musical Novelty Instruments?

If you are interested in high-class musical entertainment for your theatre send for our Catalogue "F," which describes 240 different electrically-operated instruments, all of which can be played by your piano player from the piano.

We beg to attract your attention, particularly, to the



Deagan Electric Cathedral Chimes

Deagan Electric Cathedral Chimes are the finest Cathedral Chimes made of pure bell metal, and universally conceded to be the best imitation of church chimes ever produced. The electric action acts as a support for the tubes and the unit action and Chimes can be mounted about in any part of the theatre same as the Deagan Musical Electric Bells.

The Chimes can be had in three different sizes of tubes, tubes for ordinary use, tubes for heavy use, and tubes for out-of-door use, and same can be had in any desired range and scale up to sets of thirty-two notes. Deagan Electric Cathedral Chimes are completely described in our new Catalogue "F," which is free for the asking. Send for a copy today.

For ragtime music our marimbaphones and resonating xylophones are just the thing, and every drummer is able to play these instruments with little or no practice.

We have for several weeks told you all about our

NEW IMPROVED MUSICAL ELECTRICAL BELLS

the greatest all-around attraction for a motion picture theatre. If you want to get a line on musical novelty instruments drop us a line. Our catalogues, just out, describe 240 different musical attractions for motion picture theatres.

Always at Your Service

The Motion Picture Annual, published by the Chalmers Publishing Company, is always at your service. Put it in your desk and always leave it in the one place and its pages will give you an answer to most questions which interest the exhibitor. The Annual gives you a complete list of all releases issued in 1912 (Licensed and Independent). This feature alone is worth the price of the book, which sells at one dollar and twenty-five cents per copy in paper covers or $1.50 in cloth boards. To compile this list has been the work of many weeks. Other features are the trade directory, a history of motion pictures, something by Richardson on Projection and contributions by other prominent M. P. writers. The book is a practical volume of reference. Get it without delay.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

From the Patrons View Point

What Causes People

to continually patronize one Picture Theatre in preference to another? Of course, location, appearances, films, etc. have a great deal to do with it, but quality of the picture is what builds up a steady patronage that makes the business profitable.

This depends largely on your light and if you are using any other device than a to step down your current you are not getting best results.

With our machine you can produce a clear, white, steady light that won't worry your "house" by continuous flickering and will surprise you with the difference it makes with the films.

It is the only device that can be changed instantly to any of the three intensities without breaking the circuit between adjustments.

But this is not all. We will guarantee that our Compensarc

Will Cut 65% from Your Light Bill and we'll send you one on 30 days' free trial to prove it.

We have a little 22 page booklet that explains all the reasons why If you want a better light at 1/3 your present cost, send for it today. It's free.

Do You Know What The PLAYERPOSTER Is? Order The PLAYERPOSTER From Your Exchange Man, NOW!

The Thanhouser playerposter is a striking one-sheet portrait, in colors, of each of the most popular Thanhouser artists. It pulls business much better than the old-style "scene poster" does. And it is in great demand. Your exchange man cannot fill your order now, but he can fill it SOON if you only WILL ORDER NOW.

The Thanhouser Three-A-Week

Sunday, May 11: "Barred from the Mail"

Just suppose you were a fond mother, and the mean Post Office Department called your ooky-oookums a "live animal!" Wouldn't you boil with rage? See if you can appreciate the feelings of the mamma of the story when her baby was barred from the mail and came dratted near going to the "dead letter office." Screaming comedy from start to finish.

Tuesday, May 13th: "The Marble Heart"

After the celebrated play by Charles Silby, and in TWO REELS, with marvelous six-sheets. Not that there aren't one and three-sheets for it, BUT YOU MUST HAVE THOSE SPLENDID SIXES. For this feature, too, are Hennegan heralds, Novelty slides, Standard cuts and Kraus lobby photos—"perfect publicity." Marguerite Snow is simply superb in this subject as the woman with the marble heart, and you'll shed tears for James Cruze in his role of jilted sculptor.

Friday, May 16, NO RELEASE, because of two-reeler of preceding Tuesday.

Coming! Sunday, May 18: "Why Babe Left Home," a comedy of errors, and Tuesday, May 27: "Carmen," in three reels.

Universal Film Manufacturing Co.

1600 BROADWAY NEW YORK, N. Y.

“The largest film manufacturing concern in the universe”

COMING!

The Greatest Series of New War Features Ever Attempted in Filmdom!

We are spending HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS on the production of films that will give a new meaning to the word "FEATURES." We are making them of such grandeur and strength that YOU SIMPLY CANNOT AFFORD TO DO WITHOUT THEM. Thousands of exhibitors have quit using anything but the Universal Program because they have found that it is rank folly to pay extra money for "outside" features when they can get BETTER ones from their own Universal exchange. HOW SOON ARE YOU GOING TO WAKE UP AND INVESTIGATE?

"The Battle of Manila Bay" will be the most tremendous drawing card of years.

"Aguinaldo" A two-reel Filipino 101-Bison; one of the strongest pictures in our new series. Get it early!

"The Battle of San Juan Hill" Produced on a mammoth scale. Three reels.

"The Grand Old Flag" Another two-reel 101-Bison. Introducing daring novelties.

"The Spirit of the Flag" A two-reel picture with intense excitement throughout.

Announcements

We are about to release

a new series of "Victor" films with two tremendously popular stars, James Kirkwood and Gertrude Robinson, in the leading roles. Be sure to get "Love and Loneliness" (1 reel), "The Unseen Influence" (1 reel) and "A Fair Exchange" (2 reels).

Two "Crystals" Per Week

Make sure right now that your exchange has placed an order for the new "Crystal," for there will be two "Crystals" every week, beginning May 27th. If you like Pearl White as well as you say you do, see that you get both "Crystals." Demand!

The Famous Hy. Mayer

will furnish you with half a reel of timely, high-class fun every week. Demand the Saturday split "Imp" and you can't miss Mr. Mayer's cartoons. They are not like anything else in the cartoon line. Getting him was a stroke of luck for us and for you!

Three Splendid Pictures, beginning Monday, May 19th, with a REAL, GENUINE, DYED-IN-THE-WOOL WESTERN in "Her Innocent Marriage," followed Thursday, May 22d, by "Calamity Anne, Parcel Post," by all odds best of that best of "Calamity Anne" series. Saturday, May 24th, releases another Bully Western, "The Modern Snare." A charming story of a youthful sheriff and a faithful wife.

To Miss One is to Miss a Business-Puller—An Asset—A Bit of Picture-Craft That Will Delight and Entertain. See That You Get All Three, and Your Program, Patrons and Your Conscience Will Be the Better for It.

"HER INNOCENT MARRIAGE" (Release Monday, May 19, 1913)

Deprived of happiness through a drunken husband, she leaves. In the years that follow she hears of his death and remarries. Then some unexpected things happen—events that stir the blood and pique the interest to the breaking point.

"CALAMITY ANNE PARCEL POST" (Release Thursday, May 22, 1913)

You've seen that funniest of women—"Calamity Anne"—Louise Lester never was better in that difficult role. Calamity this time becomes a parcel post carrier with extraordinarily funny results. It all ends by a successful stroke on Calamity's part that nets her a cozy little nest egg.

"THE MODERN SNARE" (Release Saturday, May 24, 1913)

The newly appointed sheriff unwittingly creates the dislike of his predecessor. Result—the ex-sheriff tries a dangerous game to discredit him. When all lose faith, the wife of the youthful sheriff shows a bit of wit and a whole lot of confidence in her hubby. How she brings right from wrong makes a thrilling and wholly satisfying picture.

NOTE: Handsome lithos of Jack Kerrigan and Jack Richardson for your lobby. Dandiest sort of business-attractors. Better get a couple of each. See your exchange.

WANTED: Scenarios—not the trite and commonplace, but rather stories with a kick, something new and out of the ordinary. We are now equipped to make any and all classes of pictureplays. Hence we want one, two and three-reel stories, and, as we want the unusual in stories, so will we pay the unusual in price.

Reasons, Mr. Exhibitor, Why You Should Show Every Kalem Release

"Pictures that mean Money-Makers for the Exhibitor!"

That is the Kalem Slogan

If you are getting Kalem's four weekly releases and the Special Headliners, you need not be told what the Kalem policy is.

If you are not showing these features it is high time you arranged for them.

It Costs Money to Make Genuine Features

Kalem has been expending sums without precedent. No undertaking has been too costly; no part of the globe too remote to be visited.

Kalem paid Detective Wm. J. Burns the largest sum ever received by an individual in any country for appearing in a photoplay. "From the Manger to the Cross" represents an expenditure of $100,000.00.

And you need not look exclusively to the Kalem Specials for headline attractions. You'll find many extraordinary features in our regular one-reel issues.

Kalem photoplays will make good everything you claim for them.

Next week we will give you additional reasons

"Experience Is the Best Teacher"

Without doubt one of the most remarkable unsolicited compliments ever paid a film company is the following letter written by an exhibitor in Texas, upon his return to General Film Service after trying for two months to get along with another service.

> "I announced last Saturday night that beginning on Monday I would show licensed pictures again, featuring G. M. Anderson, John Bunny, Lillian Walker and others that were well-known to my patrons. The applause that followed made me sit up and take notice. I am frank to confess that the worst thing I ever did in my life was to discontinue your service, but, believe me, as long as you give me anything like decent pictures I am with you. I had a better crowd on Monday night than I had any Monday night during the time I used the other service, and there wasn't anything special on in town either to bring the people out. They all came 'round with a satisfied smile and words of praise for the pictures. Many of them said 'We're glad you changed.' There is an old saying that 'Experience is the best teacher.' I have found it so."

The public knows what it wants and will patronize the theatres that use General Film Service. The experience of this one exhibitor proves that. Why not travel along the line of the least resistance and use it?

Facts and Comments

IT is gratifying to learn that another "official state censorship" bill has been killed. This time it's the Wisconsin bill, which was sweeping in its provisions for censorship and state regulation of the motion picture theater. Advices from Madison, Wis., are to the effect that Assemblyman Hall, himself a theatrical manager, spoke so eloquently against the measure that a majority was obtained against it when a vote was called. Over in New Jersey, too, the efforts of the exhibitors have put the finishing touches upon a measure introduced in the legislature at Trenton providing for local censor boards. We believe that the record of censorship bills defeated should be enough to satisfy those among the exhibitors who have favored these iniquitous and un-American measures that censorship of the official sort is not wanted by either exhibitors or public.

*

The ideal censorship is the voluntary censorship, such as is maintained by the National Board in the United States or British Board in Great Britain. Regarding the methods of the latter organization Mr. W. Stephen Bush of the Moving Picture World staff, now in London, Eng., tells a very interesting story on another page of this issue. There the exhibitors, renters and manufacturers have combined to maintain a board of censors which is operated for the good of the trade at a nominal cost. All exhibitors bind themselves to use only such pictures as have been passed by the board, and that's all there is to it. The same method of procedure might be put into operation here with the National Board as now constituted as the censoring authority. All that is needed to make judgment and dictates of that body effective is for exhibitors to refuse to show pictures that do not bear its official approval. There is no necessity to invoke the authority of the State to accomplish the desired result. KEEP PICTURES OUT OF POLITICS.

"WE are running pictures only and succeeding as we never did with vaudeville," is the message received from a picture theater company operating in the vicinity of New York City, which is offering its scenery for sale. There is no doubt about the fact that the picture loving public prefer the pictures alone, to a mixture of vaudeville of questionable character. Nothing quite equals the picture as a drawing card these days. It has been the belief of the Moving Picture World that vaudeville had no place in the picture show, and it is gratifying indeed to know that theater managers are coming to the same conclusion.

HERE is a suggestion that should interest every exhibitor: Down Connecticut way an attempt is being made to get the State Legislature to pass a law that will permit Sunday picture shows. In order that the legislators might know what sort of entertainment they were expected to put their "O K" on, Fred P. Dean, manager of the Hartford Theater, invited the entire body to visit his theater and see what kind of program would be offered for Sunday entertainments. It is reported that 100 members of the General Assembly accepted the invitation and that many brought their wives and sweethearts with them and that the performance was so satisfactory that many remained for the regular show. What, if any, influence the exhibition had upon the attitude of the legislators toward the proposed Sunday opening law has not been reported, but Manager Dean's plan is surely a practical way of presenting the question and should have some weight with the lawmakers.

This is really a novel method of presenting the picture man's side of the question and has the advantage of being a true statement of the question, which cannot be said for the usual argument advanced by those who oppose the Sunday picture show. We are frequently called upon to hear and read "reasons" why this or that law regulating picture shows should be passed, offered by men who have never attended one of those exhibitions or whose allegations are mainly hearsay, or are based upon premises insufficient to support the action demanded. An example of this latter condition is now before the legislature of the State of New York in which the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children sets up the allegation that during the past five years there have been a hundred or so crimes committed against children directly traceable to picture shows and, thereupon, demands the practical abolishment of them. The conclusion is as logical as a proposition to send all bank presidents to jail because some one bank president happened to become a defaulter.

Historical Photoplays

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THE public seems to like them, and that counts for something. "Quo Vadis" is crowding a New York theater, but I doubt if this is on account of the history it portrays so much as on account of the nature and character of that history. The history of the "Prisoner of Zenda" might do just as well, although the latter is pure romance. The audience is not particular about the veracity of a presentation so long as it is entertaining. No lesser light than Robert Louis Stevenson decided that the historical romance was a dead duck, and many smaller luminaries have voiced the same opinion, but it seems to have as many lives as a cat. It is up and around and doing as well as could be expected at present.

Items worth serious consideration in the screen pageants are certain scenic and costume advantages.

Henry Arthur Jones, in a lecture delivered some years ago to Yale University, on "Literature and the Modern Drama," called "costume plays" some hard names, "sorry pieces of fustian and artifice." "When such very fine clothes are paraded, such heroic sentiments uttered, such gallant deeds done, such wasteful feats of self-sacrifice performed, I fear it shows a mean and churlish spirit to call for any examination of the author's diction, of the truth of his characterization, or of the common sense of his whole scheme." This is rather a sweeping charge for the brilliant playwright to bring against the pretty things of historical romance, but his utterances are in line with those of Prosper Merimee, Anatole France and others high in gifts critical and creative.

They were not, however, directed against the photodrama of historical pretensions.

The good old props will come in handy for many and many a day, the spears and swords and armor and chariots and iron money-chests, though we may despair of ever being able to get an idea of events contemporary that are to be history for the generations to follow. For one, I enjoy artistic settings on the screen when they glimpse decorative styles and periods, whether or not the Renaissance, the Empire, the Queen Anne, or other antique furnishings were made in Michigan. The screen presentation is set forth in a series of pictures, and beauty contributes heavily to their success.

Time was when we men outblazoned the women in splendor of raiment. In our present state of humiliation —we are tailored in sackcloth and ashes—it is hard to tell one of us from the others. Brains not counting, we have to depend for distinction upon neckties and socks. Perhaps it is on this account that our eyes linger fondly upon costume heroes of the days when a man could attain distinction by the feather on his bonnet or the curves of his silken legs. True, we have not lost that last despairing resource, the bathing suit, but heroic strutting in that final exhibit of manly perfections has blistering disadvantages besides that of short season.

Let us not disparage the wardrobe-room hero of chivalrous longing to rescue unhappy creatures in skirts without regard to his geographical or chronological status, for his costumes are various and audiences are fickle. We are all fond of change, and there are as many fashions as periods of history to draw upon in picturing the days gone by. It is not of any special consequence that the only historical dramas depicting a period as it really was are those written while history was being made. The sooner we get rid of false gods the better.

A Lubin comedy was shown the other night in which a romantic girl fell into the water in order to be "saved," and the audience tittered. Next on the screen came a "drammer" in which "Jim proves his mettle" by jumping into the water to save the girl—this time in earnest—and the audience roared. The Lubin skit caught on because it was in accord with the modern spirit, that of common sense, and the other made a hit that was never intended —it merely illustrated a need for drastic comedies. The sooner we find that theatrical heroes are idols made of mud the sooner we shall have historical plays that deserve to be placed under the heading "educational." Worse than none at all are those pretending to be instructive when they are really misleading.

"The Retreat from Moscow" contained no element of romance. Great pains were taken to make the pictured representation in faithful and bitter accord with the facts. No written account yet published equals the pictural one in force and dramatic interest, and there is a powerful lesson in the last scenes. Releases of that kind are leaders in a drift toward what is sane and sensible, in what is as near the truth as intelligent production can make them. Historical photodramas of that kind deserve a dignified place that can never be accorded to extravagant and irresponsible historical romance.

Our Civil War has furnished the background for many stirring photodramas, but most of them are marred by the inevitable trio of young people in whom it is difficult to rouse interest. While it is not my place to suggest themes, there are thousands of deep interest connected with those sad pages of our national history. Consider the force, for instance, of a powerful contrast between those going down in battle to nameless graves and politicians besetting the Washington Government and filching through despoliating enactments while the nation's attention was fastened upon the mighty issues of the war!

Dramatic periods of the Revolution may bring out the principles laid down by Washington and Jefferson and have some meaning for those of us who read the papers and discuss strained relations with foreign governments. We are making history at this very moment in dealing with darker races of Mexico and Japan. Our past relations with either offer an abundance of material historical of contemporaneous interest. There are live issues involved in what has already occurred between these countries and ourselves, and their careful presentation, avoiding yellow drama development, would create a sensation.

There is a struggle between local and national issues going on now that offers some fine opportunity for the producer of moving pictures. Handled impartially and intelligently such a subject would draw people to the little theaters who seldom attend them and would not drive any of the regular patrons away. Why weary the audience with constant repetitions of past worries and problems and the legendary hero unless there is a vital point to be made which stirs the souls of twentieth-century men and women? Why, indeed, unless the presentation has a value strictly educational? Even Shakespeare, when he utilized the customs and usages of other days than his own, aimed at the creation of living men and women. If we must use historical settings, let the motive be a thrilling one of today.

Dr. Francis Ward, a naturalist of British and American popularity, has just produced some remarkable pictures of embryo fish wriggling about inside an egg and of the heartbeats of baby salmon when hatched.

"Quo Vadis?"

The Superb Cines Photodrama Now Being Presented in the Leading Theaters of the United States and Canada by George Kleine.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

SOME time ago, when reviewing "Pharaoh, King of Egypt," by Cines, I made the assertion that when the Societa Italiana Cines attempted to do a big thing it was always done well. In the case of "Quo Vadis?" the assertion is altogether too tame, and even to say that the production is "superbly well done" falls short of the mark. But the mere use of superlatives is inadequate to do justice to any great work; there must be careful analysis and a keen study of the component elements, as well as a nice appreciation of what constitutes their harmonious arrangement and treatment in the synthetic whole.

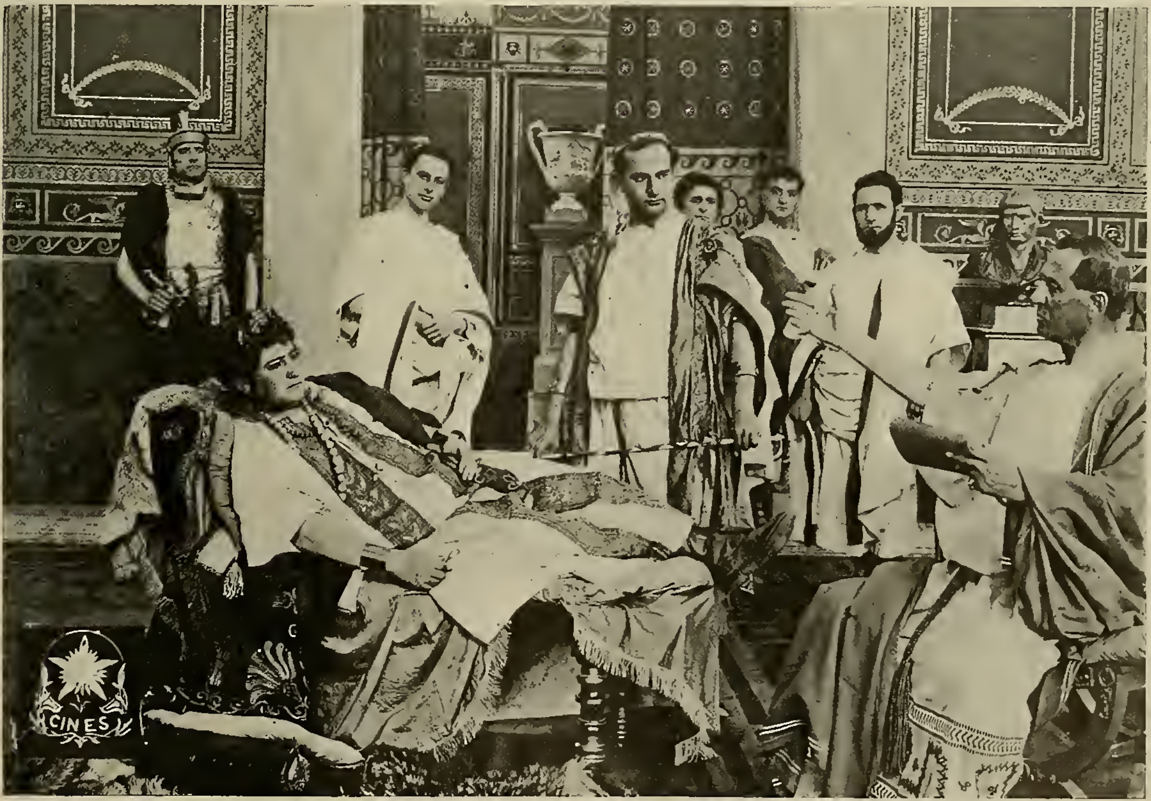
Surely one of the most vital and indispensable requisites in the production of such a subject as "Quo Vadis?" is that of atmosphere, by which, in this case, for the lack of a better term, is meant the subtle power of translating the beholder into the midst of old Rome when the early Christians were looked upon as members of a pernicious secret society, when the last of the Caesars and his favorites drained to the dregs the cups of the reveling and cruelty, and when arenic spectacles included fights to the death of gladiators and the devouring of men, women and children by ravenous beasts.

The "Quo Vadis?" of Cines does more; it gives us a view of Rome, burning, one of the most impressive spectacles ever pictured. Nowhere else could this have been done with equal fidelity; for the style of architecture has changed but slightly, though the narrow, tortuous streets of the old city have been replaced by broader, straighter avenues and the buildings made more substantial, while those in charge of the selection of the sections in front of the camera were perfectly familiar with the appearance of the old. Where else could the hiding places of the early Christians have been pictured so realistically? The catacombs and the other underground retreats of the new sect in Rome would have been imperfectly reproduced had the pictures been made in any other country. And where else could the vast amphitheatre, with its perfect outlines and faithful observance of the minutest details, have been secured? One is actually impressed, as he looks at the flying chariots in the arena, the clash of the gladiators, the shimmer of the white garments of the vestal virgins, on a section of the amphitheatre immediately to the right of that occupied by Nero and his court and patrician followers, the huddled-up crowd of devoted Christians calmly, or affrightedly, awaiting death in the arena and the rush of the hungry lions on their prey, one, I say, is actually impressed, for the moment, that he has forced his way back through the past, for a period of some 1900 years, and is gazing into the face of Nero with its imperious and cruel lines.

Are there yet other examples needed to accentuate the omnipresence of atmosphere throughout this photodrama? If there be, come with me to the last banquet of Petronius, the Arbiter, the Canon, of Court taste at the time, who, after drinking his last drink, crashes the costly and exquisitely fashioned myrrhine bowl on the floor so that Nero may not possess it, and then smilingly bleeds to death. View also the banquets at the Imperial Palace and on the Pond of Agrippa. There you have extravagant expenditures on costly wines and rare delicacies; lavish display of dress and ornament and furnishings, with flash of wit and show of fair beauty, intermixed with beguiling coquetry and shameless debauchery.

And atmosphere is accompanied by fine dramatic construction and treatment. Interest becomes more tense as the photodrama proceeds, with climax succeeding climax—each outrivalling its immediate predecessor—until the scene showing the great amphitheatre is reached and eclipses all of them. The photodrama follows closely the story by Henryk Sienkiewicz, but I am of the opinion that the scenes in the Imperial Gardens, showing the Christians being burned alive as human torches, might better have been omitted for the sake of dramatic effect. The only scenes which can follow that in the arena acceptably and effectively are the flight and death of Nero.

It is, perhaps, necessary to note here, in view of the tremendous impression which a presentation of "Quo Vadis?" creates, that the story by Sienkiewicz does not conform strictly to historical facts in certain places. The photodrama conveys the impression that Nero gave orders to fire Rome.



The Poet Lucan Reading His Works to Nero—From Cines-Kleine Production, "Quo Vadis."

Most of the writers since Tacitus have conveyed the same impression, but the best scholars are agreed that the fire occurred by chance. The fire broke out at night near the Great Circus at the base of the Palatine and Caelian hills, raging for six days, when it seemed to have spent its fury, then suddenly broke out again on the north side of the city and continued for three days more. Nero was at Antium, thirty-five miles away. "His own palace and all its treasures were lapped up by the flames. He opened the Campius Martius by the river side and all the public buildings on it to harbor the homeless. He built shelters in his own gardens to house them. He hurried up stores from Ostia and the neighboring towns to feed them, and fixed the cost of corn at one-half the prevailing market price. Though conspirators sought his life, he roamed the city all night alone as his noble palace flared away to ruin. His efforts at succor and his careless exposure of his person were, however, quite useless to restore his reputation, and the ruined denounced him as the author of the conflagration. Men whispered that he had been seen on the tower of Maecenas, on the Esquiline height, clad in habit of the stage gazing down on the lurid inferno beneath, revelling at sight of the beauty of the flames while chanting in wild glee the song of Illium's (Troy's) capture. To ascribe the fire to its real cause, chance, would never appease the mob of Rome." But Nero supported gladly the charge against the Christians and indulged with fiendish cruelty in their massacre.

A striking feature of the production, and one that cannot fail to please the eye of the most critical, is the care bestowed on detail. One fails to find, even in a great mob scene, a single instance where something better than that which happens could be suggested. Watch the crowds dashing frantically through the burning streets, the streams of humanity sometimes rushing in opposite directions. Is it not panic conceived fully to the letter? Or take the patrician throng in the great banquet scene, in the Imperial Palace, after the Empress Poppaea has retired, her exit being the signal for still greater license and more delirious reveling. Or again refer to the death scene of Petronius at his last banquet. What amazing painstaking has been taken in their rehearsal as in all the other big scenes of the photodrama! And the almost interminable array of costumes, interior furnishings and properties! What a labor these must have cost the archaeologist! Indeed the perfection of detail makes one wonder while he sings its praises.

The photography and technique of this eight-reel photodrama are in full keeping with its other excellent features. In several cases one is treated to scenes with extraordinarily beautiful light effects. Take, for example, the scene in the underground room where Lygia is nursing Vinitius back to health, after she had saved his life from the wrath of Ursus. Could there be finer depth and definition in moving pictures than are shown there, or greater softness? Another example is the scene showing the baptism of Vinitius by the Apostle Peter, where we have shadows photographed, yet every person and object in the room are clearly and softly defined.

And now the acting. What a splendid assemblage of histrionic talent! Or should I more happily say photodramatic talent? G. Serena as Petronius is undoubtedly our favorite among the leading parts. A. Mastripietri as Chilo commands attention next for forceful, artistic character acting. But it is really like splitting hairs to praise any one of the principals at the expense of the others in the cast. A. Novelli as Vinitius, C. Moltini as Tigellinus, Miss L. Giunchi as Lygia, C. Cattaneo as Nero, Mrs. O. Brandini as Poppaea, J. Gizzi as the Apostle Peter, L. Lupi as Aulus Platius, Mrs. A. Cattaneo as Eunice, and B. Castellani as Ursus are other bright stars in the firmament of this extraordinary production.

Mr. R. Mundstock, while in New York City last week, called at the offices of the World and acquainted us with the fact that he has secured the Illinois rights for all Apex features.

British Censorship.

Based On An Agreement Between Producers, Renters and Exhibitors—Has No Legal Authority—How It Works.

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE British Board of Film Censors is lodged in a little three-room apartment in an unpretentious building on Shaftesbury Avenue. Despite its impressive title it has no official authority whatever. Such power and prestige as may attach to its verdicts upon films is derived not from any governmental power, but from the consent of the manufacturers and exhibitors. In other words, the board of censors is nothing more or less than a trade committee working for the best conditions possible within the industry. Some of the daily newspapers in America have given a wrong impression about this board of censors by making it appear that the British government imposed official censorship on the industry, and appointed Mr. G. A. Redford (former censor of plays) as a sort of inquisitor. As a matter of fact, Mr. Redford owes his position as president of the British Board of Film Censors to the producers, renters and exhibitors of England. It was sought to obtain from the Home Secretary, Reg. H. McKenna, the approval of a workable scheme of censorship which had been drafted by the trade associations. The object of all this work has been to keep the control over films out of the hands of the police. This object has been fully accomplished, and a system of censorship has been introduced which works admirably for the benefit of the entire industry.

Every producer or importer of films in England is requested rather than required, to submit his production to the British Board of Film Censors, if he desires to exhibit his films publicly within the British jurisdiction. No exhibitor will handle any film which does not bear the certificate of approval issued by the censors. The only exceptions are films of actual events, reported in the daily or local press, and known in the industry as "topicals" or "locals." The publisher of films enters into an agreement with the British Board of Film Censors whereby he obliges himself to pay a fee at the rate of 1 shilling (25 cents), or a part thereof, with a minimum fee of 5 shillings ($1.25), and to submit to the board all films to be released by him, except as above stated. The publisher agrees not to publish any film whatsoever that, after due examination, shall be rejected by the board. If the film is approved by the board of censors, a certificate of approval is issued in either of two forms—one for "Universal" and one for "Public" exhibition. A film that is passed for universal exhibition may be shown to any audience, while the film proved for public exhibition may not be shown to children. The publisher obliges himself to make a photographic reproduction of the certificate granted by the board for each subject passed to appear in every such copy of the film immediately after the main title.

Exhibitors enter into an undertaking with the board of film censors to the effect that they will not show any film in their theaters that has not been passed and which does not bear the certificate of approval. The board then issues a certificate to the exhibitor. The certificate displayed in the lobby of the theater is an assurance to the public that only clean and wholesome subjects will be shown on the screen.

The expenses of the office are borne by the producers and exhibitors who pay certain fees on receiving their certificates, and for so many hundred feet of film censored. If, after all expenses are paid there remains a surplus, it is paid back to the producers and exhibitors in proper proportions. One incidental advantage of this system consists in the protection it affords to the producer against duped or piratical copies. The board will only issue certificates to the publisher in person or his authorized representative. It will be noticed that there is nothing official about all this. An exhibitor may if he chooses, do without a certificate, and the publisher of films has the legal right to offer his productions for sale without the approval of the board of censors. The fact, however, is that the exhibitors are anxious to get the certificate as it assures their patrons against an objectionable show and the producer and importer will find it next to impossible to sell to the renter or the buyer without the certificate.

It is the hope of the whole industry in England that eventually the official authorities will take cognizance of the certificate whenever the exhibitor asks for a license to open a theater. In various parts of England the boards of magistrates (who have control over the licensing of theaters) have actually made it a rule not to grant a license to any person who is not able to show a certificate from the British Board of Film Censors. If this practice becomes general and the granting of a license will hereafter depend more or less on the favorable action of the board of censors, the problem of keeping out immoral films has been solved without in any way recognizing the right of any governmental or official censorship. Thus the industry does its own censoring and effectively eliminates all objectionable films, without calling upon either the executive or the legislative branches of the government. It is easy to see how this method of self-imposed censorship is bound to meet and disarm the hostile clamor of the enemies of the motion picture.

I had quite an interview with Mr. Redford, who is the president of this board of censors. Mr. Redford has never been in America, but he has a good opinion of us and is willing to express it. As Mr. Redford is one of the most noncommittal men I ever met, this is quite a concession. The producer who submits an objectionable film is invited by Mr. Redford to call at the office of the board.

"I take the matter up with the producer and point out to him just why I think a particular scene is objectionable and ought to come out," said Mr. Redford. "We talk the matter over in a friendly spirit, and, as a rule, we have no difficulty in coming to a satisfactory conclusion. Of course, I cannot do all this censoring myself; in fact, I only do a very small part of it. I have four assistants who review the films for me. I have the utmost confidence in these assistants and I have selected them with the utmost care. They know my general views and if in the judgment of any of them, there is a well-grounded objection to any part of the film they tell me of it, and I then look myself to see whether the passage in question ought to come out or not."

"Will you," I asked Mr. Redford, "give me the names of your assistants?"

"Oh, no; I could not do that," said Mr. Redford in a state of genuine alarm. "All of these assistants have been chosen after the most minute inquiry with regard to their fitness and I really cannot see what purpose it would serve to reveal their names. Some of them have been suggested by producers and exhibitors. Now, I do not want you to get the impression that we are doing anything in the dark, but for reasons of policy I think it wise not to reveal these names. I must ask you not to press me any further on this point."

"Let me ask you about American-made films. Is it not a fact that they are of the cleanest and hardly ever call for action by your board?"

"Well, now; I cannot commit myself as to that. I have only recently seen some sublime and marvelous productions by you Americans, but you know it would not do for me to praise you too much, otherwise I would be treading on somebody's corns. I will say though, that your enterprise is remarkable."

Mr. Redford is taking both himself and his job very seriously indeed, he is a man of theatrical experience and connections, and assured me that he was very broad-minded. His manner is somewhat nervous and anxious, and he is perhaps haunted by a fear of committing himself.

I asked him whether his decisions were sure of being honored by the various local Boards of Magistrates in England. He looked pained and said that this was a subject which he did not care to go into just then. He intimated, however, that if there was any official dissent from his verdicts, matters could be straightened out with little trouble.

It was stated at the office that the reports of a ban on Biblical subjects was entirely unfounded.

I had a most interesting talk with Mr. B. Nichols, who manages the Moving Picture Sales Agency on this side of the water, representing principally Biograph, Lubin and Kalem. He is a very astute and experienced film general and his knowledge of British conditions is very thorough. He has an astonishing grasp on details and sells probably more prints than any other single agent. His huge office is run with a methodical precision and the popularity of American-made film of to-day is in no small measure due to his scientific handling. He is a native of Vermont and likes to return occasionally to the land of his birth.

The finest projection room in England, and I am inclined to think in the world, is owned by the "Essanay Co.," represented by Mr. H. A. Spoor. Mr. Spoor is popular and energetic. His offices while somewhat removed from the hub of London filmdom, are little short of luxurious.

The Vitagraph Co. is situated in "Flicker Alley" and under the management of Mr. G. H. Smith. Mr. Smith's company is progressing daily on the road of prosperity. They have just re-issued "The Tale of Two Cities" in response to a genuine public demand. Of the "Vengeance of Durand," Mr. Smith says they sold a quarter of a million feet. The rumor that the Vitagraph Co. was going to build a studio on this side has caused no end of trouble to Mr. Smith and his staff. He has been deluged with offers from architects, actors, directors, etc. It is possible that the Vitagraph may erect a studio here, but a final decision will scarcely be reached in a hurry. Mr. Smith and his office keep in close personal touch with the exhibitor and the public, which adds not a little to the great popularity of the Vitagraph film in England.

Mr. Montagu, of the Selig Co., being absent on business, I had a pleasant chat with his representative and assistant, Mr. F. W. Ingram. He says that the present quarters are inadequate to the transaction of the agency's business, and that they will soon move into larger and more commodious offices. Mr. Ingram is an enthusiast and heart and soul devoted to the promotion of Selig interests in England.

A mile or two away from the moving picture center of London on Clerkenwell Road is the big but somewhat old-fashioned building in which the Edison Co. is doing business. I had a most delightful chat with Mr. Harrison and other managers. System and order are very typical at this office. The business done by this company in England is of big proportions. There were, of course, numerous other places interesting to an American moving picture man in London where I visited and received most cordial and hospitable receptions, and of them more will be said in my next letter.

BRITISH NOTES.

Sir Hubert von Herkomer, the celebrated artist, has taken up film producing seriously, and I have heard that an important American firm is to have the first copies. Sir Hubert gives three reasons for taking up the profession. "You can make pictures without the bother of painting, act plays without a stage, and compose stories without the labor of book compiling," he states.

American exhibitors showing suffragette pictures be prepared! At a metropolitan picture palace the other evening a lady applauded the representation of a burnt-out mansion, the work of the militant suffragettes. A member of her own sex sitting behind her showed her disapproval by smartly bringing down her umbrella on the other's hat. Then the manager had the delicate duty of separating two hostile women.

"Calamity Anne (Miss Louise Lester) makes no pretense to good looks, nor is she any longer young. A hanger-on of mining camps, quick with a gun, fond of her pipe and glass, a demon with her tongue and temper, she yet compels respect because of her innate goodness of heart and strong sense of fairness."—Such is an English writer's appreciation of a famous "Flying A" artiste.

A man at Birmingham became so excited at a Wild West film showing at a local theater that he drank a bottle of prussic acid which he had in his pocket, and died immediately. The film in question, I think, was a Broncho, but it would be exceedingly bad taste to appropriate the unhappy incident for advertising purposes.

Two new animated bulletins have made their debut on the English market this week. One is the "Eclair Journal" by the company of that name and the other the "Williamson Animated News." Both are produced twice a week.

The English agent of the Edison Co., has a good eye for advertising novelties. He has just issued a smart little imitation of a bottle of medicine which is presented free to managers of unsuccessful picture theaters. There is nothing on it but the label—"Edison films, to be used regularly."

Another invention which it is expected will cause something of a furore both in the States and here is a new process for showing ordinary films in most lifelike stereoscopic relief. Messrs. Gaumont first brought the new advance to my notice, but it is commercially introduced by the Stereoscopic Cinematography Syndicate Ltd., of London. It is claimed that without alteration any projector may be made to transmit a perfectly well distanced stereoscopic image from standard films. The scientific adaption of the optical laws of refraction in conjunction with those of reflection is the prime cause of the illusion which, says an expert, makes the pictures almost breathe with life.

It is being stated that the filmed version of Bunyan's "Pilgrims Progress" is to be produced at His Majesty's Theater under the direction of Sir H. B. Tree.

Mr. Charles Urban, founder of the Urbanora Co., but perhaps better known to America as the inventor of Kinemacolor, has informed a confrere of mine that the export of Kinemacolor machines and accessories to the States is in the ascendant. Almost two hundred projectors have crossed the Atlantic this year, while the total number exported since the inauguration of the sister company in New York is 450.

Mr. J. C. B. Mason, the expert apiarist of the British Bee Keepers' Association, has been lecturing at the London opera house to a series of films of bee life. Mr. Mason is now touring the provinces, while I also hear that an American tour of these special nature films is being considered.

"Frontier," the new brand of Western films, is being introduced this week. From the quality of the first release "Tracked to the Sandia Mountains," I should forecast a successful future for the productions so far as British support is concerned. Messrs. R. Prieur, of London, are the agents for Britain and Colonies and one renter asked me if this meant that "Frontier" films must come through the English agency before going to Canada?

A suggestion was made at the Kinematograph Conference that special halls should be established for the sole display of religious films. A committee supported principally by clergymen is considering the scheme. SUTCLIFFE.

EDISON COMPANY GOES TO ENGLAND.

Director Charles J. Brabin, Miriam Nesbitt, Marc MacDermott and Otto Brautigan, photographer, sailed for England on Saturday, May 3. It is said that this company will remain abroad for six months visiting all points of interest in the British Isles.

J. SEARLE DAWLEY RETURNS.

After an extended tour of the far west J. Searle Dawley and his company of Edison players have returned to the studio, Bronx, New York.

"While John Bolt Slept"

An Artistic Edison Release.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

CHARACTERIZED by acting of the highest quality and some exquisite double exposures, this well-known theme is presented in decidedly superior fashion—its message is better enforced than ever before. It matters not that Ebenezer Scrooge, the leading character in Dickens's "Christmas Carol" is thus revitalized. "A squeezing, wrenching, grasping, scraping, clutching, covetous old sinner," visited by a spirit who points out the results of his misdeeds until he is changed into a kindly man, he is representative of the "beezeness" man of to-day, who has only one ambition above animal instincts and desires, that of getting all there is to get in the game, to the impoverishment of his spiritual nature and the ultimate paralysis of all that raises man above the beast.

Scene from "While John Bolt Slept" (Edison).

The message of "While John Bolt Slept" is to the effect that perversion of spiritual life has but one positive result, the eventual demoralization of the individual. It points out that man may reach his pitiful goal, may reject and mock at that which enlightenment presents to him in one form or another as an aim, that he may seek to fill his life completely with such material interests as the gratification of his inclinations, but he can not do this without withdrawing from the respect and kindly feeling of working companions and without degenerating into a creature barely tolerated and secretly despised.

Scene from "While John Bolt Slept" (Edison).

As enacted by Marc MacDermott, "John Bolt" is a marvelous characterization, one of the finest of his many masterly performances, and one depending upon suppression rather than emotional expression of what is passing in his mind. This is one of those instances in which only an accomplished actor could carry the message over into the hearts of the audience, but there is not an instant of failure on MacDermott's part from artistic beginning to artistic conclusion. To vitalize the paralytic and reveal by an infinitude of small signs the true nature of John Bolt required a delicacy of perception on the part of the performer seldom possesses by those who rely on pantomime in the picture plays.

The support afforded the lead, Charles Ogle as the visitant, Robert Brower as the physician, Richard Ridgely as the poor inventor tardily rewarded by the old thief, Augustus Phillips as the minister to whom is delegated the disposition of Bolt's ill-gotten gains, Miriam Nesbit as the wife and Nellie Grant Mitchell as the nurse, was without a flaw. The most interesting scene in the production is apparently an exterior, a dirty courtyard or street that looks like a veritable section of the East Side of New York, but which, I am informed, is a studio setting.

Next to MacDermott's wondrous impersonation in value is the photographic work, marking, as it does, another advance over the past performances. John Bolt's spirit rises from his body in the dream and goes wandering with the visitant. These two, like Dante and Virgil, visit the only hell known on earth, the more terrible that it is realistic. The photographic work in these scenes is all of superior quality and reaches masterly performance in a triple exposure when John Bolt in the flesh and in the spirit are given a vision of his past life. The whole presentation is a work of art.

BULL-FIGHT IN FRANCE.

A Sensational Pathe Release.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IN some respects this is one of the most extraordinary pictures ever shown on the screen.. For screen purposes it is more thrilling than baseball or football—it is a veritable combat between man and beast with the odds in the latter's favor, and he comes out victorious as a rule. It is rude and dangerous play, filled with exciting escapes, is a marvelous exhibition of human skill, strength and nerve, and, best of all, it makes the brutal Spanish amusement look like thirty centimes.

Scene from "Bull Fight in France" (Pathe).

I don't know how many years ago it was that Cervantes recited the fortuitous adventures of Don Quixote and laughed away Spain's pompous chivalry, so that it has never been seriously revived outside of motion picture producers with a lot of second-hand theatrical costumes to utilize. What he did to the false pretenses of that age, this release of Pathe Freres does to the solemn importance of those participating in the regular Spanish bull-fight. The bulls in the French exhibition are really dangerous and need no torturing to do their share in the arena, whereas the men are really brave because they are without weapons of any kind.

At the beginning and end very attractive pictures of the spectators are shown, and the great crowds of people are as thoroughly representative as those at the Grand Prix or at other famous races at Longchamps or Bois de Bologne. There is nearly an even balance of the sexes and the gathering is made bright by attractive costumes of ladies from the high and low worlds in the gay French capital. There is a reason for reviewing the passing throng aside from the natural interest that attaches to any national gathering—the people attending are nearly all of the better class. They are going to witness a spirited contest devoid of brutality.

When the arena is shown there is a parade of men in costume, a lot of athletes, but they are all on foot and carry no weapons. There is no picador with spear and armored legs on a poor old horse destined to be disemboweled, no toreadors on horseback, no banderillos with dart-like javelins to torture the animals, no matador with naked sword to be plunged into the bull's neck in final and repulsive tragedy. Mr. Bull is a thoroughbred. He goes into the game with relish, rushing the athletes all over the ring. The chase grows exciting when one of the men is knocked down and rolls away in bare time to keep from being gored.

Some astounding leaps are made by the men. One stands on tip-toe as the bull rushes madly at him and jumps clean over him from head to tail. Others are not so fortunate. Man after man is knocked down; one is chased to where he is compelled to climb the surrounding fence into the first row of spectators. The bull is gentleman enough not to follow—there are ladies and children in the audience. A lively fellow on four legs—I came near saying a bully fellow—has some new tricks of his own. He rushes a man and turns suddenly. In this way he lands an unfortunate who has to be carried from the arena. There is constant promise of tragedy in this lively release, a strange element of comedy in the actual hypnotizing of the enraged bull, and, beneath it all, a keen satire on the ridiculous pretensions of the brutal Spanish bull-fight.

"The Rajah's Casket" (Gaumont)

A Lively Three-Reel Detective Story That Holds the Interest and Pleases the Eye.

Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman.

DETECTIVE stories evidently have taken a strong hold on the fancy of French motion picture directors, judging from the numerous plays of that character which have lately been coming from France. It will be remembered that our own heroic friend of boyhood days, Nick Carter, made a tremendous hit with the French public, both in fiction and photoplay. The Gaumont Company in particular seems to have a liking to detective plays, and "The Rajah's Casket" is such a play.

The majority of scenes in the picture were taken about Biarritz, a very fashionable southern French winter resort. On that account alone they are extremely interesting; not to mention the intense interest that is injected into them. As a title "The Rajah's Casket" would suggest that we were going to see an Oriental play, but it turns out to be a strictly modern and Occidental story. The Rajah's casket is a jewel case that is presented by an Oriental potentate to an English army officer of whom he is very fond, with the proviso that it shall be given to the officer's sweetheart as his wedding gift. The casket contains various kinds of precious stones, all of which are very valuable. The orientalism of the piece ceases at this point, when the officer returns to his home in England. A set of thieves gets wind of the fact, through mail thefts they have committed, that the Rajah's casket will be delivered to the young lady, and they at once lay clever and complicated plans to get possession of it. They are high-class crooks and their plan of action is interesting to observe.

At the English hotel in Biarritz a noted detective becomes interested in the movements of the crooks and without being engaged for the work he undertakes to discover their game. The action of the plot is logically progressive and holds the interest from step to step without a break. The selections of scenes throughout the picture are more than pleasing. They are certain to be admired by all beholders who will at the same time make some audible remark of appreciation. There are some of the best sea pictures that have been seen collectively in any picture, and to anyone who is a lover of the seashore the production will be a very pleasant treat.

The acting is strictly high class as is usual with Gaumont productions, while the photography is as clear as a crystal throughout. There is not an illogical scene or jarring anachronism in the entire piece. If we were running a theater we would not hesitate to bill it very strong, because in our opinion it is "some picture."

"Balaoo" (Union Features)

Astonishing Acting in the Role of Man-Monkey Makes This Picture of Gaston Leroux's Famous Story a Big Success.

By H. C. Judson.

THE title of this big, three-part, feature offering promised very little. We have looked at other offerings featuring some queer man-animal and expected something on the order of "The Head-Egg," a melodrama we once had the pleasure of seeing Corse Payton put over. We were anything but enthusiastic; but on seeing it were most agreeably surprised. When we had watched M. Bataille, who takes the role of the monkey-man, this feeling became astonishment and wonder. He was, at times, so like a baboon that we forgot that he really wasn't one. Wonderful art was needed to make upon us the impression left by this strange being. Of course, some of the startling effects found in the weird story had necessarily to be contrived mechanically and we, who have seen so much of picture-making, recognized the means that made them possible; but, nevertheless, in all of its three reels, it held us in wakeful suspense. It is most truly a big feature. It will startle the average spectator and it will surely be talked about. It should have several days' run, so that it might have a chance to advertise itself. We have never seen anything on stage or screen that was at all like it. It is new and far off the beaten track.

Scene from "Balaoo" (Union Features).

The uncouth animal "makes" the picture—that goes without question; but the story has its human side, and the people whose fates are linked up with what the terrible babboon does are also truly drawn and natural. Gaston Leroux is no novice at plot making, that hardly needs saying. His art is apparent in this picture. The tale runs smoothly and, since M. Bataille's acting forces us to accept the animal, it is convincing. Nothing happens in it that would be improbable if such a beast-man were possible, and since the whole cast is of first rank, and the characters are not forced out of their natural humanity by what they have to do, the picture seems like a glimpse of life in some rural community of France. We find among the characters the scientist who has trained the baboon to serve like a man and who has cultivated in its dull brain the first glimmerings of human reason. Then there is the scientist's daughter. These three might be compared to Prospero, Miranda and Caliban; but Leroux has not leaned very heavily on Shakespeare's "The Tempest." It is not a love story, nor even a melodrama, but a "ghost" or "were-wolf" story, a weird tale. The human villian of the story is a poacher who has taken a fancy to the pretty girl whom he has seen walking in the woods. This poacher has gained the allegiance of the beast by some insignificant service and now uses him to obtain vengeance on a man of the village and, later, possession of the girl who has spurned him. The man has been found murdered and although the poacher is suspected he is able to prove an undeniable alibi. It was the beast who had done it, of course. When he gets the aid of this accomplice to abduct the girl, he reckons without one of the baboon's peculiarities. The girl's beauty has made the beast worship her. He is willing to drop out of a tree under which she is passing and carry her off to the hovel of the poacher; but, when he sees her struggling against the man, he takes her part.

There is no padding in the action; for such interest is in the very walk of the beast that it holds all the way and he is also a wonder of activity.

Melies In Australia

Gets Many Interesting Subjects Illustrating Present and Primative Life and Scenes.

By Doré Hoffman.

The life of the Australian aboriginal is a matter that is very vague to the vast majority of Americans. We all know in a general way that there are Ethiopians somewhere on that continent, but exactly how they differ from our own American negro is not a matter of common knowledge. The purpose that actuated Mr. Melies in including Australia in his around-the-world motion picture making trip was to give us a true idea of the life and habits of the Australian aboriginal. One of the principal purposes of this trip was to record in motion picture form something of lasting educational value, served to the spectator with an entertaining story interwoven with it. Mr. Melies has elected to roam in out-of-the-way places of the earth and make animated records of tribes and peoples that are little known and, in some cases, those that are rapidly vanishing from the face of the earth. The Australian aboriginal is a primitive race of blacks which, like the American Indian, will soon be extinct; wherefore these studies of their life and habits may be considered as being distinctly valuable.

The Melies company arrived in Sydney, Australia, late in October of 1912, from New Zealand, where they had been taking pictures of the native Maoris. They were welcomed to Sydney by Mr. J. D. Williams, the well-known American promoter, who has been a large factor in the motion picture business of Australia. It was the intention of Mr. Melies to spend only a day or two in Sydney, but he was so attracted by the natural charm of the place that he prolonged his stay for a couple of weeks. They took a number of local scenic subjects showing the city and environs and then worked out a story picture entitled "A Buried Treasure," founded upon the story by Edgar Allan Poe.

Before leaving Sydney for the territory of Queensland, where the aboriginals in their native state are mostly to be found, arrangements were made with the Colonial government for an expert on aboriginal life to accompany the party. At the suggestion of the Premier of Queensland, Mr. Archibald Meston, a well-known ethnologist and government official at Sydney, was appointed to go with the Melies party. His knowledge of the aboriginals and their language was a wonderful help in the making of these pictures. Through his familiarity with their legends and customs, it was possible to make several extremely interesting story pictures, which introduce in a logical way much interesting typical matter, such as the boomerang, spear throwing, kangaroo hunting, native dances, etc. Before the party left Sydney it was further augmented by the addition of a new leading lady, Miss Claire Nightengale, a well-known Australian actress.

The Australian aboriginal is a very different creature, even in appearance, from the American or African negro. He is much more majestic in bearing than either of these. The African black, with his ringed nose, bushy hair and painted body, together with his shield and headgear, gives us at once an impression of the remotest savagery, which impression, of course, is quite true. The American black, descending from the African, resembles him in general characteristics of feature and does not possess the serious and more honest countenance of the Australian aboriginal. The beards of the Australian "blackfellows," as they are called there, seem to whiten soon in the sunshine, which gives them a venerable appearance that is rendered still more stately by a tuft of feathers fixed erect upon the head.

The Australian blackfellow has never been warlike. There never has been a race war or a lynching in the entire history of Australia. When Captain Cook, of the British navy, took possession of Australia in the name of the Crown, in 1770, the natives made no opposition. They looked on in their characteristic silence and allowed the white man to do about as he pleased. A great injustice was done to the aboriginals shortly afterward by the English government in making of Australia a penal colony. For a number of years the scum of England's population was exiled to this land. Murderers, thieves, degenerates and undesirables of all kinds were there turned loose to roam at will. In bands they roamed the country and made much trouble for the poor blacks. They killed the men and carried off the women and did everything that was possible to harm the black man and make him hate them. Before this period the aboriginal was happy in his ignorance of tobacco, opium and whiskey. The natives in the face of firearms were helpless and receded gradually inland with the advance of the whites. However, they became addicted to the white man's vices and succumbed to diseases which they had never known before, until at the present time they are in a sad state of degeneration and well on the way to final extinction.

The Australian aboriginal is a sober individual. He seems to have no music in his soul, as has his African cousin. His civilization never was as fully developed as that of the African. His mode of living was inferior to that of the African black, for he did not even build himself a hut, much less a village. The aboriginals were nomadic. In small parties they roamed about from place to place, wherever the hunting was good. The kangaroo and the opossum, and frequently fish, were the principal items of diet. The game was usually cooked just as it was killed, and eaten when about half done. If the weather became a little cool, rude shelters of bark were made by the "gins," or women, and these were abandoned as the party moved on.

The aboriginal custom of wooing was simple, though forceful. In courting a maiden the usual method was for the man to accost his intended gin and hit her upon the head three or four times with the flat side of his tomahawk, to show her that he was interested. When she recovered consciousness she was quite impressed with him and not disposed to make much further resistance. The blackfellow generally secured his bride from some opposite tribe that came into conflict with his own. When the woman became a gin she became a slave at the same time, so the words are practically synonymous.

Mr. Melies and Party Lunching Between Scenes.

For their use of the boomerang the aboriginals are justly renowned. In the origin of this homing bludgeon they introduced a problem in physics and aeronautics that has never been figured out on paper by scientists or others. Their spear-throwing abilities are marvelous, and for long-distance spear-throwing they make use of a simple contrivance that gives further evidence of their inventive genius. This apparatus consists merely of a piece of wood about as long as a baseball bat and as round as the large end of it. There are two firm rings, one set near each end, and through these rings the spear is inserted. The handle of the spear is then bent downward and when ready the native lets go of the handle and the spring in it is sufficient to propel the spear a distance of a thousand feet with deadly accuracy. The aboriginal has always led a lazy kind of life. It has been his custom to hunt the kangaroo until he secured a good supply. While this supply lasted he spent the remainder of his time dozing in the shade, surrounded by his gins who sang or danced as he desired, and fulfilled all other commands. The high cost of living never bothered him, as there were no clothes to buy for himself and family. The highest that living ever came for him depended entirely on how high an opossum could climb a tree.

By way of Brisbane the Melies party came to a little village called Murgon, near Barambah, a missionary station. At that place, with the assistance of natives in native roles, they enacted an interesting story entitled "Captured by Boomerang Throwers." Briefly, the tale is that of five white explorers, one of whom was lost from the party and fell among a tribe of blacks. To them he represented some sort of a deity. When he lit his pipe with a match they became certain of his divinity. A microscope that he showed them how to use further convinced them. He was very desirous of making his departure, but the daughter of the old warrior fell in love with him and this made his presence at the camp a compulsory matter for an indefinite period. To make matters worse, a young chief, who was desirous of having the young lady for his gin, became jealous of the explorer and made things decidedly interesting for him. During the action of the story, a number of accurate scenes of aboriginal camp life, native dances and ceremonies have been introduced. The method of the young explorer's escape from the natives we shall leave for the picture to tell, with the assurance that it is all very interesting as well as educational. Another picture taken in these surroundings is entitled "The Golden Gully," the story of a shipwrecked sailor cast among a tribe of hostile blacks; one of unusual dramatic originality and power.

Miss Claire Nightingale, Melies Australian Leading Lady.

From Murgon the Melies party went to Yarrabah, another native settlement, where two other aboriginal pictures were taken, entitled "The Black Trackers" and "The Foster Brothers." Then followed a trip to Gympie in the heart of the gold fields. At this point were taken some pictures of typical Australian mining life of the present time. One of these that is especially good is entitled "Gold and the Gilded Way," a story of two young men who strike a rich claim. Another is "The Stolen Claim," showing the rough Australian miner exactly as he appears in this wild, unsettled country; for it should be borne in mind that in Australia there would be only one inhabitant to every 110 square miles, if they were so distributed.

While the dramatic company was at work on the story pictures, the Melies special cameraman, Mr. George Scott, was attending to the educational side of the expedition and has sent home to America several thousand feet of film showing Queensland scenery and country life and industrial enterprises. Special trips were made to the reefs of the Great Barrier and to the famous Barron Falls. On the 6th of December, Mr. Melies and his party embarked at Cairns for Thursday Island, the center of the pearl-fishing industry in Oriental waters.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

WITH the advent of "Quo Vadis?" and the manner of its handling by George Kleine, the moving picture has taken a big stride forward into the field of entertainment in this country. This photodrama has been dignified as no preceding film subject has been distinguished in the past. For "Quo Vadis?" there has been no such thing as a release date. It has had its New York opening and its Chicago opening, and is now having its "run" in each city. By the time this appears in print it will have had its Philadelphia opening, to be followed by that in Boston, and so on throughout the country. The largest theaters are being used for its presentation, and advanced prices are charged for admission.

The influence exerted by photodramas of this type is bound to be distinctly felt by the industry. The encroachment made on the special domain of the drama will enlist hundreds of thousands of new fans for moving pictures. The smaller houses will benefit in the long run; for, once awakened by seeing eight or ten reel productions in the large houses, these new converts to moving pictures will learn to attend the smaller, well conducted houses in the neighborhood of their homes.

It is of vital importance that the presentation of these great photodramas shall be of such high character—in projection, musical accompaniment and effects—that they will serve as educational aids to the managers of the regular moving picture theaters. The higher prices of admission and the larger seating capacity of the theaters will enable those interested to furnish, without stint, the requisite complementary aids to the photodramas. Mere money-making, as the object in view, will kill the goose with the golden egg. There is much art required for the proper development of moving picture presentations, and in this new departure, in this country, from the old order of things there is a magnificent opportunity to invest the moving picture with greater dignity.

"Quo Vadis?" opened at McVickers, this city, at a matinee, Monday, May 5, to a large and fashionable audience. The principal features were vigorously applauded both at the matinee and evening presentations.

Great Gain of Moving Pictures.

At a meeting of subdivision committee No. 19 of the Chicago Association of Commerce, in the Hotel La Salle, April 30, a report was read which showed that Chicago now holds third place among the cities of the world in number of theaters and total attendance. London and New York stand first and second. The members of the committee referred to confine their attention to theaters, amusements, clubs and expositions.

Chicago is destined to become the theatrical center of the United States, is the opinion of the committee, and the members drew attention to the fact that many theatrical managers, realizing the advantage of a central booking point, have moved from New York to Chicago in the last few years. Chicago has at present 116 play houses and 452 moving picture theaters.

A grand total of $46,000,000 is invested in the city for the entertainment and pleasure of Chicagoans. In the downtown theaters alone $6,500,000 is turned in annually at the box offices, while the total attendance is 8,000,000. This was the showing made in 1912. "If it were possible to estimate the total amount of money spent by Chicago each year for theatrical attractions," declared the report, "it would probably be easy to prove that more money is spent on amusements in this city than for any single commodity of merchandise or for any of the necessities of life."

The report, unfortunately, affords no comparison of figures showing the volume of business done by the larger theaters and that done by the moving picture houses. This would have been valuable and interesting, as it would have shown at a glance the advance in the receipts of Chicago picture theaters and also that of the large houses for the past few years. It would also have shown what decline, if any, has been experienced by the large houses due to the competition of the picture theaters.

Paris does things more thoroughly, as is shown by the following cable, of May 3, to the Chicago Tribune: "An evidence of the effect of the moving picture shows on theaters and other entertainments is afforded in the publication of the receipts from all amusements in 1912. The returns are official, as they are issued by the assistant publique, which collects 10 per cent. of the receipts for the poor.

"The receipts last year reached the record mark of $13,100,000, which was nearly $1,400,000 more than for the previous year. As every class of shows give an increase, it is argued by some that the moving pictures have not injured the older entertainments, but that they have found their own audiences.

"An analysis of the report, however, shows that the receipts of the theaters increased from 33,000,000 francs to 34,000,000 francs, or something over 3 per cent.; those of concerts and cafe concerts from 6,842,000 to 9,459,000 francs, or nearly 40 per cent.; those of music halls from 7,000,000 to 7,410,000 francs, which is not 5 per cent.

"But the moving pictures jumped from 2,800,000 to 6,800,000 francs, an increase of 143 per cent."

Opera shows the greatest returns, with a grand total of 10,003,000 francs.

Chicago Film Brevities.

S. L. Rothapfel, director of presentations at the Lyric, Minneapolis, paid a special visit to the city, Tuesday, May 6, to see a presentation of "Quo Vadis?" at McVickers. Mr. Rothapfel reports fine business at the Lyric, and great enthusiasm over his programs.

C. Lang Cobb, Jr., of the Ramo Film Co., arrived in the city, Monday, May 5, from Detroit. Mr. Cobb left New York April 28, and went direct to Wheeling, West Va., to attend the exhibitor's state convention. Thence he proceeded to Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Toledo, and Detroit. He left this city for Indianapolis Wednesday, May 7, from which point he proceeded to Buffalo and back to New York. Mr. Cobb reported a fair demand in all places visited for the Ramo brand.

The Moore Feature Films, Inc., has opened offices in this city, in the Straus Building, Clark and Madison Sts. Menlo Moore is president and W. W. Willis is manager. The firm has exclusive state rights in Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Wisconsin and Michigan for a number of feature films by Gaumont, Itala, Solax and other makes. The firm's advertisement will be found on another page, in this issue.

A NEW PICTURE BY "LITTLE MARY."

Miss Mary Pickford is the author of "When Fate Decrees," a single-reel story which the Kalem Company will release on June 4. Miss Pickford has written the story for Miss Alice Joyce—who will play the lead—between whom and "Little Mary" there is a strong friendship. Miss Pickford is no novice as a photoplaywright, being the author of many produced pictures.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE COMPANY NOTES.

Ad. Kessel and C. O. Baumann, of the New York Motion Picture Company, returned to New York on May 9 from a short trip to the Pacific Coast, where they have been looking over things in general.

The Mutual Film Corporation is being flooded with requests for bookings for the five-reel special, "Battle of Gettysburg," which will be ready for shipping the latter part of the month.

Word comes from the coast that Jay Hunt, who is directing Kay-Bee and Broncho pictures, is making good, which is just what his friends expected.

KATHLYN WILLIAMS TO PRODUCE HER OWN PICTURE.

Kathlyn Williams, the talented leading woman of the Selig Polyscope Co.'s Pacific Coast Stock Company, has already gained a great deal of prominence through her ability as an originator and writer of successful scenarios. Now she is going to add further laurels to her reputation by personally producing a series of pictures which she has written herself and in which she will play the principal roles. Mr. W. N. Selig has completed arrangements whereby her initial effort in this direction will receive the co-operation of the entire Pacific Coast studio organization.

Doings at Los Angeles

Strong Picture Coming From the Biograph Company—Mutual Changes and Other Newsy Notes.

I AM of the opinion that the verdict of the motion picture world, when a forthcoming production called "Mother Love" is released by the Biograph Company, will be that David N. Griffith, the Biograph producer, has made his masterpiece. In the past Griffith has turned out a number of pictures which have been recognized as something corresponding, within the motion picture field, to the classics in older and maturer channels of artistic expression. Of course, no one can tell what other ideas may be fermenting in Griffith's brain, or what he may give forth later, but in "Mother Love" he has produced a film which many critics will undoubtedly declare to be the most artistic picture ever made. Superlatives have been so much overworked in connection with motion picture productions that they have become cheapened and have lost their meaning. Here is a picture which calls for their legitimate use and because the words have been so impaired it is difficult to express strongly enough the merit of this picture.

In making it Griffith has not permitted himself to be restricted in any avoidable way. For example, he has disregarded the arbitrary condition of length usually insisted upon and as a result the picture has run about 700 feet over one reel and will be released in the odd length. He has been unwilling to make any attempt to finish the picture in a stated time and consequently it has been about five weeks in the making, although he has been producing other pictures meanwhile. Expense has never been considered and therefore a single scene—a cabaret entertainment in a large metropolitan cafe—cost $1,800, exclusive of salaries. "If it serves no other purpose it will at least teach cafe managers in the interior how to run a cafe," Griffith observed the day he made it. The producer himself recognizes it as a supreme effort. It will be interesting to see what its reception will be by the public.

Griffith is preparing one other big effort before the company returns East for the summer. For a couple of weeks carpenters and masons have been building a village in the San Fernando valley. This does not mean that they have been putting up flats to represent store fronts, but that substantial frame structures have been erected and so formed and grouped as to express Griffith's idea of a certain Western village. Thus far no photographing has been done, although a few of the scenes have been roughly rehearsed. The punch of the story will be the destruction of the entire town by fire. This will be the last picture made before the company's departure. The date for this, originally set for May 28, has been advanced so that it will probably not be earlier than the second week of June, and may be even later, depending on how the San Fernando production goes.

Thanhouser Company Goes East.

The entire Thanhouser company returned East, leaving this city April 30, to take up their quarters in the new studio in New Rochelle. It is reported that the organization will probably return to this city next fall. Meanwhile the studio is to be retained by the Mutual forces. L. J. Henderson, director, and Frederick Vroom, manager, remained behind and are now organizing a new Majestic company to make regular releases. Since the Thanhouser company took possession of the old Imp studio on Brooklyn Heights soon after arriving here last fall, many improvements have been made. A number of buildings have been erected and it is now one of the best equipped studios in Southern California. Fred Mace, who is organizing a company to make "Mace Philms," returned from New York on the same day the Thanhouser forces departed, and it was announced that during the next month, while his new studio at Hollywood is being made ready for occupancy, he will put on a series of experimental comedies at the Brooklyn Heights studio and they will be released under the Majestic brand.

New Monopol Company Busy.

The first picture to be made by the new company, which is working under the direction and management of Tom Evans at the old Monopol studio in Hollywood, was started this week. It is to be a three-reel production of "A Florentine Tragedy," with Constance Crawley, Arthur Maude and Wilfred Lucas in the principal roles. Lucas, who gave up a position as director with the Universal company to return to New York, decided to remain here for a while with the Evans company. Except that it is generally understood that Pat Powers is behind the new company, little is known about it here. Evans is not particularly communicative. Practically the entire Powers sub-organization deserted from the Universal upon Evans' arrival and went over with him to the new studio. Directors McDonald and Matthews, who were the Powers directors with the Universal, are now with him and nearly all the actors are at the new place. There are twenty-two members of the new company, not including cameramen and those employed in the factory department. Factory buildings are now being added to the developing rooms, so it is evident that the company expects to make its prints here. A carpenter shop for the manufacture of furniture and props is being built and two new stages of 60 by 40 feet each are being laid. Mr. Evans says that the studio will have no stated output. He will simply make as many reels as he can without impairing quality.

New Picture Company.

The Panama-Pacific Motion Picture Company is a new organization which has been formed for the purpose of photographing the State of California. Head offices are to be in this city. A. L. Richardson, of Pasadena, is president; W. E. Macarton is general manager, F. W. Bloom is secretary, and Jesse H. Buffum is head of the mechanical department. The company will begin operations May 10, when an expedition equipped with three big Pierce Arrow seven-passenger automobiles and a truck will leave San Diego for an overland tour to Eureka embracing all the points of interest between. The old Spanish missions, the Yosemite national park, the big trees reservation and Lake Tahoe will all be used as backgrounds for pictures having stories behind them, and a great many straight scenic and educational pictures are to be made. The party will include eighteen actors, three cameramen and a scenario writer.

News Briefs.

The second public appearance of The Photoplayers will probably be made the first week in June, when the club will give a burlesque show in Temple Auditorium in this city for three nights and a matinee. At a general meeting of the club held last Saturday night a committee was appointed to make the preliminary plans and report back to the club at a special meeting next Saturday night. At that time the members will decide whether the data as presented by the committee justifies the move. The committee will make a favorable report, and since the sentiment in the club is strongly in favor of the show it will probably be given.

The Moving Picture Educator

THE EDUCATIONAL PICTURE.

By the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, S. T. B.

A Word of Warning.

THE First Christian church, of St. Louis, Missouri, had lately adopted what it calls "a novel plan to secure attendance from the boys and girls as well as from older persons." The account given of the plan by the St. Louis "Star" is as follows:

> The new idea goes into effect Sunday morning, and each person who attends the morning services will be given a free ticket to a moving picture entertainment on the following Friday evening in the First Christian church. The tickets will be distributed to scholars every Sunday morning and the entertainments will consist of three reels of beautiful and inspiring religious and educational pictures.

This plan is not altogether novel as it has been tried by several other Sunday-schools last year among the number being the Dr. Fry Methodist Episcopal church, South, of St. Louis itself. Moreover, there are grave objections to the plan on moral grounds and the final results are bound to be much more harmful than good. It is all right to use the pictures for amusement, or as money-getters, or for religious and educational purposes; but to use them as a bribe is altogether wrong, and when you tell a child "If you will come to church or Sunday-school I will give you something for doing so," you are doing exactly the same thing as the "big interests" do when they say to legislatures "pass or kill this bill and I will give you so much cash." We have had over a quarter of a century's experience in church and Sunday-school work and we have seen the boys and girls we have taught in Sunday-school go out into the world as grown men and women. We have also seen coals and blankets and picture cards and all sorts of other things used to procure adherence to church and Sunday-school. The results we have also seen and they have been invariably bad. Persons who go to church for what they can get out of it not only quit when they can get nothing more, but their whole moral tone and spiritual life has been lowered and degraded. They become the men and women who do and wink at the doing of illicit things and the persons who are guilty of the sharp and shady practices. They have no real religion and if you use a system of bribery in teaching them religious tenets and beliefs they cannot possibly get any, because while you are preaching the word of God you are practicing the works of the devil.

A Much Better Plan.

A much better plan would be to use the admission tickets as rewards for well learnt lessons or for continued good conduct in the same way that rewards and prizes are offered in the secular schools and one church has been very successful in employing a free distribution of tickets to non-church goers together with an invitation to some particular exhibition. No obligation was attached to the acceptance of the ticket, but the givers depended on the natural inclination of the recipient to come and see what was going on. The picture service and the sermon made their own appeal and those who had been first attracted by curiosity, came again for pleasure and stayed for better reasons. In the First Christian church of St. Louis,

> Moving pictures are shown every Sunday evening after the sermon in the church auditorium. The Rev. John L. Brandt, the pastor, and Mr. Charles A. Forse, the superintendent of the Sunday-school, having charge of the exhibition.

We would suggest that this service be made a missionary service, that the picture be selected and the sermon composed upon it so that both will teach a single definite evangelical truth of a "converting" nature, that the hymns and prayers and Bible readings be chosen to correspond and that the whole service be made to center round some one truth that will rouse the congregation to an appreciation and knowledge of their spiritual needs and responsibilities. Then distribute cards of admission and notices throughout the town inviting everyone to attend. This plan will pay not only in increased attendance but also in increased and deeper spiritual life in the parish, and it is not open to the charge of bribery and corruption, as is the Sunday-school attendance plan referred to above. The plan is not ours; it was tried about a year ago by a diocesan missionary in Pennsylvania, who went into a town where there was no church and the people did not care for church. He secured a hall, gave a series of services as above described, and in six months had an earnest and enthusiastic mission started that has been growing ever since.

An Advertising Adjunct.

The St. Paul, Minn., "Pioneer Press" sends us the following notice as to how the moving picture theaters are co-operating with the Social Service institutions of that city in religious and educational work:

> Weekly announcement of the Social Service church will be made in motion picture houses of the city through slides furnished by the publicity bureau of the church. The owners have offered to do this without charge, the plan being very acceptable to them. This is the first step in the movement which the church has started to co-operate with the various activities of the city. The Rev. C. W. Barnes, pastor of the church, preached, for instance on Lincoln, Sunday, and the slides for that week displayed a picture of the emancipator and gave the title of the sermon.

This is a capital idea and it can easily be adopted by others elsewhere. The live exhibitor, especially in the smaller and country towns, is generally very glad to educate his community in a knowledge and appreciation of the picture and to help the better element in the town to see their beauties and utilities. The work of the religious and educational bodies does not interfere with his business and as a matter of fact even makes it better, because the persons who start to use the pictures seriously get to going to his theater for amusement. Consequently it will in most cases need only a request and the supplying of an inexpensive slide announcement for churches, Y. M. C. A. and other social and religious workers to have at their command an excellent medium of publicity.

LIFE IN DUST—DEATH IN DUST.

A Health Study of the Rotifer.

It will be a surprise to a great many people to know that common dust is possessed of life. In the seventeenth century a naturalist named Leeuwenhoech, noticed when he moistened the dust gathered from the sides, roof, or gutters of his house, tiny little strange beings made their appearance. By the process of subaqueous microscopy these atoms of life, or rotifers, are animalculae which collect in the dust wherever it is permitted to lie. When these atoms are no longer wet, the tiny forms secrete themselves in cists and await more favorable times. These cists are formed of a cartilaginous envelope inside of which the little animal appears as though mumified, animated solely by latent life, their actual size being 1-10 of a millimetre. When, however, they are placed again in water, the beneficial action of the humidity revives the animal, which, after several hours, recovers from its torpor.

After having stretched itself as though awakening from a long sleep, it departs in search of an appropiate place in which to dwell; its size is now about ¼ of a millimetre. Its process of feeding is extremely peculiar; by extending two "collars" surmounted by vibratile hairs which serve to create a violent current, the effect being the attraction of nutritive particles towards its mouth. Any infusoria (a minute form of life), which are at all too large are immediately rejected, for, in the twinkling of an eye, its mouth is immediately closed, only to be reopened with hesitance and timidity.

This unusual picture from the Eclair studios will be a revelation to all who see it, as showing the possibilities and powers of life in dust. The advantages to be derived from its exhibition are manifold, under all circumstances, and especially in schools it will be educational; the knowledge gained therefrom will again in turn teach lessons in cleanliness as the only means of preventing this subtle life which of course increases as dust accumulates and becomes moist.

Poisonous Dust.

It is not a new theory that dust is a common danger to health. People who work in factories where certain forms of dust abound, such as possess lead and similar substances are the common victims of tuberculosis; as shown in the above pictures that life which is latent in the dry state becomes active and vicious immediately it is moistened in nostrils and throat. All forms of vegetable life are subject to the evil effects of dust, and as a case in point it may be mentioned that at the present time a case is pending in the Pennsylvania courts, in which damages are being sought for the destruction of valuable plants caused by cement dust floating from a factory half a mile away. While this instructive picture is not especially classified in hygienic lists, no one who sees it can fail to interpret for himself the possibility of the growth of many dangerous diseases, when the cultivation of the germ is so encouraged by dust. This film giving such wonderful microscopic enlargements of the rotifer or dust-germ, is an addition to educational films for which much credit is due to the makers.

PLANTS WHICH SEEM TO POSSESS ANIMAL LIFE.

Another deep-sea picture magnificently tinted in natural colors, is that of the Polypes. Authorities tell us that while the Polypes are close to the animal kingdom, they resemble and are often mistaken for plants. When found in their natural state they are of most varied and unexcelled shape, whilst the delicate colorings are magnificent. Their beauty is such that nature seems to have determined that they shall not be ruthlessly destroyed, having given them long sharp thorns which repel unwelcome visitors.

The Alcoymuim.

This is a special species of animal plant of exceptional interest in that it is covered with a shell, upon which grow minute living flowers. These three specimens, the Polypes, the Alcoymuim, and Anemone are very similar, yet live independently, the commonest species being found in the Atlantic. This addition to the series of the natural history of the deep sea, are entirely new and have probably never found their way in educational works obtainable by the average student or scholar. Educational cinematography is making unusual headway by the constant production of these extraordinary subjects from the world's deepest and hitherto unexplored places. While universal in its revelations, it is only by such subjects as these that the moving picture is equally valuable in research; these pictures cannot be used too quickly or too frequently.

LATEST NOTES OF PROGRESS.

The public press is everywhere recording the development and progress of the moving picture along educational lines. Questions of censorship and inferior pictures are now of little importance. The educational film is demanding and receiving universal attention. The most recent advantage particularly noticed is the photographing of motion. The movements of animals, birds and under-water life, as recorded by the latest cameras in revealing motions impossible to the human eye, and consequently never seen before and are commanding especially attention.

Speaking of these advantages Thomas A. Edison says "Through the artificial eye of the camera and the moving picture machine, we are now able to analyze motions too fast for the human eye to perceive unaided, and through this analysis of motion science is now able to get a keener insight into the processes of natural phenomena than could be obtained in any other way. The camera and the moving picture will ultimately lay bare many of Nature's darkest secrets."

It should also be noticed that this same camera power is being used in France in the gymnasium and on the athletic field and all kindred sports. It will be to the advantage of all schools to know that the moving picture is not to be confined to the science room or even the class-room. The auditorium properly equipped with the moving picture machine will be prepared to bid defiance to the world's secrets, whether in depths of earth or sea, or hidden by science or nature; even humanity itself is so closely analyzed that no movement possible to the human system can any longer be hidden, not only from full sight, but so enlarged that its most minute detail becomes an exhibition of power.

IN HIGHEST PLACES.

Secretary Redfield is proving the progressive nature of the new administration at Washington by an unlimited and unrestricted use of the moving picture in the Departments of Commerce and Labor. The saving of time, the better reproduction of details with thoroughness of research, and rapidity of teaching, are the causes given for the governmental use of the moving picture. This is not referred to here as an indorsement of the moving picture in highest places, but as an example which neither labor or education can afford to slight. The time is not far distant when anywhere, wherever knowledge is sought, or the value of teaching is expected, to exclude the moving picture will be the ignoring of one of the most necessary advantages.

"LONDON ASSURANCE" TO BE SEEN IN PICTURES.

Under the direction of Lawrence McGill, the old comedy favorite, "London Assurance," is being staged by the Reliance Company for the release of May 19th. The classic role of "Lady Gay Spanker" will be portrayed by Edgenea De Lespine.

By means of a mechanical contrivance a camera is taking every five minutes a picture of the construction of the Palace of Machinery, the great structure of the San Francisco 1915 exposition. This means ninety-six each day or six feet of film. The camera is amply protected from sun and rain. The resulting picture ought to be worth seeing.

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E. SINN

MISS DITTMAR is here again with her usual good offering. I hope it is in time to be of service to those who may have occasion to play for this picture, as it appears to be well balanced, thoughtful and in every way worthy of the subject which it accompanies. She says: "Inclosed find my program for 'The Crimson Cross' (Eclair). It might be of help to some one."

First Reel.

1. "Pilgrim's Chorus" (Thannhauser).
2. "Prayer from 'Der Freischütz'" (Weber).
3. "The Rosary."
4. "Consolation" (Leschetszky).
5. "How Lovely Are the Messengers" (from Saint Paul).
6. "Gloria from Twelfth Mass."

Second Reel.

1. "The Agony" from "Crucifixion."
2. "Procession to Calvary" (Crucifixion).

Mysterious and Agitato until end of reel.

Third Reel.

1. Several bars from introduction to "Otello," very softly, then a few bars of "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth."
2. "The Heavens Are Telling."
3. "Funeral March" by Tschaikowsky.
4. "How Lovely Are the Messengers" until end of reel.

A splendid accompaniment. I would suggest that it might be easier for another to use if you had given an idea of where to begin and stop each number, taking cues from the action or from sub-titles appearing on the screen. Anyhow, the constituency is your debtor.

J. D. S., Nebraska, says in part: "Can you give us a list of classified music (not dramatic) in your suggestions. For instance, some suggestions for music say 'play——, or—— or——.'

"Now it seems that a list of music might be made out in which all music of the same character might be placed under the same head, thus enabling a person to choose from 25 or 50 numbers if he doesn't happen to have the particular one called for."

I want to say to J. D. S. that this question occurred to me when I first began contributing to this page three years ago. It seemed to me that considering the countless musical numbers on the market and in various libraries (and possibly no two pianists in the world have libraries exactly alike), a long list of numbers similar in character would fill more space than its importance would warrant. I therefore chose several numbers of different character, all of them well known, and let each one stand as a representative of its class. For example, Schumann's "Traumerei" is presumably well enough known to give any pianist an idea of the character of music intended. Knowing this, he might play that number or substitute any similar piece of music he chose. The same may be said of "Angel's Serenade," and "Melody in F." I believe these three numbers are sufficiently well known to represent any number of similar pieces a pianist may chance to have in his library. Novelettes are so much alike it is seldom necessary to specify any particular one, though when a correspondent mentions titles his program of course appears as he sends it. Bendix's suite of four: "Longing, Parting, Meeting and Reconciliation" I have also mentioned freely, not because I don't know any others, but because they are good representatives of their class of music, are fairly well known and easy to get. The "Barcarolle from Tales of Hoffmann" might be taken as representative of another class; Gautier's "La Secret," and Delibes' "Pizzicato from Slyvia Ballet" may be taken as typical allegretto movements from scenes calling for something light, rather lively and not so noisy as a march (for example) might suggest. About all of the old standard music is published in cheap form by some one or other and is easily obtainable at small cost. I take it for granted that the average pianist is more familiar with these as a whole than with the more recent publications—that is, that these numbers are more widely known. For that reason alone I have thought it advisable to stick pretty closely to well-known pieces in my suggestion for music to the pictures, believing it would be intelligible to a larger number of readers than if I tried to choose new programs of up-to-date music for them. Your plan is all right so far as it goes, but it would take quite a large catalogue to hold a list that would be useful to all and for this reason would not be expedient in our limited space.

The Selig Polyscope Company are making into pictures some of the successful satires of Chas. T. Hoyt, which were so popular a couple of decades ago. The first one to be released is "The Midnight Bell." This is a comedy with a little melodrama running through it. The music is mostly of a lively nature, and as the characters are all of the "Down East" country type I would suggest that "barn dances" and "rube" music generally would help to carry out the atmosphere of the story. Suggestions for the music are here offered:

"THE MIDNIGHT BELL" (Selig).

Part One.

1. Any "Barn Dance" until title: "Steve and Ned Are Rivals."
2. Chorus of "My Irene Is a Village Queen" (Remick) once. (Von Tilzer's "Sun Bonnet Sue" may be substituted. Not important.)
3. "Daly's Reel" (not too fast), or any similar "rube" tune; until title: "Steve Decides to Rob the Bank."
4. Light mysterious music (not too pronounced) until: "Next Morning."
5. Agitato pp. until title: "Lemuel Tidd, Justice of the Peace."
6. Any intermezzo for neutral scenes until: "The Squire's Lawyer Is Called From Boston."
7. Short waltz—about 16 bars—just enough to make a change of music for this scene; until title: "Nora Resents, etc."
8. "Parting" (Bendix-Witmark), until: "Afraid of Being Caught, etc."
9. Mysterious until end of reel.

Part Two.

1. "Chicken Reel" (by Daly), or "Barn Dance," until: "The Entertainment at the School House."
2. "Well, I Swan" (Rube song pub. by Witmark), until telegram is shown; then a few bars of moderato (leading to next movement) until title: "Stop, My Uncle Is Innocent."
3. Light Agitato. After he coasts down hill, a short strain of "rube" music may be introduced for comedy business to end of scene. Then back to agitato and continue until: "The Sewing Society."
4. "A Good Old-Time Straw Ride" (Witmark), or any lively music suggestive of country scenes; until: "Leave My House Immediately."
5. "Meeting" (Bendix-Witmark), until: "But As a Citizen of These United States."
6. "Turkey in the Straw" until: "After Choir Practice."
7. First strain of "Meeting" until Steve enters Church.
8. Long Agitato. A church bell effect is used in this number. Play until crowd enters church and Steve is arrested.
9. Lively intermezzo until: "The Minister's Faith in Nora Is Restored."
10. Any Novelette until end of reel.

'THROUGH THE TEST OF FIRE" (Great Northern).

Part One.

1. Waltz Lento (long) until Count leaves Goldstein's room.
2. "Apple Blossoms" or any similar slow "Reverie" until: "After the Wedding."
3. Waltz until "Bride and Groom Depart."
4. Novelette until: "The Factory Workmen Have Arranged."
5. Lively music—work up to gallop as runaway horse is seen; crescendo till Jack falls, then:
6. Short plaintive (about 16 bars).
7. Allegretto ("La Secret" by Gautier or "Passion" by Helf & Hager), until end of reel.

Part Two.

1. "In the Shadows" (Finck) until: "Jack Advises His Comrades to Strike."
2. "Entr' Acte Gavotte" (Gillet) until: "Eight Days Later."
3. Pirouette—"Pas Seul" (Finck) until: "A Few Days Later."
4. Waltz until she is seen on bridge.
5. Agitato—p. Work up to f; till both men knocked down.
6. Waltz until: "Mr. Goldstein Is Killed in the Explosion."
7. Hurry p. and f. (fire scene) until: "Count Hardegg Has Inherited a Vast Fortune."
8. Pirouette until: "No, I Will Not Leave My Husband."
9. "Reverie" until: "Youthful Arrogance."
10. "The Flatterer" (Caprice by Chaminade), or some light allegretto; work up faster in agitated manner as action develops—until men exit. Then:
11. Intermezzo until end of reel.

Part Three.

1. Any novelette until: "The Workmen Press Their Claims."
2. Agitato—p. and f. until they ride through crowd and exit.
3. "Love In Idleness" (Carl Fischer) until: "Let Me Stay With You, Dear."
4. Short waltz one scene.
5. Hurry (fire scene) till: "I Will Find Your Husband."
6. Change to heavier, hurry until both men come out of burning building.
7. Plaintive until wreck is seen burning, then hurry (fire scene) until end of reel.

SIEGMUND LUBIN'S BIRTHDAY.

A very pretty function was pulled off at the Lubin plant, Philadelphia, last Monday, April 21, the date being the anniversary of Mr. Lubin's birthday. At noon a gun was fired and over four hundred of the employees, players and executives poured out into the grounds shouting "Many happy returns of your birthday." Mr. Lubin was directed to a platform to receive the congratulations, and a silver cup was presented by Anna Levitt and Mary Powers, two little girls, both players and under four years of age. Charles Goldsmith made the presentation speech, to which Siegmund Lubin responded in a very emotional reply. The buildings were decorated with bunting and the executive office filled with flowers. The cup was manufactured by the Caldwell Company of Philadelphia and weighs 8½ pounds. Barry O'Neil, Tom Cochran, Wm. Kerry, Charles Goldsmith, H. A. D'Arcy and Tom Hopkins were the committee of arrangements and made a success of a function that will for many years remind Herr Lubin of the love and loyalty of his people.

CROWN THEATER, HACKENSACK, N. J.

The Crown Theater, Hackensack, N. J., owned by Charles G. Tefft and Mrs. Edith L. Shafer, opened Saturday, May 3rd. It is a beautiful 300 seat house, especially constructed for the purpose; well ventilated, fire proof booth, etc., and no expense has been spared on the equipment which was furnished by J. H. Hallberg "The Economizer Man." Motiograph, 1913 Model, Hallberg A. C. Economizer, 300 Andrews Chairs, Ticket Receiver, and full line of supplies. Mr. Hallberg also reports the sale of a Simplex Projector with Gundlach lens through Chas. P. Gilmore, Oswego, N. Y., Power's No. 5 through J. B. Ashton, Provo, Utah. Hallberg Standard A. C. Economizer to E. S. Thrope, San Marcos, Tex.

IMPRESSIVE PICTURE PRESENTATION.

An extraordinary scene was enacted the other day in a picture theater at Pontefract, a village in Yorkshire. The attraction was the Kalem picture, "From the Manger to the Cross," and practically every inhabitant of the little township saw it. On the last night, just before the picture was about to be projected, the vicar of the parish, the Rev. W. Gell, left his seat in the stalls and mounted the elevation in front of the screen. He asked for silence, which was most reverently accorded by the crowded house, and then conducted a short prayer service. The effect on the audience was most profound, for after the exhibition the audience sang most impressively the well-known hymn, "Sun of my Soul."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Likes Our Idea.

THE M. P. Sales Agency, London, in its last batch of advertising matter sends a Kraus postcard with a blank back for the advertisement of the theater in place of the usual postcard printing. This is an idea that was advanced in this department some months ago and we are glad to see that Mr. Nichols liked the scheme. The blank back postcard makes a capital medium for special announcements and programs. If any exhibitor is interested we can tell him where they may be had.

Another interesting novelty that has been adopted by Mr. Nichols is the small book of pictures which may be slipped under the finger and made to reproduce action. The idea is old, but its use as a trade advertisement of the Kalem films is something really new. We think that their use over here would prove effective as souvenirs.

It is more of a fight for business abroad with the open market and the Agency's weekly packet of advertising matter would delight the heart of the American exhibitor.

Finds It Pays.

Steve M. Farrar, of the Casino, Eldorado, Ill., writes that he is getting business when he advertises. He adds "I know it is rough, but that was what I wanted as my crowd is not the highbrow society kind, but working people who spend their money freely if they get their money's worth." It's a lot to know just what sort of advertising will bring the best results and to be able to reach them with that sort of stuff. One of the samples submitted is a half page advertisement, the same type being used to run off a throwaway. It uses the "scoop, we've got 'em copy with the "scoop" in fifteen line letters. It catches the eye and holds the attention, but further down we think that "The dare-devil criminal in three reels" would have been improved by a dash between "criminal" and "in," using "parts" in place of reels, making the line look like this

The Dare-Devil Criminal—In THREE parts.

As a whole the advertisement is well displayed and should pull. Mr. Farrar writes that he had a turnaway two shows. Another dodger gives this:

SUPPOSE
You were living happily with your wife and young son and A MAN whom you thought to be your friend, made love to your wife and in the end
STOLE
Her away from you, would you
KILL THAT MAN?
That's what you will have decided for you
TO-NIGHT at the CASINO

That was The Unwritten Law, but it could be made to apply to other releases. We think that the wording should have been worked to get the word Wife in between stole and kill. It is not good advertising for some houses, but in the cheaper sections that sort of thing will grip the attention.

Four Cent Programs.

Some of the exhibitors who are wrestling with the program problem should see the program that E. H. Montague, the Selig London agent sent us. It is that of the West End picture theater, London. Its cover is heavy French gray about nine by eleven inches, with a cipher in gold. Inside is a single four page sheet of white hand-made paper carrying wood cuts of the interior on the first and fourth pages and the program on the other two. Just the titles of the pictures are given and the scale of prices. It is anything but imposing, yet four cents must be paid for this and a red seal with the price printed on is gummed over the edge that the program may not be read without paying for the privilege. It is a swagger house, having cost three quarters of a million, but it seems tough to pay four cents for six titles of pictures and not even a synopsis. We like the American way better.

Aberdeen Notes.

C. T. Smithers, of the Idle Hour, Aberdeen, S. D., offers what seems to be a new wrinkle in his last Educator, the eight page weekly he gets out for the house. He announces:

> Ladies hat pins can now be found in holders on the tables both in balcony and on the ground floor at the Idle Hour. Ladies losing hat pins can now always find some to use in their place.

It pays to have the women realize that you regard their comfort and convenience with the same attention that you give the coins they pass into the box office.

Say's He's the Comp.

Not long ago we expressed the opinion that Bertram I. Williams, of Ponca City, Okla., should give the printer a cigar for the way in which he set the Wonderland ads. Now Mr. Williams explains that he set the stuff himself. We think that the printer is likely to get a better cigar than if his name was not Williams. That's the way it looks to us. Just to help a hardworking editor out, Mr. Williams gives his ideas on advertising. They are good because Mr. Williams has proven that he can get results not only on paper but in the boxoffice. It is rather a lengthy communication, but it is all meat. He says:

"To me, advertising is one of the most essential points of the motion picture industry. Of course, the small town exhibitor will say, "Yes—but we have not the advantages that the houses in the big cities have!" Naturally not, but there are thousands of new schemes as yet untried, and it is a peculiar, yet interesting fact that 90 per cent. of the greatest advertising schemes of the world have had their origin in the so-called "tank-towns."

Small Town Advertising.

For the small town exhibitor there are many methods of advertising. The great majority of them, however, may be divided into four classes:

Newspaper advertising.
Handbills, posters, circulars, folders, weekly programs, cards, etc.
Lobby advertising, "Front Display," etc.
Street advertising.

Naturally the first and second methods are those to which the small town exhibitor turns first.

In writing advertisements for newspapers, I have found that a comprehensive knowledge of type values and effects is almost a necessity for the production of good work. And it is really easier than most people consider to get that knowledge. Go to the different printing offices which you may favor with your patronage, and as a general rule, you will find them very willing to present you with a sample sheet containing lines of every type in use in the office, together with the names and different sizes of the same. The "point system" or the method by which one size of type is determined from another, may puzzle you at first, but you will quickly become familiar with it. It might not be out of order to explain herein that the standard of measurement in printing offices is regulated by inches the same as an ordinary rule. But instead of dividing an inch into halves, quarters, eighths, etc., the printer divides it into 72 particles, or "points." For measurement of advertisements they still have kept the old time "pica," a "pica" being exactly 12 "points" or one-sixth of an inch.

Advertising should be progressive and full of variety, otherwise it becomes monotonous. The same little ad in the same position in the same paper day after day with nothing but the names of your house and the title of your day's program may be all right in a way, but it won't pack your house at any time. When you invest in any business you expect interest and returns on your investment. When you advertise you should expect the same thing.

Trade-Mark Good.

It is a recognized fact in all lines of commercial business that a trademark is a business getter. Take a look at any brand of groceries or the output of any manufacturer and you will find a trade-mark. That sign will become impressed upon your memory far quicker than any article of great length or artistic words. Make it quietly effective, but make it SINK IN and stay in the minds of your townspeople. Flamboyant boasting may be all right with a traveling show where you are in one minute and out the next, but it doesn't work very long when a man has to stay in the same town with the same people. In the minds of your patrons it will soon become established and the name of your theater will be synonymous with and will instinctively suggest your trade-mark. The combination of changed copy and size of advertisements together with a fixed "catch-line" offers an ideal lay-out for continuous advertising.

If you are accustomed to using handbills in connection with your advertising write the copy and regulate the space so that one composition may be used for both the ad and the handbills. In that way you will save considerable during the course of a year.

Overcrowding a display ad with too much copy is bad business. Use snappy sentences, one or two to each reel, but catch up the salient points of each film and tell it. But at the same time, don't go to the other extreme and have too little display. The title of a film alone will not give its full effect. Some little bragging must be done and the bragging will not be effective unless it is carefully planned. To overboom is fatal, since the cry of "Wolf!" grows stale, but it is possible to make people want to see almost any picture if it is attractively described. It frequently happens that the manufacturer's advertising will carry a line that can be made over, and it does not always happen that the right line is the one played up in the original advertising. Read the ad and the story of the film and anything else you can get hold of, then make a choice of the line that will suit your clientele best. If you can't find the right line, write one yourself, and don't select the first thing that comes into your head. Work out a dozen and then select the best one of the lot. Of course, it will be a little hard at first to change from the old, worn-out style to the original, but it is not one-tenth as hard as it seems and one does not have to be a trained press agent to at least better the cut-and-dried formal announcement that will be skipped by all save those who are so interested that they would go to the theater anyway. If you have something to brag about, MAKE A NOISE. Don't merely tell the regulars what you have. Get after the guy who never comes and get him in. That, after all, is what press work really means.

Weekly Programs.

Weekly programs are a good method of advertising, and they can be made almost self-supporting by the judicious use of commercial advertisements. A good many exhibitors have claimed that it does not pay to have commercial copy on the pages of a program, but after trying the effect in a number of towns I will have to disagree on that statement. It is unwise to crowd in so much advertising that the house advertising is over-shadowed, but advertising in proper proportion to the house announcements cuts down the printer's bills to almost nothing and shows a certain stability in that it carries the tacit approval of the concern's advertising. Anything can be overdone, as I have noticed from several samples of programs from the larger cities, where it seems that the theater is merely running as a side line for the program. Objectionable advertising has no place anywhere, but the leading drug store, some shoeshop or perhaps a real estate advertisement can do no harm, and the checks will help pay the printer. Purely house advertising, circulars, handbills and similar paper should be held to the house announcements, but when it comes right down to anything in the nature of a program, there can be no objection to a reasonable amount of foreign advertising. If you can use the space to good advantage yourself there is a good reason for leaving out the outside advertising, but the advertising bills are sometimes pretty serious problems to the manager of a small town show and the extra advertising is sometimes the only thing that makes it possible.

Programs can be made a source of profit and prestige to every moving picture house if properly arranged. Some care must be taken and some money must be spent at first to introduce and popularize them. When this is done, however, there will be no lack of advertisers, who will buy enough space to pay for the printing and circulation. The public appreciate a neat, cleverly arranged program, and the exhibitor who gives them such a program will have an advantage over his rival who does not. Attention to details of this sort is often the secret of success.

Not Type Alone.

But remember, advertising is not confined to stuff in type. Your projection, your program, your house and the house management are all advertisements, good or bad, and it does not avail you much to get the people in if you can't hold them after you get them. Just to be doing something, the writer, the other day decorated the front of the Wonderland theater here for the Kay-Bee release "When Lee Surrenders." And what did he use? Nothing but Fourth of July flags and bunting. But everyone who came down the street stopped to inquire what all the noise was about and the result was that at the evening show we couldn't come anywhere near holding the people who tried to get in.

Small Towns and Large.

In declaring that the small town is the most productive of good ideas, Mr. Williams echoes our own statements (as in most of what he writes). In part there is a reason, for in the cities the business is ready to hand, while in the towns the manager has to fight for existence, but we think that men like S. A. Arnold, N. E. Chaney, C. T. Smithers, J. C. Rathbone and others could come into a city and make business in the residential sections where houses now starve. The locality house is in the same class with the larger of the small towns and the man who can hustle can get the business where the indolent manager gives up the fight and makes way for another.

And speaking of Mr. Arnold, we are going to send him an alarm clock by express, charges collect, if he doesn't wake up and come in. We have missed him of late.

Getting back to Mr. Williams, here is a rather impertinent, but catchy throwaway, mostly in wood type.

IF YOUR HEAD

LUCILE!

It would seem to take rather a long time for films to find their way down to Oklahoma.

An Occasional Bulletin.

M. S. Glen, Mountain Grove, Mo., has made a start in the right direction with a bulletin, "published now and then." It is a single sheet, printed on one side only, but snappy. We print some of the paragraphs.

> Glad you came. Do it some more.
> 'Tis said that "every knock is a boost." But don't try to boost us too much.
>
> Don't let anything you see in this Bulletin OFFEND you. It's just our way of talking, between reels.
>
> You say you have no use for a Picture Show? That's nawthing —we know some of your neghbors who haven't any use for YOU!
> A fellow who "can't see anything in motion pictures," nowadays, will find himself in the same fix by stepping in front of a MIRROR —he won't SEE anything!
>
> Old and worn films jump the machine, occasionally, because of their had condition; new ones jump the machine because of their stiffness. Think of this, loved one, before criticising machine or operator.
> WANTED, for some Wednesday night—a WEDDING, to take place on the stage. Will give the couple $5.00 in cash, free clergical service, and a dandy brand-new baby cart. Parties desiring to accept this offer should see us at least five days previous to the date desired.
> Springfield has just furnished a fine example of what would happen in lots of the smaller towns if some of the kickers against Picture Shows would only do the right thing. A lot of kickers there got together, organized a board of "censorship," appointed from their own ranks an "investigating" committee, put said committee on duty and then—with bated breath and big "collicky" eyes that rolled toward heaven like a dying calf, awaited that committee's awful, awful report! And what did they get for their self-appointed official bigotry? An open and honest confession that after numerous visits to every moving picture house in town, nothing had been seen at either place that could be adjudged bad or improper in any manner whatever; that they were in fact surprised (they hadn't been going to these awful "naughty" places, you know), to find the picture shows so clean, wholesome and educational in their general and continuous grind of motion picture stories, travel-scenes, topical incidents and industrial achievements, the world over. The same story, nine times out of ten, would have to be told if chronic kickers, EVERYWHERE, would only SPEND a dime, now and then, and personally VISIT their local picture show! In fact, if they possess any mentality at all, an occasional visit to a properly-conducted picture show will do them more real honest good than a MILLION visits to some hair-brained sanctimonious "KNOW-IT-ALL," who thinks he isn't performing his DUTY except when bitterly condemning OTHER people's business affairs and legitimate enterprises. The writer of this is a strong believer in true CHRISTIANITY, an earnest stickler for social and moral CLEANLINESS, is now and has been for about 20 years a Church-member in "fairly good" standing—BUT, please deliver us from that form of supreme ignorance and brass-mounted hypocrisy that tries to hide its supernal hideousness behind the mighty bulwarks of TRUE religion! Nothing could be more dangerous to the future welfare of a rising generation. If you don't BELIEVE this, go jump in the lake!

Mr. Glen may be from Missouri, but we do not think that he needs to be "shown" when it comes to handling the language.

Cameraphone Clips.

We think that the Cameraphone might occasionally give credit to this paper for its paragraphs. When it reproduces a part of one of Louis Reeves Harrison's criticisms there would be a certain added strength in the credit line and they might pay for their generous clips with an occasional credit.

In the line of original stuff they have put on a writer to do specials for the series of bulletins. This is an exclusive feature and we believe that this is the first time that a writer has been employed by a photoplay theater to do specials for the program. We think the Tenth Street, Kansas City, was the first to use syndicate stuff, but this is a step further.

A thoughtful tribute was this memorial to the many motion picture lights who went down with the Titanic a year ago:

> April 15th
> 1912 1913
> To the memory of those builders of the modern theater and uplifters of the American stage, and to the memory of those noble exponents of the age of the motion picture, who went out from our stage a year ago today, and left it trembling at its own loss, we render loving tribute on this day.
>
> S. S. Titanic Homeward Bound

It is a graceful act and appreciated.

The Cameraphone Weekly is only a matter of time.

Fashion Note.

Carey Wilson, who is now dividing his time between hats and the Prisoner of Zenda film in New York State, writes that he has a hat that is a wonder. He adds that Zenda is going strong "up-state." We are glad to see real hustlers like Mr. Wilson getting out with these specials. The average big release would do double the business if its appearances were better advertised.

Getting Around It.

H. B. Smith, of the Fremont theater, Melrose, Calif., sends in a throwaway for The Reincarnation of Karma. He explains that there was some adverse comment when the subject was shown in San Francisco, but that he personally viewed the film and saw no objection. To forestall criticism he ran this note:

> SPECIAL REMARK, PLEASE READ CAREFULLY
> The management had considerable hesitation about presenting this classic masterpiece, owing to a doubt as to whether all would view it with the spirit in which it was conceived. However as it has passed the censorship both in the East and now in the West, we feel that we can safely show it, bearing in mind the old motto, "Honi soit qui mal y pense." (Evil be to him who evil thinks.)

He doesn't like the idea of translating the motto, but he found that few he approached knew the translation and so he played safe. They played to packed houses and encountered no objection. There is no particular reason why any should be found, for that matter.

Got It Wrong.

J. Howard Newell, of the Idle Hour, Bloomfield, Iowa, takes exception to an editorial in a recent issue of the Chicago Tribune. If Mr. Newell had looked more closely he would have found that while the editorial stated the house to be a moving picture theater, it was in reality a "Jargon" theater where plays are given in Yiddish. We think that some of the members of the Exhibitor's League in Chicago should have taken the Tribune to task. It was no more a picture theater than is the First Methodist Church. Mr. Newell is jealous of the reputation of the business. We wish there were more with his spirit. We'll never get where we are headed for until the managers take the same pride in the reputation of the business in which they are engaged as they do in their bank balances.

Mr. Newell sends in a lot of dodgers, none of which offers new catchlines, but all of which seem planned to get the business. In most instances he crowds his space with too much type. Half or even a third as much would stand ten times the chance of being read through.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

The Dinner

THE third dinner of the photoplay writers of New York, this time under the auspices of the Inquest Club, will be given at Keen's Chop House, West Thirty-Sixth Street, Saturday evening, May 31st., promptly at eight o'clock.

Tickets are two dollars each and may be had of any member of the club or of the Dinner Committee, Box Seventy, Madison Square Station, New York City. If tickets are ordered by mail please send a stamped and addressed envelope for return. Remittances should be payable to E. W. Sargent.

Reservations must be made not later than Thursday, May 29th.

All persons interested in photoplay are invited whether they are writers, editors, producers, players or manufacturers.

Please consider this YOUR personal invitation to be there.

Pathe Not Buying.

Pathe Freres ask that announcement be made that they are not in the market for photoplay scripts. As they have never been very heavy buyers in the general market, the announcement will not seriously disturb the regulars who have known for some time that the Pathe chances were so slight as to be negligible.

The staff of tame authors has been brought to the point where the supply of office made scripts is ample, and it is useless to waste your postage on Pathe.

Likes It.

Hopp Hadley sends us a letter that a Lynn author sent him thanking the Reliance company for putting her name on the film of hers they released.

This points two morals: It pleases the authors to get credit and gives the crediting companies the first call on good scripts. The other moral is that editors appreciate courteous thanks.

Don't Pay Their Bills.

Lately a certain correspondence school in New York has been advertising broadcast in the smaller papers. Several editors have reported that they were unable to collect, but a correspondent in Oneida, N. Y., has done a little investigating and finds the condition universal in his section. He writes:

> Sometime ago I wrote you about The National Author's Institute Correspondence School running an ad in the paper on which I work and was surprised to see it reprinted as I didn't think you would consider it worth while. Since that time the boss tells me he has placed the bill in the hands of a lawyer to collect. The ad was 4 columns wide by 10 inches long at 15c per inch. That set me looking into the matter and I find that practically every weekly paper in Madison County got "stung," and no reason for it either as I also found that an even twenty had taken the course in this town alone or at least claimed they had, so you see that a nice little sum is being collected up around the country by these grafters. A man here learning that I had disposed of a story or two and seeing the ad in the paper wanted to know if he and myself couldn't start something like that and offered to finance the scheme, but I told him I wanted to be able to market some of my own before I tried to teach others. The other night I spent two hours with a young lady trying to make her see the impossibility of some things in her scenario which would never get by the Censors if filmed, only to be told I had better take the course and learn what was right. Really it is pitiful some of the stuff some of them turn out and most of them come to me for advice and if I tell them the truth as I see it, am very apt to be accused of jealousy.

This is the school that sent with its advertising copy a page from the Motion Picture Story Magazine and called attention in its letter to the fact that they advertised in that magazine.

Self Criticism.

We think there would be a lot more good writers if they would, only learn to criticize themselves. Of the best little goat coaxers that can be shoved at us is the letter that says "I cannot understand why my scripts do not sell when they are so much better than what I see on the screen."

The complacent fools who give utterance to that sort of a remark are utterly beyond the reach of help. They are too well content with themselves to be willing to admit that they possess faults, let alone look for them. The more they read the products of their heaven-inspired genius, the better satisfied they are that they have written a literary gem, and so they write some more, in sheer pity for the world that has already lost one masterpiece through the stupidity of the editors. And the second is just as rotten as the first because the same mistakes are repeated and the same disregard for the rules is shown.

It is hard to appraise your own scripts and impossible to gauge them as accurately as another may, but there is a very great deal that can be learned from self-criticism, if only it be honest and sincere self-examination.

When your script is returned by some callous editor, say what you will of his intelligence, his ancestry and any other little thing like that which may occur to you, and then go over in a corner and look the script over.

First ask yourself if the story on the paper is the same story you have in your mind. Have you succeeded in getting it over to the other man? Have you made it plain just what you were driving at? You thought you had, but did you?

Remember that the editor has not your knowledge of the plot to help him. All he has to go by is the three or four sheets of typed matter. In reading over the script you may unconsciously supply as much as half of the psychology of your story. You think it is in the script, because the story is clear to you, but you do not mail your mind along with the manuscript and all the editor gets is the script. Have you put into the script all that there is to the story, or have you left a lot undone?

If the story really is all there, what's the matter with it? Is it the fault of the situations or of the development? Your big scene is where the husband discovers that the smell of liquor on his own breath has roused in his wife an hereditary love for alcohol. That's a pretty good idea, but have you made the most of it? Have you made that the one big thought of all the business that has gone before? Have you bent all your actions and situations toward that one point, or have you brought the climax so suddenly as to suggest it was an afterthought? You know that it is because of a transmitted craving for liquor that your heroine falls, but have you put it down on paper, or have you left the audience to suppose that it is because the husband drinks so much that the wife contracts the habit? Have you shown the hereditary taint, or have you shown a succession of scenes of the husband indulging his appetite and the wife tempted? Have you brought out in the early scenes the struggle against the terrible craving for intoxicants or have you planned the business so that it suggests rather that it is a recently acquired taste?

The hereditary craving is the groundwork for a powerful situation. The wife who drinks because she smells whiskey on her husband's breath is the story of a weak-willed, self-indulgent woman who is not worthy of a leading role. You know you were writing of the inherited trait, but have you really told the editor so?

If you have told him, have you told him in the right way, the most effective way? Perhaps the story was so good that the editor hated to send it back, but he did not want to keep it and spend a couple of days of his own time fixing it up. How did you develop it? Did you ring in a letter along about scene ten in which the mother writes the daughter to be careful not to acquire the drinking habit, or did you present the thing visually with the aid of a leader? The letter is easier, but it does not drive home the fact as would a leader supported by a scene or two in which the fact is demonstrated.

If you have demonstrated the fact, have you used the most telling combination of incidents or have you simply slapped it together, trusting to the strength of the big scene to carry over the slipshod work?

If you have not done it right, do it right now. Don't think that perhaps some other editor will be less exacting. Don't take any changes. Do it right before you send it out again and perhaps, this time, it will not come back.

Don't write exactly this sort of story, because this sort of story will not sell, which is why we've taken it as an illustration instead of using a salable plot, but the same idea holds good in both comedy and dramatic work. First make sure you really have written the story you meant to write, then assure yourself that you've made the best possible use of your material.

And make your own examination. Don't give it to all your friends and neighbors to criticize. They know less about it than you do and they'll tell you that it is great because that is the easiest way of avoiding any argument. Nine hundred and ninety-nine persons out of every thousand will praise rather than censure, because it is the easiest way out of it. Don't trust your friends. Trust yourself. If you go at it the right way you can not only fix over the story, but you'll fit yourself for better work on the stories to come. But your criticism must be exact and honest. You must be just and truthful to yourself, neither overpraising nor discouraging yourself. It's the best and about the only way to learn to write.

Not For Him.

In the Projection Department an operator takes us to task for saying that a trained writer can do a script in a couple of hours. He thinks that's why some stories are so poor. We don't know what the average operator knows about writing methods, but we'll venture the opinion that nine-tenths of the really good stuff that gets on the screen was written inside of two hours and that much that is poor might have taken as many days or weeks. The trained writer does not spend several days at the machine mulling over a story. He waits until he gets it well set in his mind and then—and not until then—he starts to put it on paper. Having the run of scenes clearly arranged in his mind, the author faces only the mechanical work of getting the idea on paper and this can be done well within two hours. The story that requires the labor of days at the machine is seldom good because the spontaneity is lost.

And just in passing, nine times out of ten the poor story is the fault of the producer rather than the writer.

Just Goes to Show.

Miss Marie T. Jacobs sends in a clipping from the Motion Picture Story Magazine advertising a Chicago correspondence school. The greater part of the advertisement is taken up with a list of plays preceded by "We have many successful graduates. Here are a few of their plays." Heading the list is "From Susie to Suzanne," by the Vitagraph. The Vitagraph did not release a play of that title, but did release "Susie to Suzanne" crediting Miss Jacobs with the authorship in their bulletin. Miss Jacobs writes:

> I was rather amused upon finding the enclosed "ad," in The Motion Picture Story Magazine. Heading this list of photoplays, supposedly written by the "graduates" of the Associated Motion Picture Schools, I find one for which I received a check from the Vitagraph Company. Interesting, isn't it, to find oneself a grad> uate of a ten lesson college of which one has never heard? Look over the list—perhaps you will find one of yours, and you can join "our" (?) Alumni.

> That photoplay bought a suit. I know, because I have it on now, and if one of the real grads. drew a check for it, I congratulate him. The ten lessons taught him to make money more easily than I can.

It is not surprising to learn that the schools resort to downright falsehood of this sort since all their advertising is a tissue of lies and half truths, but we are glad to learn that Miss Jacobs is bringing suit.
